Truro, N. S.—F. G. Spencer's theaters in Truro and Amherst, N. S., opened a new policy on Saturday, Jan. 5. This policy includes in the programs of the Princess, at Truro, and the Empress, at Amherst, the same vaudeville acts which are seen at the Opera House at St. John and the Strand at Halifax, the acts first coming to St. John, then going to Truro and Amherst, then to Halifax. This has been very popular so far.

The Empress, at Amherst, showed "Parentage" very successfully.

F. G. Spencer has a very fine line-up for the Lyric theater at St. John, where specials are now being shown. "Parentage" is running this week and is being very highly spoken of. Other pictures which have been contracted for are "The Whip," "The Barrier," "The Crisis," "Civilization" and others. Mr. Spencer has signed with the manager of the Superfeatures for practically all their big productions.

F. G. Spencer's outside theaters will be looked after by his manager, S. C. Hurley, as Mr. Spencer expects to spend the winter in Los Angeles with his family.

Some of the Gem Theater's Specials.

St. John, N. B.—The Gem theater has been giving its patrons some extra good programs lately. This last week two acts of vaudeville were to be seen there, and on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday the picture feature was Robert Warwick in "The Family Honor," a World-Brady feature.

Pictures Coming to Palace Theater.

Glace Bay, C. B.—Manager N. Nolan of the Russell theater, Glace Bay, has closed for the Paramount and Artcraft pictures, giving the service full time. He will also show Select pictures, the Famous Players serial "Who Is Number One?" and the Mack Sennett comedies.

Maritime Personal Notes.

New Glasgow, N. S.—N. W. Mason, who has been ill, is now able to be back in his accustomed place his friends will be glad to learn.

Sydney, C. B.—E. R. Lynn, of the Casino, has contracted for the Paramount and Artcraft service, booking the pictures with M. Bernstein.

St. John, N. B.—"Parentage" is booked for Halifax, Moncton, Woodstock, St. Stephen and Sydney, so it will be seen pretty well all over the territory.

Star Drops Special Child's Prices.

St. John, N. B.—The Star theater, beginning the first of the year, has decided to cut out its five-cent admission for children in the evening. There were such crowds of children who attended and it was sometimes difficult for the ticket keeper to judge the correct age so it was deemed advisable to do away with this price except for children under fourteen accompanied by their parents. The Star started "The Fatal Ring" last week, and has good results.

Minneapolis News Letter

By John L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

Lowell V. Calvert Appointed Lieutenant.

MINNEAPOLIS, MIN.—Tuesday, January 15, saw Lowell V. Calvert's departure for Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. Mr. Calvert, for several years manager of the New Garrick, Minneapolis' largest theater, has been appointed a lieutenant in the signal corps and he received his call to report for duty unexpectedly. Before leaving he received several presents from friends. Mr. Calvert is to be succeeded at the helm of the New Garrick by C. E. Hiller, who hails from an exhibitor's berth at Eau Claire, Wis., and who has a reputation for being wide awake and efficient.

J. R. Levy Leaves for New York.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Joseph R. Levy, for over a year manager of the local World exchange, and who was president of the recently organized Exchange Managers' Club, has left for New York, where he will be connected with the headquarters office of the Brady concern.

Hugh C. Andress Chosen to Manage Show.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Hugh C. Andress, former manager of the International exchange here and also connected with the Vitagraph, Bluebird and Triangle exchanges, has been selected to manage a show entitled "Uncle Sam's Kiddies," which is due for a transcontinental tour shortly to boost recruiting. Mr. Andress is now recovering from an operation for internal troubles and has been out of the hospital for about one week. Mr. Andress came here from Peoria, where he managed a large legitimate theater for several years.

Interesting Theater Notes.

St. Paul, Minn.—"The Whip," the Friedman Film Corporation's big spectacle, began a week's run at the New Garrick theater here Sunday, January 13, to a big business, according to Manager Theodore L. Hays. Mr. Hays is presenting this film with a special stage setting and light effects. His new musical director, William Nelson, previously at the Metropolitan, has arranged a special musical score to accompany the film showing.

St. Paul, Minn.—The Merriam Park Women's Club has taken an interest in moving pictures, and having received cooperation from Manager George Granstrom of the Park theater. The women are boosting certain special showings at his theater through the newspapers and mails, incidentally increasing Mr. Granstrom's patronage more than a little.

With Twin City Exchange Men.

Minneapolis, Minn.—A. S. Dowd, sales representative of the New York Universal offices, is in Fargo, N. D., closing up the affairs of the Universal branch exchange, the business of which is to be transacted through the Minneapolis office in the future.

M. E. Maxwell, formerly connected with the Universal, Fox, Vitagraph and Elliott-Sherman exchanges in Minneapolis, is now working for Max Weisfeldt at the Wholesome Film Company's office.

Manager Burke of the Westcott has arranged to show "Mother," George Loane Tucker's production, to exhibitors, at a downtown Minneapolis theater in the near future. "Mother" prints are to be ready for distribution throughout the Northwest before February 1.

Manager L. H. Coen of the Metro exchange, Minneapolis, displayed "Draft 258" to officers and soldiers at Fort Snelling Saturday, January 12. Mr. Coen has just returned from a business trip through Northern Minnesota.

Rocky Mountain Screen Club's New Officers

Harry T. Nolan Is Re-elected President—H. Bradley Fish Is Secretary—Five Vice Presidents Chosen and Regular Committees Are Appointed.

E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DENVER, COLO.—The annual election of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club resulted in the re-election of Harry T Nolan as president. This will be his third consecutive term and indicates his ability and popularity in the film game. Mr. Nolan is a partner of W. H. Swanson in the film supply business as well as in the operation of a string of theaters in Colorado, Wyoming and Utah. He was one of the chief organizers of the Screen Club and it is largely due to his untiring efforts that the organization has been an unqualified success.

Harry E. Huffman, owner of the Bid-a-Wee theater, and one of the city's leading exhibitors, was elected first vice-president. He had been secretary of the club since its organization and was President Nolan's chief aid. He declined re-election as secretary. H. Bradley Fish, of the Goldwyn sales force, was chosen secretary.

The other officers are: C. E. Marquand, of Longmont; James Proves, of Albuquerque, N. M.; C. H. Anderson, of Rawlins, Wyo., and R. J. Morrison, of Aspen, who are vice-presidents in order named.

The board of directors was elected as follows: H. T. Nolan, H. E. Huffman, A. E. Fair, Triangle; T. Y. Henry, Artcraft-Paramount; R. J. Churchill, Fox; Henry Goodridge, Thompson theater; Dan Lehrberger, Mascot theater, and H. Bradley Fish.

Committees for the year were named as follows: House—R. J. Churchill, chairman; Harry Goodridge, H. E. Huffman, A. E. Fair, T. Y. Henry and Dan Lehrberger. Legislation—H. T. Nolan, chairman; W. F Feley and Harry Goodridge. Publicity—H. Bradley Fish, chairman; H. E. Huffman and E. C. Day.

A special committee to have charge of the Screen Club ball also was named. It is composed of Homer Ellison, A. B. Megahan, Dan Lehrberger, H. B. Fish, R. J. Churchill, A. E. Fair, H. E. Huffman. H. T. Nolan, T. Y. Henry and Harry Goodridge.

The date of the ball, which has been held in abeyance pending definite word from some of the many screen stars who have promised to come to Denver now has been set for February 9. It is planned to make the affair bigger and better than any previous one and arrangements to this end are already going forward.

Rocky Mountain Operators Demand Increase.

Denver, Colo.—Exhibitors in the Rocky Mountain territory have received formal notice from the Operators' Union of a demand for higher wages. They seek to raise the general scale from $15 a week to $18 a week in neighborhood houses operated only in the evening and with a proportionate advance in the larger theaters where performances are given day and night. The operators also seek to set a price of $2 on their services for extra matinees or when they are forced to run through on Sundays, holidays or other special matinee days.

Three More Denver Film Men Enlist.

Denver, Colo.—The film fraternity of the Rocky Mountain region, which has given many of its members to the army and navy, added three more stars to its service flag during the past week. R. S. Nelson, manager of the General Film exchange, departed to join the U. S. Navy; David S. Williams, assistant manager of the Princess theater, enlisted in the Canadian forces, and O. Weg, road man for Artcraft-Paramount, answered a call to his former home, Seattle, where he has been mustered into the National Army through the draft.

Williams probably will be the first to see active warfare, as he has enlisted in the Canadian expeditionary forces and expects to be sent overseas at once. He left Denver January 12 to report at Canadian headquarters.

Nelson enlisted as an electrician in the navy and went from here to New Orleans. He was given a farewell dinner by the film men of the city on the eve of his departure.

General Film Moves to 1533 Welton St.

Denver, Colo.—The General Film is the latest firm to move into Denver's Film Row. The company has opened offices at 1533 Welton street, where Eugene Gerbase, acting manager since Nelson entered the military service, is in charge of affairs.

H. L. Knappen Takes Charge of Select.

Denver, Colo.—Two new exchange managers made their debut in Denver last week. H. L. Knappen, formerly manager of Pathe in this city, and later Western division manager for "Patria" for the same company, returned to take charge of the Select Picture exchange.

Hugh Rennie Heads Foursquare.

Denver, Colo.—Hugh Rennie, who had been in charge of the Select offices, relieved Ben Cohen as manager of the Foursquare exchange.

C. G. Epperson Managing Pathe.

Denver, Colo.—C. G. Epperson has become manager of the Denver Pathe exchange. He was booker and assistant manager for Pathe for years, but recently had been acting as manager of the short subject department of Artcraft-Paramount.

Personal Notes.

T. Y. Henry, manager of the Artcraft-Paramount exchange, is one of the busiest and most energetic of Denver exchange managers. He has just returned from a trip by auto through the northeastern part of the state, on which he visited Greeley, Fort Collins, Laramie, Sterling and other large cities, and now he is off on another jaunt to Steamboat Springs, Craig and other points in Northwestern Colorado. He never fails to come back with an arm load of new contracts. tracts.

J. W. Scott, one of the best known and most popular of Denver's younger film men, has resigned his position as road man for Mutual to accept the post of booker and assistant manager at Pathe. Scott has had wide experience in the film game, having at various times held every position in an exchange from shipping clerk to manager. He had charge of the Triangle offices in Salt Lake and Denver during the last year.

Word has been received in Denver to the effect that G. W. Whitney has resigned as manager of the Mutual office in Butte, Mont. Whitney was formerly a road man for Mutual out of the Denver office and is well known all over the territory.

Harry Lustig, Western division manager for Metro, with headquarters in Denver, returned Friday after an extensive trip over his territory. He reports business to be thriving everywhere.

Ward Scott, dean of Denver exchange managers, so known because of his long continuous service as head of the Mutual offices, has gone to Salt Lake on a business trip.

Blizzard Spoils Sunday for Many Theaters

Arctic Weather Hits Cincinnati—Shows Labor Under Difficulties and Have Scant Audiences—Cold Shuts Down Car Lines.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—The twenty-four hours which ended around six o'clock on Sunday, January 13, will probably pass into the records of local exhibitors as the worst in their history, and with good cause. All day Saturday the extreme cold which followed Friday's blizzard prevailed, breaking records for fifty years, with a temperature officially recorded at 16 degrees below zero, accompanied by an Arctic gale. This naturally prevented the usual Saturday night crowds from turning out and visiting the theaters, but Sunday was worse, and more of it in several respects. The cold was not so severe, although it was bad enough. But Sunday afternoon, the best period of the week for many exhibitors, especially in the suburbs, was rendered a time of mourning by the shutdown of street car service for the period from one to four in the afternoon, thus making it impossible for people to get downtown or to go anywhere not close to their homes. This one factor would probably have made the afternoon a profitless one for the exhibitors, but another was added to it. There was a shortage of both coal and gas. This forced many small suburban houses to close.

Manager Libson Looks Ahead and Keeps Moving.

Cincinnati, O.—That men who have big houses to run are not looking at the future with misgivings is indicated by the action of Manager I. Libson, who controls the Walnut, Strand and Family theaters, three of the largest and most prosperous in the downtown district of Cincinnati. Manager Libson, instead of putting off plans for improvements, is going calmly ahead with changes in the Walnut. Among these are new chairs and of a big, new electric sign. This latter was ordered before the Fuel Administration designated and enforced its "lightless nights," but it is going in just the same, and will be on the job as often as possible. Manager Libson declares that he sees no reason to believe that business will not continue to be good for moving picture houses, and that he feels it the better and more patriotic policy to keep things moving, especially in view of the undoubted prosperity of Cincinnati.

Manager Wilson Will Enter Association.

Cincinnati, O.—George Wilson, the new manager of the Standard Films Service, is an applicant for membership in the Chamber of Commerce, with the backing of some fellow exchange men, and will shortly become a full-fledged member of that organization. This is preliminary to his also becoming a member of the Associated Film Exchanges of the Chamber, which, as its name indicates, is affiliated with the big business body, and has as members only those exchange men who are also members of the Chamber.

Young Exhibitor Bueche Making Good.

Cincinnati, O.—Probably the youngest exhibitor in or near Cincinnati is Laurence Bueche, Jr., who has just passed his twenty-first birthday, and has made a pronounced success of a popular suburban house—the Queen Anne. So well has young Manager Bueche done with his theater that he has already started construction work on an airdome alongside the house to seat 1,500 people. He has ordered two new Power's "B" machines, two similar machines having been installed recently in the Queen Anne as well.

Fairbanks and Garden Drew Fine Houses.

Cincinnati, O.—During a recent week Manager Charles Weigel presented at the Alhambra, as his headline attraction, "Reaching for the Moon," featuring Fairbanks, and during the same week the latest Artcraft feature showing the popular star, "The Modern Musketeer," was shown by Manager Libson at the Walnut. Both houses did a handsome business in spite of extremely bad weather during the entire week.

The prosperous career of the Gifts, the big McMahan & Jackson house at Sixth and Vine, was continued uninterrupted and with even more lengthy strides by the recent brilliant Goldwyn "Thais," with Mary Garden.

Canton, O.—The Valentine theater at Canton showed a winning combination recently in the famous training-camp picture, "Who Leads the National Army?" released under the auspices of the National Military Training Camps Association, and the Douglas Fairbanks picture, "Reaching for the Moon."

Lake Shore Film & Supply vs. General Film.

Cincinnati, O.—One of the concluding phases of a fight against the General Film for alleged infraction of the anti-trust laws will be taken care of in Cincinnati, as the appeal from the decree of the United States District Court at Cleveland, refusing an injunction for the company against Jos. H. Sampliner, has been filed in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati. The film company asked for an injunction after Sampliner had filed suit against it at Cleveland for triple damages under the Sherman anti trust act, alleging that the Lake Shore Film & Supply Co., of Cleveland, which he represented, had sustained damages by the General Film Co.'s action.

The General asked for an injunction against the suit on the ground that the same issues had been disposed of in its favor in New York, where the Kalem company and others were brought into litigation on charges similar to those made against the General Film Co. The lower court, however, without going into the merits of the controversy, held that an injunction could not properly be issued to prevent litigation, and that the matters alleged as grounds for the injunction could be utilized as defenses to the suit.

Baltimore News Letter

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

Two More Benefits in Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, MD.—On Sunday, January 13, from 2 p. m. until 11 p. m., a continuous benefit performance was given at the Red Moon theater, 20 West Baltimore street, by George S. Benjamin, for the benefit of Company K, 313th Infantry, stationed at Camp Meade. Grace Cunard, in "Society's Driftwood," was the feature shown.

Benefit performances were given at the Strand and Parkway theaters at the matinees during the first three days of the week beginning January 14, by Bernard Depkin, Jr., supervising manager of the Parkway Theater company. The benefit performances were given for and under the auspices of the Bishop's Guild of Maryland, an institution of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the purpose of the benefit being to raise a fund to carry on the work of the guild.

Licenses Due to Be Paid.

Baltimore, Md.—According to a statement recently reported to have been made by Daniel J. Loden, Collector of Water, Rents and Licenses, it is necessary for the licenses for moving picture theaters to be procured during the first week in January and it is understood that several proprietors of the moving picture theaters are among the principal slackers who have not yet "coughed up." It is sincerely to be hoped that every Baltimore exhibitor will pay a visit to Mr. Loden's office before it becomes necessary for Mr. Loden to send a policeman after him.

Business Notes and Personals.

For the week of February 4, Manager L. A. De Hoff of the New theater, 210 West Lexington street, Baltimore, has booked "Within the Law" from J. J. Payette, the Vitagraph representative in this district.

J. Louis Rome, manager of the Broadway theater, 509 South Broadway, states that on New Year's day, January 1, he screened the Mutual production, "The Bride's Silence," with Gail Kane, and did such a tremendous business all day, including all matinees, that he broke three previous records.

Out-of-Town Visitor.

Pocomoke City, Md.—Last week, F. P. Brattan, manager and owner of the New Empire theater of this city, took a trip to Baltimore, which, it is understood, he enjoyed very much, having taken a stroll along film row and greeted his many friends.

Receiver Asked for Huntingdon Theater.

Baltimore, Md.—On Monday, January 7, an order was signed in the circuit court of Baltimore City, upon complaint of John R. Cochran, manager of the Huntington theater, 221-25 West Twenty-fifth street, requiring cause to be shown by January 17 why a receiver should not be appointed for the Huntingdon Building Company, which conducts the Huntingdon theater. The complainant, it is alleged, owns two shares of the common stock of the company, and it owes him $777, of which $108 is for salary and the balance for money loaned. It is also alleged that the company suspended business on October 13 and is insolvent.

Pipes Burst at Patterson Theater.

Baltimore, Md.—Due to the terrifically cold weather which has gripped the Eastern section of the United States for some days the pipes in many houses have been freezing and bursting, and this hard luck fell to the lot of the Patterson theater, 1202 Laurens street, on Sunday night, December 30. H. Baumgarten is manager of this theater.

Business Notes and Personals.

Baltimore, Md.—A special children's matinee was arranged by Frederick Clement Weber, manager of the Gertrude McCoy theater, 1563 North Fulton avenue, for New Year's day at 9 a. m. The feature for this performance was "Kidnapped."

Katherine Kavanaugh, who has won the second prize in the scenario contest which has been carried on by Photoplay Magazine by her photoplay entitled "When Betty Takes a Hand," and was awarded $500, is a Baltimorean. She is now on the staff of the Metro-Rolfe Picture Play Corporation as a reader and writer.

For the first time since the theater has been in existence, the Auditorium theater, on Howard street, under the supervision of Frederick C. Schanberger, inaugurated Keith vaudeville on December 24, and as a balance to the program the O. Henry stories and Pathe News Weekly are being used as the moving picture attractions.

The Thursday and Sunday lightless order has been in effect in the city of Baltimore for some days now, but so far as can be learned there has been no complaint about the theater owners. Those Baltimore boys are all a patriotic crowd.

Dayton News Letter

By Our Dayton Correspondent.

Mr. and Mrs. Woods Share Managerial Honors.

Dayton, O.—The "Woods" theater in Dayton was another that was included in the recent trip of the writer to the many neighborhood houses, and I find it to be equal to many of the smaller houses. One thing is sure, hospitality reigns supreme, for I was given a royal reception by the co-managers, Mr. and Mrs. Wood. The "Woods" is a cozy little theater, and, though a small house, all the seats were filled on the evening of my visit. Of one thing I was informed quickly by Mrs. Woods. Upon entering the theater I addressed C. E. Woods as the manager, and Mrs. Woods spoke up with the announcement that she shared with her husband in the responsibility of the management. When asked if the war tax hurt business to any great extent, Mr. Woods stated that it did, and that business at present was not as good as before the tax. "We notice a falling off in the five-cent admissions more than in the ten-cent admission, but these are decreasing also. Mr. and Mrs. Woods agreed with the World representative that his suggestion of a few months ago would help if carried out—namely, to close every suburban theater on Monday evenings, for many of the houses lose on this night. "If all of the managers would agree, I would," stated Mr. Woods. The "Woods" plays picked features from the Butterfly, Bluebird, Triangle, and Mutual programs.

Comique Theater Goes for City's Safety.

Dayton, O.—The writer visited Sam Thal at the Comique theater, this city, and in the course of a long conversation found that the house was to be closed by the Miami Conservancy District, which has purchased it in line with its plan for the prevention of another flood such as Dayton experienced some time ago. The Comique is at the Valley street end of the new North Dayton bridge, which will be opened soon, and up to this time has been doing very well. We are indeed sorry that Mr. Thal is to leave the business, for he is one of the best informed exhibitors in the city, and is always on the lookout for something new.

Four Minute Men Prepare Campaign.

Dayton, O.—A meeting of over one hundred Dayton business men, otherwise known as "Four Minute Men," was held last Friday in the Federal building. The meeting has been called by Chairman J. T. Nielsen of the Greater Dayton Association. These men will appear in Dayton's theaters in behalf of the Thrift Stamp movement, following plans almost the same as those used in the Liberty Loan bond sale. All the theaters of Dayton are to join in the movement.

"The Whip" for Three More Days.

Dayton, O.—Owing to enormous business on a week's run of "The Whip" at the Columbia theater, Manager Charles Gross informs the writer that the picture will be held over for three more days. The showing of "The Whip" in Dayton was the first in Ohio and the film was to have been sent to the Grand theater at Columbus, Ohio. The picture is to play at a fifty cent top price at the Grand in Columbus. The top price for the Dayton showing is 25 cents.

Dick Raynor Now Managing the Majestic.

Dayton, O.—The Majestic here is once more under the guiding hand of Dick Raynor, who, although he has been receiver, has not managed the house for several months. Homer Guy up till a few weeks ago managed the house, but he is at present in Florida. The Majestic is leased to Chas. Gross, who also owns the Columbia here.

Happenings in Kansas City Film Circles

New Gayiso Theater Expects to Run All Night Shows—Changes Among Exhibitors and Exchange Men—Personal Items and Business Notes.

By Kansas City News Service 205 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City, Mo.

Kansas City, Mo.—Kansas City is soon to have another all-night theater in the new Gayiso, formerly the Rialto, on Grand avenue south of 12th street. It has a seating capacity of about 275 and is one of Kansas City's smallest theaters. It is jointly owned by W. P. Cole and George Christman. The theater shows first run features and is using an orchestra. The price of admission is 15 cents, the management paying the war tax. The house has been redecorated and new seats will be installed in the near future. The theater will begin as the rival to the Idle Hour theater Jan. 12.

"Billy" Andlaur Changes Policy.

Kansas City, Mo.—A good picture in a splendid house managed by a modern "wide-awake" man made the week's run of Jan. 29 of "The Auction Block" at the New Center theater the most profitable one in the history of the house. Showing four times daily in a house of 1,200 seating capacity, the picture was seen by approximately 15,000 people, 5,000 of which attended on New Year's day. This house has in the past been a failure, but with the management in the hands of "Billy" Andlaur, it begins to look as though it will be a paying proposition. There has been a change in the policy of the house, first-run pictures for a week supplanting the daily change of program.

Foursquare Signs Up Three New Salesmen.

Kansas City, Mo.—The local office of the Hoffman Foursquare interests is evidently not worried by the recent bad reports from exhibitors throughout the Kansas City territory, if the addition of several new men is any indication of their worries, for within the last week this office has been augmented by the addition of Leo Levy, formerly of the St. Louis Blue Bird office; C. A. Maddux, formerly of the Kansas City Artcraft office, and E. J. Lappey, formerly with Select.

C. W. Potter Goes Over to Pathe.

Kansas City, Mo.—C. W. Potter, formerly a salesman for the Universal Film and Supply Company, has been placed on the Missouri territory of the local Pathe office. He succeeds Fred Stover, who has gone to Chicago, Ill., to work for the Fox company.

G. R. Sirwell Joins Select Sales Force

Kansas City, Mo.—Graham R. Sirwell, formerly Pathe representative in Oklahoma, has been added to the sales force of the local office of the Select Pictures.

Shubert Theater Shows "Intolerance."

Kansas City, Mo.—For the first time, Kansas City will see "Intolerance" at a picture theater here, when this picture is played at the Royal the week of Jan. 13. Several years ago, this picture was shown at the Shubert theater at prices ranging from 50 cents to $2. A 15-piece orchestra will furnish the music. Samuel Forstein, publicity manager of the theater, has sent out a circular letter to 1,000 patrons. The picture will be shown at the regular admission price of 15 cents.

L. C. Hamet Transferred to Des Moines.

Kansas City, Mo.—L. C. Hamet, booker at the Kansas City Feature Film, has been transferred to the Des Moines, Iowa, office of the company.

K. & E. Take Over Garden Theater.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Garden theater, 13th and McGee, which, in the past few years has been used on a number of occasion for moving pictures, has been taken over by Klaw & Erlanger, the New York producers. About $25,000 remodeling will be done and Kansas City will have another first-class theater.

Oklahoma Pathe Office Opens.

Kansas City, Mo.—M. Van Praag, booker at the local office of Pathe, has returned from Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, where he went to open the new office for Pathe in the India Temple building. His visit followed the new office's taking over part of the Kansas City territory. The territory of the Oklahoma City office will include all of Oklahoma, part of Arkansas, and part of Texas.

Mutual Shows "The Planter" to Trade.

Kansas City, Mo.—The local Mutual office recently held a trade showing which was attended by 20 local exhibitors, of Tyrone Power's "The Planter" at the new projection room of the Mutual exchange. The picture has also been screened for a number of out-of-town exhibitors, who came in to get acquainted with the new Mutual manager, Ira Mantzke.

With Exhibitors in Kansas.

Wichita, Kan.—The Peerless Theater company has increased its capital materially and a much finer building than was at first contemplated will be built. The new theater is to be managed by C. C. McCollister of the Stark theater of this city, and not by J. R. Cooper, as was at first announced. He will also continue as manager of the Star theater.

Kingman, Kan.—A. R. Talbert has severed his connection with the Star and Orpheum theaters and has been succeeded by Frank Mead. It is the intention of the new management to dispose of one or the other of the theaters for removal from the city to somewhere else. For the present, the Orpheum will remain closed and all shows will be held at the Star.

Coffeyville, Kan.—Earl Van Hyning, former owner of the Drexel theater here, who, a year ago, purchased the old Star theater at Independence, remodeled it and purchased a pipe organ and recently sold it to L. V. Wagner, manager of the Beldorf theater there. Van Hyning will engage in the picture show business in some other city.

Salina, Kan.—The front of the Strand theater, owned by Herbert Thatcher, has been remodeled.

Independence, Kan.—The Best theater here has been sold to N. V. Wagner by E. Van Hyning. Mr. Wagner owns the Beldorf theater here and a theater in Ottawa, Kan., also.

Junction City, Kan.—N. H. Gibbons has taken over the Columbia theater. He was formerly an exhibitor at Lawrence, Kan.

J. R. Stout on Goldwyn Staff.

Kansas City, Mo.—J. R. Stout, who recently has been managing the Triangle Salt Lake City branch, has entered the Kansas City Goldwyn office in the capacity of salesman.

Changes in Triangle Office Force.

Kansas City, Mo.—W. J. Tubitzki, formerly cashier for the Triangle office here, has been made bookkeeper at the local Mutual office. Another change in this office is the making of Earl McVoy booker. He was formerly shipping clerk in this office.

L. H. Chandler Has Been Very Sick.

Kansas City, Mo.—L. H. Chandler, salesman for the Kansas City Hoffman office, is seriously ill at Wichita, Kan., in hospital this week, suffering with pneumonia and small pox. His recovery is expected, however, as he has been rapidly improving within the last days.

Exhibitors Watch New Kentucky Legislature

Law Makers Meet Again and Film Men Are Keeping on the Alert—Screens Offered to Government for Messages to People—Notes of Trade.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

FRANKFORT, KY.—The Kentucky Legislature convened on Tuesday, Jan. 8, for the usual sixty days' session. The principal feature of the present session will be the prohibition question, but as usual a few drastic bills aimed at the moving picture exhibitor will probably be introduced. Several such bills were introduced at the 1916 session, and special theater tax bills were discussed at the special tax session last spring, but none of these bills has affected the industry to any extent other than one portion of an insurance bill which was aimed at better fire protection in moving picture theaters, and was indorsed by the more prominent exhibitors in the larger cities. However, the exhibitors are on the lookout and will be quick to get in the way of any bills which may affect them adversely.

The Patriotic Exhibitors Again Offer Screens.

Louisville, Ky.—Again the moving picture exhibitors are being called upon to do their patriotic duty in assisting the Government through donating the use of their screen for patriotic campaigns. One of these is to be an educational campaign in connection with the efforts of the federal revenue department to collect taxes from firms, individuals, etc., and will show individuals what is expected of them, how to secure report blanks and everything connected with this work.

The other campaign will be devoted to "war stamps" or thrift stamps.

The moving picture exhibitors have taken an active part in every campaign, including Red Cross, Liberty Loan, federal enlistment, the army draft and other matters. The exhibitors are more than willing to do their part in everything of this sort and show a patriotic desire to aid in winning the war.

Theater Owner Tabb Gives Week's Receipts to Red Cross.

Mt. Sterling, Ky.—William B. Small on January 7 assumed the management of the Tabb theater, the lease to Judy & Gay having been allowed to expire on January 1. I. F. Tabb, owner of the building, handled a special show for the one intervening week, the entire box-office receipts being donated to the Red Cross, Mr. Tabb putting up for all expenses. Every dime which came into the box-office was turned over to the Red Cross, the management stating that there was no graft or rakeoff in the offer, and that every dime spent represented a bandage for some Red Cross nurse to apply to an injured soldier in France.

Theaters That Play Only by the Weather.

Louisville, Ky.—Some of the small town exhibitors of Kentucky are playing every change of the weather, opening during clear weather when the snow is off and closing as soon as low temperatures and heavy going are experienced. The high cost of fuel, coupled with the light attendance during really bad weather, means a loss for every night that many of the small town houses open, and many of them have closed and expect to remain down until fair weather is again experienced. This winter has proven the worst on record in Kentucky, and has worked a hardship on many of the larger exhibitors.

About Kentucky Exhibitors.

Louisville, Ky.—J. G. Grimes, of Corydon, Ind., operator of the Dream theater, was in the city last week making arrangements for film service.

Scottsville, Ky.—J. H. Bryan, operator of the Dixie theater, has closed down, but expects to resume in the spring.

Winchester, Ky.—The Pastime theater is using city current until it can replace its gasoline engine and dynamo, wrecked in a recent fire which damaged the engine room to the extent of $1,700.

Cadiz, Ky.—Cadiz is now without a moving picture theater, the operator of the Cadiz theater having closed down after several months of steady losses.

Clinton, Ky.—W. H. Towers has obtained control of the Star theater, of Clinton, and has reopened the house, which was down during the greater part of December.

Pine Tree State Letter

By John P. Flanagan, Park View Ave., Bangor, Maine.

E. B. Tinker Will Handle New Prints.

BANGOR, ME.—Earle B. Tinker, who came to Bangor from the home office of the General Film to succeed H. P. Smith as manager of the local branch, has been appointed permanent manager.

The Bangor offices of this and other concerns have in the past handled chiefly used reels from other offices in larger centers. The Bangor office of the General will now release a number of reels weekly simultaneously with other exchanges of the company. Among these will be the Paralta plays, made by the W. W. Hodkinson corporation; the "Daughter of Uncle Sam," by the Jaxon Film. The "Judge Brown" two-reel comedies are also being handled at this branch, as is also an unusual novelty in the form of and under the name of "Physical Culture Screen Magazine."

L. W. Carroll, until recently manager of a theater in New Hampshire, has come to Bangor as assistant to Manager Tinker.

Miss Ether L. Durepo, of Limestone, Maine, has succeeded Miss Helen Bond as bookkeeper at the local branch of the General Film Company.

C. R. Osborn Visits Bangor.

Bangor, Me.—C. R. Osborn, general manager of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., was a visitor in Bangor last week. Mr. Osborn was until recently connected with the General Film office at Boston. It was his first trip to Maine, and while the weather was hovering around zero, Mr. Osborn expressed himself as pleased at the opportunity to meet a few of Maine's representative exhibitors, and stated that business for the "First National" was coming along well.

Strand Theater Opens Again.

Gardiner, Me.—E. J. Keller, the enterprising manager of the Strand theater, Gardiner, has reopened his house after its being closed for several months, owing to a bridge connecting it with the Main street having been carried out in a flood, thus cutting off means by which patrons might get to the theater. Mr. Keller was the first exhibitor in Maine to sign up for the new Paralta pictures.

Family Theater at Mapleton Closes.

Mapleton, Me.—The Family theater at Mapleton has been compelled to close, owing to the lack of patronage, induced by so many men having left for the National Army.

Many Maine Theaters Hard Hit.

Bangor, Me.—Theaters in Maine small towns are showing only one night a week during the winter. Smallpox, severe cold weather and snow storms have raised havoc in Maine. Some have been unable to secure coal to heat their theaters.

Smallpox and other contagious deseases forced the following theaters in Maine to close: Scenic, Limestone; Acme, Eastport; Eagle, Lubec; Opera House, Presque Isle; Imperial, Eastport; Lyric, Washburn.

George Simberis Redecorates the Nickel.

Bangor, Me.—The Nickel theater, George Simberis, manager, has played World Film releases for the past 18 months. George is also a strong booster for Pathe serials. He has in the past few months redecorated the interior of his theater and built an addition to his balcony so that it is one of the prettiest theaters in Maine.

J. H. Curran Welcomed As World Film Manager.

Bangor, Me.—Friends of John H. Curran, of this city, among the exhibitors of Maine—and they are legion—are welcoming him to this territory as the representative of the World Film. John began at the bottom here and has won promotion by industry, ability and cheerfulness. He was for several years connected with the Bangor exchange of the General Film, first as a booker and then as assistant manager.

World pictures, Brady-made, have been placed in the following Maine theaters in the past month: F. E. Mortimer's theater, South Portland; Bijou theater, Skowhegan; Martin's, Oakfield; Bijou, Houlton; Strand, Old Town; Wonderland, Keegan; Gem, Fort Kent; Majestic, Brownville Junction; Park, Fort Fairfield; Opera House, Presque Isle; Imperial, Eastport, and Colonial, Belfast.

World Film Pictures Made Hit.

Dexter, Me.—The Park theater was unable to accommodate the crowds when it played the "Rasputin, the Black Monk" World Film on New Year's day. During the severe cold weather Manager, C. H. Wyman closed two days a week.

City Hall Auditorium to Keep Open.

Lewiston, Me.—The Lewiston city council has turned a deaf ear to the recommendation of the businessmen's meeting that the city hall auditorium be closed to save fuel. This auditorium is at present used for roller polo and moving pictures, and to close it would mean putting a local exhibitor out of business. In the first place no one could see an urgent need of it and the plan was not practical. There is no way to shut off the heating system in the auditorium separate from the rest of the building, and to prevent freezing of the pipes, heat has to be maintained.

Alderman Saunders believes that the hall should be kept open day times for people and children who want to take advantage of a warm place to go. This permission has already been granted.

Des Moines News Letter

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

Des Moines Mutual Exchange Moves to Omaha.

DES MOINES, IA.—The Des Moines Mutual exchange has moved to Omaha and consolidated with the Omaha office. The new offices will be on the ground floor at 1306 Farnham street. Such a consolidation has been talked of between the two exchanges for many weeks, and first the rumor was that the Omaha office would be brought here, then that the local office would be abandoned. It is believed that the shipping facilities will be better in Omaha than in Des Moines.

R. S. Ballantyne, for many years manager of the local office, will be in charge in Omaha. Mr. Ballantyne took R. L. Myers, his assistant manager; Elizabeth Jordan, his bookkeeper, and E. J. Tilton and T. H. Vicker, his star salesmen, with him to the new office. All four have been long in the Mutual office, and have proven their worth. Out of the dozen and a half employees left without a position by the closing of the Des Moines office, all but one are already at work in new positions.

Every good wish of the Des Moines film men goes with Mr. Ballantyne and his associates in their new location.

Iowa Exhibitors Visit in City.

Des Moines, Ia.—Several visitors were reported as calling at the various exchanges during the past week. Among them were Dr. R. S. Shane, of the Opera House in Pilot Mound; G. H. Peterson, of the Grand theater in Story City; H. H. Russell, of the Opera House in Humboldt; Mrs. Hazel Burkheimer, of the Electric in Lorimer, and Mrs. Clara Hoffman, of the Lyric in Sac City.

J. K. Black, who recently took over the Majestic theater in Fort Dodge from H. J. Lego, was in town, and most enthusiastic over the picture game in general and his own success in particular.

J. H. Kock stopped off in Des Moines for a call at the Blank office on his way back from Omaha. Mr. Kock manages the Orpheum in Oskaloosa.

Audubon Theater Instals Orchestra.

Audubon, Ia.—The Preston Brothers, of the Crescent theater in Audubon, have installed a new $7,500 Wurlitzer Orchestra. The Prestons have been exhibiting in this town for a couple of years, and in that time have never missed a week of showing, from one to three days, of Pathe Service.

INTERESTING TEXAS JOTTINGS.

Dallas, Tex.—John Lanfranconi, lately road man for the George Kleine System, has been promoted to booker in the Dallas branch.

A. Jules Benedic, old-time Consolidated, Bluebird and Gold Rooster special salesman in New Orleans territory, has joined the General forces in Dallas.

A number of well-known Texas managers have visited Dallas exchanges during the last week, the majority of them reporting business to be good. H. D. Baker, who conducts theaters at Lockhart, Smithville, Gonzales and Bastrop, was one of these. Mr. Baker is an ardent supporter of the allied cause. He saw service under the British flag in the Boer war in South Africa, and goes on a cork limb as a result. He booked some new Vitagraph releases on his last trip.

A. W. Pleus, for some time branch manager for Vitagraph at New Orleans, a promotion from salesman out of Dallas, is now a sergeant in the National Army at Camp Beauregard, Alexandria, La.

R. M. Clark has been promoted to be booker at the Dallas Mutual branch, promoted from road salesman. Manager G. C. Reed declares everything is "pretty."

Filmdom Doings in Pittsburgh Last Week

More Film Men Join National Service—Changes Among Theaters and Distributing Offices—Interesting Personal and Business Notes.

By Pittsburgh News Service, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Two More Roland & Clark Managers Join.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Rowland & Clark theaters, Westinghouse building, Pittsburgh, has just placed two additional stars on its service flag, which now bears twelve in all. A. J. Coyle, manager of the Arsenal theater, Butler and Main streets, was called to report for duty at Newport News, Va., on January 15, where he is now taking a course of instruction in submarine building. George Vogenberger, who for the past three years managed the Belmar theater, Homewood avenue and Bennett street, has enlisted in the Aviation Corps and is awaiting a call to the colors. Mr. Coyle and Mr. Vogenberger were two of the most able and popular members of the Rowland & Clark managerial staff, and their places will be difficult to fill. They are followed by the well-wishes of a host of friends, including their associates, patrons and members of the moving picture trade. Mr. Coyle has been succeeded at the Arsenal theater by John Riley, formerly with the Rex Amusement company. No successor to Mr. Vogenberger has been named as yet.

Joseph Klein Leaves for New York.

Joseph Klein, for several years past sales manager of the Paramount-Artcraft at Pittsburgh, has resigned that position to join the Metro organization as sales manager for the New York City, Albany and Buffalo exchanges. Mr. Klein leaves here January 19 and will assume his new duties in New York on January 21. Being a New Yorker, Mr. Klein is glad to return to his home city, but regrets leaving his wide circle of friends in the Pittsburgh trade. The Paramount has not yet named his successor here.

Weiland Film Gets New Films.

The Weiland Film Company, 210 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, one of the oldest exchanges in the city, has announced that it will enter the field with a new stock of up-to-date pictures in the near future. With this end in view, the concern has disposed of practically its entire big stock of subjects to foreign buyers. Manager A. A. Weiland states that options have been secured on a number of important productions which will be released soon.

Allan Snitzer Now With Jewel.

Allan Snitzer, formerly assistant manager of the Universal exchange at Indianapolis, Ind., has joined the Pittsburgh Jewel staff. Mr. Snitzer is a film salesman of broad experience, and his acquisition by the Jewel exchange is considered a valuable one. He will look after the city trade, while Leonard Goldstein will cover the balance of the territory.

J. F. Hatch Exploiting "The Whip."

J. Frank Hatch, the well-known film promoter and exhibitor, has closed negotiations with the Hudson Feature Film whereby he will again operate in this territory from the office of that firm at 804 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh. Recently Mr. Hatch acquired the rights on the elaborate production "The Whip," for Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky, and he announces that work will be started in this territory in the near future.

Two Members of Staff Down With Pneumonia.

The staff of the Independent Film Exchange, local Universal office, Film Exchange building, Pittsburgh, has been crippled recently by the serious illness of two of its mainstays. C. A. Zipf, assistant manager, is suffering from pneumonia, and William Welsh, assistant booker, is confined to his home with the same ailment. Their associates and many friends hope for their speedy recovery.

Standard Film Service Opens Exchange.

A new film concern, known as the Standard Film Service, has opened an exchange at 210 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh. The Standard announces that it will handle the two-reel Mack-Sennett-Keystone comedies, which have been re-edited and re-titled, and is offering an entirely new line of paper. Initial business is reported quite active.

R. Pielow Will Cover Erie District for Pathe.

R. Pielow, a well-known film salesman, has joined the staff of the Pittsburgh Pathe exchange, and will have charge of the Northern Pennsylvania territory, with headquarters at Erie. Mr. Pielow was formerly connected with the General Film in this city, but for the past four months has traveled out of the Pathe exchange at Albany, N. Y. His return here is welcomed by a host of friends in the trade.

R. C. Baasa has been made booker at the local Pathe exchange, succeeding Samuel Wheeler. Mr. Baasa is a graduate of Pathe's new school for bookers in New York City.

Penn Film Service Will Handle Camp Pictures.

The Penn Film Service, 938 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, has taken over the films of the Cantonment Cinema Company, of this city, and will hereafter handle all bookings on these popular camp pictures. They are issued in two-reel lengths every other week, in conjunction with the publicity campaign by a local daily newspaper, and Manager Spero considers himself fortunate in acquiring these subjects for distribution in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

"The Birth of a Nation," which is being released to motion picture theaters on a rental basis by the Epoch Company, will be represented in the Western Pennsylvania territory by Leon Victor, a well-known figure in local film circles. Mr. Victor has been handling "Intolerance" here for McCarthy & McSween. He states that "The Birth of a Nation" will be booked with full cooperation with the exhibitors in the way of advertising, music and projection. At present Mr. Victor is making his headquarters at the Hotel Chatham, Pittsburgh.

The East Liberty Cameraphone theater, East Liberty, ran "Intolerance" the entire week of January 14 and, with an extensive advertising campaign, Manager H. B. Kester reports having handled a capacity business. "Intolerance" recently broke box-office records for a week's run at the Strand theater, Erie, Pa.

Lewistown, Pa.—The firm of Barney & Smith, operating the Temple theater, Lewistown, Pa., has been dissolved, Mr. Smith retiring from the business. Mr. Barney, who is now sole owner, states that the Temple will continue to offer high-class pictures exclusively.

Mannington, W. Va.—J. Modi, manager of the attractive Idle Hour theater, Mannington, West Va., recently visited the Select exchange in Pittsburgh, and booked the entire output of Select pictures.

Geo. Moore Goes to Mutual.

George Moore, an experienced film man, has been added to the traveling sales force of the Mutual exchange in Pittsburgh. Mr. Moore was formerly booker at the Independent exchange here.

Nashville Jubilant Over Great Factory

Expect New Government Plant at Hadley's Bend to Boost Business of Every Description—Many Thousands Will Be Brought Here.

By J. L. Ray, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—A great era of commercial and industrial activity, resulting in a general prosperity to this section, will result from the establishment of the Government's $60,000,000 munitions plant in Hadley's Bend, just outside of Nashville on the Cumberland River. Daniel Cauffiel, real estate agent of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Company, returned to Nashville last week and exercised $350,000 worth of real estate options on property in the bend, and has wired for the money to be placed in the American National Bank of this city.

While the du Pont company secretly laid plans for the establishment of this greatest of Southern industries at Hadley's Bend, and was just about ready to close up for the deal, the Government decided to take over the transaction and operate on a military basis. The work has been kept secret, and the announcement through the Nashville Banner a short time ago proved a thunderbolt from a clear sky. It will be the biggest thing that ever turned south of the Mason-Dixon line, and will be larger than all private powder mills in the country combined. It will be twice as large as the new Government plant to be erected at Charleston, W. Va., and will employ from 15,000 to 25,000 men, who, with their families, will bring approximately 45,000 people into this section. A total of 8,000 workmen will begin at once on construction.

The establishment of this great enterprise here will call for new business of every description. It will mean big things for Nashville moving picture people, and in the mushroom city which is destined to spring up around the powder mills there will be new stores, new theaters, and other necessary establishments. It will increase realty values, especially in the eastern section of the city, and will be a stimulus to the suburban moving picture houses on that side, as well as offer opportunity for new houses.

The slogan of the city, "Nashville Offers Opportunity," is to become a reality instead of a myth.

Children Barred from Chattanooga Theaters.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—At the request of the commanding officer of Fort Oglethorpe, orders have been issued by the city government to moving picture theater managers to refuse admittance of children to all shows, on account of the prevalence of numerous cases of cerebro spinal meningitis. Theater men are willing to do their part in blotting out the epidemic by complying with the orders given.

Nashville Princess Not Sold.

Nashville, Tenn.—Manager Harry Sudekum has denied the report in a New York trade journal that the Princes theater of Nashville had been taken over by the Marcus Loew interests. "There is utterly no ground for this assertion," Mr. Sudekum said, "and the report has caused me no end of annoyance. Although I have been commissioned captain in the quartermaster's department of the Fourth Tennessee regiment, I will not give up my theater holdings in this city, and how the rumor gained circulation is more than I can understand." At the time the story was running the rounds in Nashville, three newspaper reporters were in Sudekum's office from two Nashville dailies, and he made a joint statement to the crowd.

Mobile, Ala., Has Live 2,000-Seat House.

Mobile, Ala.—The Lyric theater, at Conti and Joachim streets, is doing a good business through the dull period of cold weather and war pocketbooks. Two thousand seats are priced at 5 and 10 cents, and four performances, starting at 1, 3, 7 and 9 P. M. Fox pictures are featured, augmented by comedies. Being a coast town, many foreigners live here, and these people invariably drop in where the comedy banner is displayed. Road shows are shown at intervals at $1.50 and $2 prices.

Buffalo News Letter

By Joseph McGuire, 152 N. Elmwood Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Storm Upsets Film Shipments in Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—A gale traveling about a mile and a half a minute visited Buffalo Saturday, January 12, and remained here forty-eight hours. During the storm shipments of film in and out of Buffalo were demoralized on account of lack of train service. Many of the exhibitors received their shows twenty-four hours late. Film sent c. o. d. was returned to the exchanges, with no checks accompanying the shipment. Of course the exchange had to pay the express charges both ways. During the gale very few ventured out to the shows so that business dropped far below average. A rising temperature on Monday was hailed with joy by the exhibitors.

Variety Forgot and Lost Its Current.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Variety moving picture theater, Buffalo, overlooked the "light order" of the fuel administrator on a recent evening and was deprived of its electric current. The Variety is now doing business as usual, but its electric sign is darkened during "the six lightless nights" each week.

How It Goes in a Cold Exchange Office.

Buffalo, N. Y.—On two sides of the private office of Manager Mack of the Mutual, Buffalo, is a partition extending six feet from the floor. The remaining eight feet of space to the ceiling has been closed in with "twenty-four sheets."

The isolation of this office from the rest of the exchange has been necessary on account of the heat shortage. The bookkeepers, telephone operator, booking staff, etc., have been moved to Mr. Mack's headquarters, where they are working cheerfully, while wearing arctics and sweaters.

"On account of the inflammable condition of film the fire underwriters will not permit the exchanges to use oil or gas heaters, and as coal is a rarity we are making the best of the situation," said Mr. Mack.

Star at Lockport Burns.

Lockport, N. Y.—The Star theater, Lockport, N. Y., caught fire from a defective furnace Saturday, January 12, and was burned to the ground. The blaze started before the audience had arrived for the evening performance. Several valuable reels were consumed in the fire.

Dallas' New Queen Theater to Reopen

Recently Burned Theater Owned by Hulsey to Be in Shape Again Early in February—Dallas Theaters Want Lights Back—Other Notes.

By Douglas Hawley, Times Herald, Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEX.—Hulsey's rejuvenated Queen theater is to open in Dallas early in February, after the expenditure of some $40,000 on improvements, following the fire which gutted the building last November. A new organ has been installed and interior appointments, rapidly nearing completion, are even handsomer than before. Manager John DeStefano is keen with anticipation against opening day. No selection has yet been made for the opening attraction.

Return Showing of "Modern Musketeer."

Fairbanks in "The Modern Musketeer" was brought back to the Old Mill for a three days' run on January 21-23 after four days, January 9-13, so popular did the film prove. Its first run was an object lession in titles.

Will Ask Administrator for Lights.

Dallas, Tex.—There is talk in Texas of an appeal in behalf of amusement places for a special ruling permitting lights on "lightless" Sunday nights. Its basis, if made, will be that Sunday is the big attendance day, and on that night none of the stores or other big users of electricity are burning their lights.

Pictures Now in the Majestic.

Waco, Tex.—Roy Dalton and A. L. Mitchell of Dallas have leased the new Majestic, Waco, built for a musical comedy house, and will run pictures. Messrs. Dalton and Mitchell have been highly successful with the Feature, Dallas, and the Waco house will be conducted along the same lines.

John Ezell Is Dallas Foursquare Manager.

Dallas, Tex.—With John Ezell as branch manager, the Foursquare Exchanges, Inc., has hung out a sign in Dallas. Jerome local appointment. Mr. Ezell is a native Texan and well known in the business. Abrams, general representative, made the Trice Sneed Gets "Redemption" in Four States.

Dallas, Tex.—Trice Sneed, veteran buggy and implement traveling man, has purchased four states on "Redemption," featuring Evelyn Nesbit Thaw. E. T. Peter, formerly with the Cressey interests here, is associated with Mr. Sneed. The picture recently did $2,800 on a week's run at the Hippodrome, Dallas.

Dallas Waiting to See Biggers' "Agony Column."

Dallas, Tex.—Texas folks are looking forward to the coming of the Vitagraph "The Agony Column," built from Earl Derr Biggers' story, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. Biggers formerly worked on a Houston paper. He knows Texas like a book, and Texas people know him. His story of "Spindletop," the famous Beaumont oil hill, showed his acquaintanceship with the state. And, by the way, J. C. Clemmons, of the Tivoli theater, Beaumont, was in Dallas recently and booked "The Agony Column" on the strength of the Spindletop story.

Lots of Snow Will Help Crop.

Dallas, Tex.—Bob Moore, of the Moore theater, Vernon, is authority for the statement that snow ten feet deep in Texas is a fact. It drifted that deep between Vernon and Amarillo and blocked all trains.

"But it's sure helping the crops," he said. Mr. Moore, in addition to being a film house manager, is also manager for the great Waggoner cattle ranches in his country. George R. Goergens, of Washington, has taken much footage recently on West Texas ranches, showing conditions.

San Francisco Jottings.

Miss Norma Lichtenstein, daughter of I. H. Lichtenstein, of the Western Poster Company, was married at the Palace hotel on January 3d to Albert P. Reiss of Chicago.

The Atlas Educational Film Company has sent a DeVry projection outfit to Japan, and has disposed of ten of these within two weeks for use in homes and industrial concerns.

L. T. Paull, formerly of the Lyceum theater, Bakersfield, Cal., is now operating a theater for Uncle Sam at Fort McDowell, San Francisco.

Charles Rosenthal, representing the M. & R. Feature Film exchange, and E. M. Asher, of the T. & D. Film exchange, are both making a business trip to Los Angeles.

Sam Sax, of Portland, Ore., has purchased the Nixon theater on Polk street.

Vivian Preston, who formerly conducted the Ocean View theater, is now with the Progressive Motion Picture Company, in the stock department.

The Fairmont Theater company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $75,000 by George Appell, A. S. Newburgh, S. Gordon and H. A. Levinson.

A large marquis is being added to the theater at 644 Broadway, conducted by Mrs. Nellie Michaels.

J. H. Hart recently returned from a four weeks' trip through the northern territory for the California Film exchange.

Pietro Marino has been made leader of the new orchestra at the Strand theater.

Fred Kley, a director from Los Angeles, was a visitor here the first of the year.

A. L. Aron recently left for Portland and the Northwest with the feature production "On the Italian Battle Front."

Notes of the Film Trade in San Francisco

Floyd St. John Becomes Manager of the World Film Exchange—Sol Lesser Operated on for Appendicitis—Interesting Personals and Notes.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—A new branch manager for the World Film Corporation has been chosen in the person of Floyd St. John, and E. C. Jensen, the western division manager, who has been attending to the duties of this position for several weeks, will now be relieved of these. Mr. St. John is a newcomer in the film exchange business, but has had a wide business training and has taken hold of his new work with much enthusiasm. He finds World film productions well placed here and well liked, it being the proud record of this concern that it has never failed to secure a first run at a downtown house for any of its releases.

Sol L. Lesser in Hospital.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sol L. Lesser, head of the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., who recently passed through a siege of sickness at New York, is now in a local hospital, where an operation for appendicitis has been performed. This has been successful, and at the present writing he is recovering in splendid shape.

Business Brisk with Breck Co.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Breck Photoplay Supply Co. is making the best of its old location on Turk street, and is establishing a record for machine sales that will be difficult to surpass, even when it moves to its new home on Golden Gate avenue.

The attention of exhibitors is called to our State Right list, commencing on page 649 of this issue.

Triangle President Visits San Francisco.

San Francisco, Cal.—H. E. Aitken, president of the Triangle, arrived here recently from Los Angeles to look over the local field and confer with manager Ben. F. Simpson.

Export Censors Are Busy.

San Francisco, Cal.—The extent of the film export business through this port has become apparent since the regulations went into effect that all film sent out of the country would have to be examined by customs officials. One lot of 45,000 feet was viewed one day recently, relays of officials being needed. Some of the films intended for use in Mexico are being sent to border towns to be inspected.

All Star Buys Hart Pictures.

San Francisco, Cal.—The All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., has purchased three William S. Hart productions, these being the one formerly known as "The Bargain," "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska." Arrangements have been made to show all of these at the Casino theater. E. Gainsborg is here in the interests of the Foursquare pictures, and is making his headquarters at the offices of the All Star. The first three releases have already been booked at the Portola and Casino theaters.

De Lorme Forms New Connection.

San Francisco, Cal.—C. V. De Lorme, formerly manager of two houses of the Turner & Dahnken circuit, and recently with the Jewel theater of this city, has been made assistant to general manager H. L. Beach, of the Beach-Krahn Amusement Co., and is stationed at the Chimes theater, the latest addition to the chain of houses conducted by this concern. Mr. De Lorme has had a wide experience in the show business, having managed vaudeville, stock and moving picture houses.

Amusement Companies Incorporated.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Fresno Hippodrome Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $40,000 by H. Zannettin, E. Soderstrand, D. Greenan and E. E. Smith. The Sacramento Hippodrome Company has been incorporated for a like sum by H. Zannettin, D. Greenan, E. E. Smith and D. B. Levin.

New Piedmont Theater Sold.

Oakland, Cal.—D. C. Rosebrook, who opened the New Piedmont theater a few months ago, has sold this house to J. Hellman and C. E. Burns.

Artistic Treat at California Theater.

San Francisco, Cal.—The policy of the California theater of promoting the musical interests of the community have met with such a mark of approval that a still further development along this line has been decided upon. A feature of the program that ushered in the New Year was the engagement of Anita Peters Wright's rhythmic dancers, fresh from the Orpheum circuit. The beautiful stage draperies and lighting effects of the new theater were used to excellent advantage in putting on this delightful act.

Northern California Notes.

Red Bluff, Cal.—The Ajax theater, on Walnut street, has been destroyed by fire, with a loss of about $8,000.

Richmond, Cal.—According to press announcements preliminary work has been commenced on a theater at Ninth street and Macdonald avenue by the Turner & Dahnken circuit.

Films to Fill Dark Time at Spokane Lyric

J. W. Allender Arranges to Show Special Feature Pictures Every Now and Then at Big Legitimate House—Special Stage Settings Promised.

By S. Clark Patchin, E 1811 Eleventh Ave., Spokane, Wash.

SPOKANE WASH.—Tuesday, Jan. 8, ushered in a new regime at the Auditorium theater, when J. W. Allender, manager of the Lyric theater, took over the Auditorium's "dark" time and will present moving pictures. He will enjoy the co-operation of Manager Charles W. York in the new venture.

Within the last year the Auditorium has been equipped with a new reinforced concrete operators' booth and the most approved projecting machines have been installed. The booth in all its appointments makes possible the presentation of the big film spectacles in the most modern manner and Manager Allender declares the Auditorium projection will be equal to any in the city.

Mr. Allender has secured a six-piece orchestra, under the direction of Charles Whitehead, and it will play the musical scores of all the pictures offered. Manager York will furnish a stage setting in the spirit and atmosphere of the picture that is being shown on the screen. Girl ushers in uniform will be used and their frocks will be changed from time to time to harmonize with the theme of the picture. Reserved seats will be the rule and only two performances will be offered daily, matinee and night.

The first picture to be shown under the new regime was "The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras" and "With the Stars and Stripes in France." These pictures proved a great success for Mr. Allender. By arrangement with the owners of the pictures part of the money earned by the pictures goes to allied relief work.

Following the opening picture Manager Allender will present Tyrone Power in "The Planter," the week of January 20. He is also negotiating for several large productions on the open market. His policy will be to offer nothing but exceptional pictures at the Auditorium.

Liberty Theater Adopts One-Price Schedule.

Spokane, Wash.—Manager Sam W. B. Cohn has been fixing fences for 1918 at the Liberty theater. Hereafter the one-price system will prevail on all pictures shown at that house. Three or four reissues are on the boards, but after their showing the Liberty will offer no more reissues or return engagement unless by public demand.

The Liberty, however, will continue to show the Mack-Sennett-Paramount comedies, and the Paramount and Arcraft productions will be its staples. Manager Cohn has secured the exclusive exhibitions rights on all releases starring Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Elsie Ferguson, Billie Burke, Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton and George M. Cohan. He will also present pictures offered on the state rights basis from time to time.

Twenty cents for adults and 10 cents for children will be the admission policy to be strictly adhered to.

Pendleton Round-Up, 1917, Made by Pathe.

Spokane, Wash.—In the past year, 1917, for the first time, moving pictures of the Pendleton Round-Up were made by one of the old established producing companies and a Pathe release of the event was shown to capacity houses at the Liberty theater the last half of New Year's week. The Liberty presented a program of short features with this picture, including a Mack Sennett comedy, the Pathe news and a scenic film.

The Pendleton feature is considered especially attractive this year as a professional production.

Portland Exhibiting Conditions to Change

Street Car Lines in Oregon City Raise Fares and Suburban Exhibitors Expect to Reap Harvest—People Are Refusing to Use Lines to Go Downtown.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Exhibiting conditions in Portland are due for the biggest upheaval that has taken place in months. The relations between the suburban theater and the downtown house will be entirely changed, according to prediction by prominent exhibitors.

The reason is that a short time ago the state public service commission granted to the Portland Railway Light and Power Company, the Rose City's only traction concern, the right to raise the street-car fare in Portland to six cents.

The public is of course incensed at the commission's ruling. People are talking about it at all meeting places and vowing to boycott the street cars as much as possible. This means that there will be an acceleration of business in the suburban community centers, and the suburban exhibitors are not asleep on the job. On the other hand, they are preparing to grab the business and keep it.

Said W. E. Tebbetts, proprietor of the Alhambra theater, commenting on the situation: "People are talking, even in the theaters, about the raise in the street car fare to six cents, and they are pledging themselves to patronize the communities centers wherever possible. I predict a big gain in suburban business in Portland, and we are going to give our patrons such good shows that they will not care about going downtown."

The downtown men are not greatly worried about the condition, although it is causing considerable comment. With the present high film rentals with which exchanges have burdened the exhibitors there will soon be some worry, however, if the business falls off.

Globe Theater to the Front.

Portland, Ore.—The Globe theater, considered for some months by film men somewhat of a dead one in the exhibition game, is coming to the front again, according to all reports. The house is now directly in charge of Jack O'Neill, the owner of the building, and he is spreading himself to put it over.

In the palmy days of motion picture exhibition in Portland the Globe was one of the big houses of the town. It is located a little uptown, however, for transient business, and changes in managers and policies caused it to lose some of its prestige. However, manager-owner O'Neill has hit upon the policy of putting in consistently good pictures, and for the past five weeks the Globe's business has been excellent.

Mutual Breaks Record for Business.

Portland, Ore.—George Jackson, manager of the Portland Mutual office, has just completed an inventory of the business for the past twelve months and reports that all other annual business records have been shattered. The reason, he said, is that the exhibitors in the territory are all doing business. But Mr. Jackson is a modest young man and leaves it to somebody else to place the credit. He comes in for a big share of it. The Portland Mutual office has adopted a plan of cooperation with exhibitors that has been a winner.

Finley Animal Pictures for Release.

Portland, Ore.—Exhibitors in Portland and Oregon are looking forward to the release of the William L. Finley pictures of animal life that will soon be made through Universal exchanges. Mr. Finley's films were taken in Oregon, and wherever they have been exhibited at private showings they have caused much comment. Because of the popularity of Mr. Finley and his pictures in Oregon the Film Supply Company of Oregon, which is handling the product here, is making a special effort to see that they get over big.

Dean Collins, publicity expert for Universal, is handling the local campaign.

O. R. Hanson Doing Well.

Portland, Ore.—Exhibitors in this territory who remember the good service they used to get from O. R. Hanson, booker at the Mutual exchange, will welcome the news that this young man is rapidly forging ahead in the film game and is now in New York City in the capacity of efficiency booker for the entire system of exchanges.

Mike Rosenberg Comes North.

Portland, Ore.—Mike Rosenberg, of the De Luxe Feature Film, is back in the territory after a trip to San Francisco, where he signed up additional features for release through his company. Among the pictures that the De Luxe will handle are the Hart reissues. Louie Rosenberg, who is road man for the company, was a recent visitor in Portland preparatory to making his first tour to place the new pictures.

Holds Trade Showing.

Portland, Ore.—C. E. Waite, manager of the General Film Company's exchange, acted as host to about forty exhibitors and their wives and friends at trade showing of the Paralta pictures at the Sunset theater. "Madam Who" was the attraction. Mr. Waite reports the exhibitors to have received the presentation enthusiastically.

L. A. Todd, manager of General's Seattle office, passed through Portland en route to San Francisco to attend the conference of the west coast managers. He was joined in the trip by Mr. Waite.

Churches After Pictures.

Portland, Ore.—W. A. Stone, of the Service Film Company, reports that churches as exhibitors of moving pictures are rapidly coming to the front. Last week he put eight new ones on his list, and is having a hard time to see that they all get the kind of service they require.

Will Handle City Only.

Portland, Ore.—E. R. Simpson, formerly with Goldwyn, who was reported last week as going to work for Pathe, will be the exclusive city representative for this concern. H. O. Strom will handle the outlying territory. Pathe is the first concern to employ an exclusive city man here, and it is hoped that he will head a distribution office soon.

Goldendale Theater Sold.

Goldendale, Wash.—J. B. Leadbetter has sold the Star theater here. The purchaser is J. E. Clark, formerly a druggist at Yoncalla, Ore., who is a newcomer in the business. One of Mr. Clark's first acts was to cut the admission price from 10 and 20 cents to 5 and 15. The advisability of this procedure is doubted.

Advantages of Nearby Exchanges.

Portland, Ore.—G. A. McGill, of Kiggins and McGill, theater magnates over in Vancouver, Washington, believes in doing business as close to home as possible, and is practicing what he preaches. He says the Portland exchanges have been so accommodating to him that he is going to do business with Portland in preference to Seattle every time he has a chance. When shows booked in Seattle have been late in arriving or have failed to come at all he has been able to get shows at the Portland offices which have saved the day. Therefore he is thankful.

Speaking of supplying Seattle slip-ups, the Mutual exchange supplied five shows for Portland use one Sunday afternoon to take the place of Seattle shipments which failed to arrive. This is merely illustrative of the conditions with which Portland exhibitors must contend by reason of certain exchanges moving to the Sound City.

One exhibitor we know, living in a prosperous town adjacent to Portland, missed his shows from Seattle three times in one week and was compelled to open his matinees with a different picture than the one billed, to take down his paper each time, and then when the show did finally put in an appearance, four or five hours late, change his lobby back again. It is obvious that he lost money by the conditions. He has a high-powered automobile, and after exhausting his patience making long distance phone calls he hurried to Portland to meet the express train and save further hours of delay.

The train service between Portland and Seattle was put back to somewhere near normal a few days ago, and some of the difficulty will perhaps be corrected, but the fact that certain film companies moved their exchanges to Seattle will never be condoned.

Parker Back from 'Frisco.

Portland, Ore.—J. J. Parker, manager of the Majestic, is back in Portland again after a brief sojourn in San Francisco, where he was busy gathering a lot of new exhibiting ideas. The Majestic's one-a-week policy, which has been in effect since September, has proven very satisfactory, says manager Parker, and after comparing Portland's business with that in San Francisco he is entirely satisfied with the way the Majestic has been doing.

New Organ for People's.

Portland, Ore.—The People's theater will have a new organ; a real one this time, with lots of reeds and everything that a first-class organ should have. It is a Robert Morton instrument, and is being built and installed by the American Fotoplayer Company.

Snappy Shots from the Northwest.

Helena, Mont.—The new Marlow theater will open in the middle of February under the management of C. E. Eckhardt, formerly of Butte.

Kelso, Wash.—It is reported that C. G. Vaughn, owner of the Vogue theater, has leased a building here, which he will convert into a theater.

Nampa, Idaho.—A. E. Jones has purchased the Unique theater from Mrs. S. H. Howell.

Wolf Point, Mont.—George Sieverson will build a new picture theater here this spring.

Pocatello, Idaho.—N. B. Crossman has opened the American theater after having remodeled the house.

White Salmon, Wash.—John Lauderback has purchased the Leo theater from William Rudolph.

Portland, Ore.—M. Slaback, owner of the Mutual theater, has opened the Peninsula theater also. In this latter enterprise he is associated with R. Beeson.

Portland, Ore.—The Brooklyn theater, formerly operated by W. E. Estes, and closed for some time, has been reopened by Carl Schwartzbach.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compete with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

MORE SPOKANE NEWS.

Hippodrome Crowded to Watch Year Out.

Spokane, Wash.—Manager Walter C. Smith of the Hippodrome theater, gave a New Year's Eve "matinee" December 31, which started at 11.30 p. m. The theater was unable to handle the crowds. Reserved seats were set aside and went on sale early in the morning.

Spokane Pathe Exchange Shows Growth

Spokane, Wash.—Resulting from having his territory broadened since the reorganization of the Pathe when Fred C. Quimby was made general manager, Peter L. Carroll, Pathe branch manager, with offices at S 12 Washington street, Spokane, Wash., has enlarged his quarters and had his forces increased.

The company has made rapid strides in this territory since opening its offices here in March, 1914, with Mr. Carroll being in charge and alone at first. His territory now includes all of eastern Washington, all of northern Idaho, the northeastern section of Oregon and all of Montana. He now has twelve people in the offices and two men on the road, aside from covering part of the territory himself.

The traveling representatives for the branch are J. F. Bush and A. H. Cleland. William Lamont is booker, Philip Smith, formerly in the Kansas City office, is cashier; Hal Bennett is shipping clerk, Lottie Dittmore is head stenographer and Marie Harm is also employed as a stenographer.

Additional to the above Mr. Carroll has two inspection girls and a poster girl in the office aside from other help.

Mr. Carroll first started in this territory for the Pathe people March 17, 1914, and shortly afterward was given a booker to remain in the office. Both the Butte, Mont., and the Portland, Ore., offices were closed recently, and Mr. Carroll was given all of the Butte territory and all of the Portland territory east of the Cascade Mountains in Washington and the northeastern section of Oregon.

Lieut. Wm. Cutts Visits in Spokane.

Spokane, Wash.—Wearing the olive drab of Uncle Sam's fighting forces and the single silver shoulder bar of a first lieutenant, William Cutts, builder and first manager of the Liberty theater, renewed old acquaintances in Spokane Wednesday, Jan. 2.

Since leaving Spokane, in 1915, Lieutenant Cutts has been engaged in theatrical enterprices in Montana, was a member of the state legislature and an unsuccessful contender for the seat in Congress won by Miss Jeannette Rankin.

C. W. Bunn Visits Spokane Pathe.

Spokane, Wash.—C. W. Bunn, of Salt Lake City, special sales representative of the Pathe exchange for the northwest, was a visitor in the city December 31. He was in conference with P. L. Carroll, branch manager here.

SEATTLE NOTES.

Exchange Notes Around Seattle.

Butte, Mont.—The Mutual office in Butte has been closed, this territory coming under the direct supervision of the Seattle office.

Seattle, Wash.—Virgil Adams, booker at the Mutual office, has been very seriously ill with pneumonia in a hospital here, but is now beginning to recover.

Henry Pierson has come out from New York to handle the Fox Production, "Cleopatra," as a road show in the Northwest territory. Mr. Pierson is familiar with the territory from his former experience in it with musical comedies. P. S. Maddox will be Mr. Pierson's advance agent.

E. R. Simpson has left the Seattle Goldwyn office to become the Pathe representative in Portland.

Solving Problems of a Neighborhood House

Careful Planning for Patrons' Needs Turns Theater in Seattle's Best Residence Section from Failure to a Paying Investment.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—J. A. Crandall and G. S. Justi have been operating the Bungalow, a neighborhood theater, in the Capital Hill district of Seattle, for nearly a year now. Previous to this the theater had changed hands often, and its business had been desultory. By a study of the conditions prevailing in the neighborhood and analyzing these with reference to the preferences of their patrons the managers of the Bungalow have made their house a success.

The first condition to be considered was that Capital Hill is one of the highest class residence districts in the city, therefore only the best pictures would draw the business. On the other hand, Mr. Justi says that they have found it unwise to bring up from downtown a picture that has just had a phenomenal run in one of the large theaters because all his patrons will have seen it.

"Most of the people that our house draws from own automobiles," said this manager, "and those who don't can get downtown very quickly on the street cars. All the movie fans among them see the best pictures shown at the big downtown theaters, and when we have tried bringing the big successes directly up here we have invariably found them to be a 'frost.' Our best drawing cards are those really good productions that have not been shown downtown at all, such as the picture we are now showing, Metro's 'Romeo and Juliet.'"

Although Seattle is well supplied with motion picture theaters there are not enough big downtown houses to show all the good features produced, and the managers of the Bungalow find little difficulty in getting splendid productions that have never appeared in the city.

Changing the Kind of Pictures Often.

Another conclusion that these exhibitors have worked out from their experience is that in a neighborhood house it is much better to change the service every few months. A neighborhood house depends upon the same people month after month for their regular patronage, and those same people finally tire of seeing the same faces in different roles; they want to see new types and different acting. With the downtown theaters it is different, because the patronage is more transient. This is the way Mr. Justi explains this liking of his patrons for changes in service.

Before the admission tax was assessed the prices at the Bungalow were 10 cents and 5 cents. On November 1 the admission was raised to 15 cents for adults and 10 cents for children. Mr. Justi declares that instead of cutting down the gross receipts, as so many neighborhood houses have complained, this has increased profits. There may be a few less in attendance, he says, but the extra 3 cents more than makes up the deficit.

Film Board of Trade Discusses Rerouting.

Seattle, Wash.—At the weekly meeting of the Northwest Film Board of Trade on January 2 the chief subject of discussion was the rerouting of films so they might reach the exhibitors in the northern and eastern part of the territory in time for their shows. Two or three special cases also were considered by the board.

Casady & McKee Doing Work at Camp Lewis.

American Lake, Wash.—By request of Brigadier-General Foltz, commander at Camp Lewis, the National Army cantonment, the Casady & McKee Amusement Co. are installing temporary motion picture shows in the regimental recreation halls at Camp Lewis pending the completion of the amusement zone. C. M. Thall, general manager for Casady & McKee, who are a Tacoma firm, is looking after the work of installation. The amusement company now have plans ready for a large building, to be erected in the zone, to house their own picture show as soon as permission is given them to begin building.

N. F. Haas Takes Management of Empire Theater.

Anacortes, Wash.—Norvin F. Haas, former film man and theater manager of Seattle, has taken over the management of the Northwest Amusement Company, which operates the Empire theater in this town and several others in the vicinity.

Picture Houses in Alaska Deserted.

Seattle, Wash.—W. H. Code, who has come down from Alaska to spend the winter in Seattle, reports that the motion picture business, from Anchorage on down the southeastern coast of Alaska is suffering greatly from the exodus of all miners and construction men to Seattle to work in the shipyards.

"Even the Government railroad, under construction from central Alaska to the coast, is being deserted," said Mr. Code. "Men won't work for $4 a day and stand the cold and inconveniences of central Alaska when they can get $6 a day in this modern city, with its mild climate. All business is suffering as a consequence, and the motion picture business is coming in for its share."

Film Board of Trade Meetings.

Seattle, Wash.—The Northwest Film Board of Trade held its regular weekly meeting on January 8. It was found necessary to cut the meeting rather short, so a special star chamber session was called for Thursday, January 10.

J. Cheanur Buys Back Star Theater.

Port Angeles, Wash.—J. Cheanur, who sold the Star theater to O. Stahl last March, has just bought it back. Mr. Cheanur will take possession the first of February. He announces that no changes will be made except in service. Mr. Cheanur is head of a company that intends to build a new 500 capacity house in Port Angeles this year. Vaudeville and pictures will be shown in this theater.

Two Child Players Score Successes.

Seattle, Wash.—During the latter part of last week the Coliseum played "Pants," the Little Mary McAllister picture, as a sub-feature. In the minds of the audiences, however, it took the position of feature, judging by the enthusiastic comment it occasioned.

Another production in which a very youthful actress scored a big hit in Seattle recently was "The Little Patriot," featuring Baby Marie Osborne, at the Palace Hip last week. Although this is a vaudeville house, in which pictures are supposed to be shown only as fillers, the picture part of this program caused more comment than the vaudeville acts.

New Theaters and Changes.

Asotin, Wash.—A new motion picture theater is being built here by Reed & Norton. A. S. Norton, of this firm, formerly owned the Pastime theater of Nesperce, Idaho.

Grant, Idaho.—John McGowan has bought the old Princess theater, redecorated it and named it the Garfield.

Spokane, Wash.—Spokane has just acquired its second producing company. The new company is called the Titian Motion Picture Company. It will have its studio in the city.

Mich. Theaters Close Monday and Tuesday

Observe Order of the Michigan State Fuel Administrator and Keep Two Dark Dates —Paying the Footage Tax and Evading It.

By Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—State Fuel Administrator's order is obeyed by Michigan theaters and they are closed down entirely on Monday and Tuesday. There is not much new to report on the film tax situation in Detroit. While quite a number are paying the film tax, they declare that it is only to one or two of the companies for special reasons. Many exhibitors state that the film exchanges have reduced the rental service more than enough to make up for the film tax, so that if such is the case the distributors or producers are really worse off with the film tax than they were before they put it on the rentals.

Universal and Paramount Exchanges Move.

Detroit, Mich.—Henry Fried, division manager at Detroit for the Universal, announces the removal of its offices and exchange to the fourth floor of the new film building. The Paramount and Artcraft exchanges have also moved to the new film building, which means that all of the exchanges who contracted for space there are now located in their permanent quarters. The only concerns not in the film building are the Harry I. Garson Productions, the Triangle, Casino Feature Film Co., and the Metro and Madison Film Companies.

Eugene Hamburg on Fixing Up Theaters.

Detroit, Mich.—Eugene Hamburg, of the Hamburg Co., frame and lobby display manufacturers of Chicago, is in Detroit for a few weeks lining up some excellent business in connection with his dealer, M. S. Bailey. "Now is really the time when the exhibitor should try to make his theater attractive inasmuch as business is a trifle off," he said. "It's really surprising the amount of improvement that most theaters can stand in the way of new seats, new carpets, another coat of paint, a little decorating here and there, better equipment in the projection department, to say nothing of fixing up the lobby with attractive posters and lobby frames for displaying posters, advertising matter and photos. A few hundred dollars spent to fix up a theater will more than pay for itself in increased receipts at the box office. The trouble is to make the exhibitor see it that way."

New Lincoln Square Ready Easter.

Detroit, Mich.—S. J. Stoughton, of Chicago, former district manager for Paramount in the Middle West, and for a while in charge of the Chicago office, is the prime factor in the Lincoln Square Amusement Co., which has leased the theater being erected at Fort, Junction and Cavalry avenues, Detroit, which will seat 2,000 people and open around Easter. An order for approximately $2,000 worth of equipment was placed recently with the United Theater Equipment Corporation at Detroit for Power's machines, Hallberg generator, velvet gold fibre screen and other theater supplies and equipment. The theater is owned by Louis Smilanski and Sam Levy, of Detroit. The theater is only a part of the building, which will contain something like 300 living apartments, three stories high, and at least 30 stores.

Nat Charnas Enlists in Q. M. C.

Benton Harbor, Mich.—Nat Charnas, half owner of the Orpheum theater in Benton Harbor, and former manager, has enlisted in the quartermasters' division at Jacksonville, Florida. Nat writes the World that he enjoys his new career very much, and is anxious to get "over there."

G. S. Trask Managing U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corp.

Detroit, Mich.—George S. Trask, for a number of years manager of the Mutual exchange in Detroit, has been appointed manager of the Detroit office of the United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, succeeding Dave Blythe, who is now at the Drury Lane theater. Mr. Trask, since leaving the Mutual, has been in the promotion game.

Interesting Trade Jottings.

Detroit, Mich.—Dave Prince, of the General Film Co., Detroit, reports a goodly number of Paralta bookings, among them being the Martha Washington theater in Ypsilanti, Paul Schlossman of Muskegon, and C. B. Snell of Ionia.

"The Birth of a Nation" started a week's engagement at the Washington theater, Detroit, with possibilities that it will run a second week should business hold up. Prices were not advanced for this engagement. John Kunsky has booked "Cleopatra" (Fox-Standard) to follow the Griffith picture, and it also may remain for two weeks.

Goldwyn's production, "The Auction Block," is proving the best attraction of the past sixty days, according to reports by exhibitors. Every theater running this picture so far has broke the week-day house record.

Alpena, Mich.—The Temple theater, Alpena, was destroyed by fire on Jan. 8, the fire occurring after the house was emptied at the night show. The loss was $15,000. It will be rebuilt.

Kalamazoo, Mich.—The Fuller theater in Kalamazoo, Mich., has been sold to George Spaeth, former manager, and Col. W. S. Butterfield. Mr. Spaeth remains in full charge. It is the plan of the new owners to remodel the theater and fix it up both inside and out. The policy will be vaudeville and big pictures.

Twenty-five employees of the John H. Kunsky Enterprises in Detroit are now in active service of the Government for the war period, some already being "over there." A service flag in honor of the 25 hangs in all of the Kunsky houses.

J. G. Fineberg Opens Office in Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—J. George Fineberg, president of the Theater Equipment Co. of Minneapolis, distributors in the northwest for Simplex as well as manufacturers of Teco products, has opened a Detroit office at room 202 in the new film building, and has appointed the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Co. in the same building as dealers. Mr. Fineberg has the Michigan rights to Simplex machines and Simplex parts, and he plans to go after business just as hard as he has been doing in the Northwest. C. R. Speers, treasurer of the company, was a recent visitor in Detroit, conferring with Mr. Fineberg.

M. S. Bailey Takes Motiograph Agency.

Detroit, Mich.—M. S. Bailey Co., new film building, Detroit, has taken the Michigan agency for the Motiograph, and a campaign of selling is already under way. At the recent convention of Michigan exhibitors at Jackson Mr. Bailey exhibited the 1918 model and it created a very favorable impression.

Dawn Masterplay Gets Two More Live Ones.

Detroit. Mich.—The Dawn Masterplay Co., 501 Owen building, Detroit, has just annexed two more well-known film men to their live wire organization—Larry Hayes, former assistant manager of the Majestic theater in Jackson, Mich., and formerly in the selling end of the film business, is one. The other man is Art Hoganson, former booker and house manager of the Rialto theater, Detroit. The Dawn plays all features either on percentage of rental.

Cleveland News Letter.

By M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

Associated Film Exchanges Elect New Officers.

CLEVELAND, O.—E. A. Eschmann has resigned as president of the Associated Film exchanges of Cleveland. Sam Morris has been chosen in his place. E. J. Schmidt was chosen as vice-president. Mr. Schmidt was manager of the Victor Film Service.

Mr. Eschmann went to the New York offices of the World Film Corporation. Mr. Morris is the Ohio manager for Select Pictures.

Jewel Exchange Now in Victor Film Office.

Cleveland, O.—The headquarters of the Jewel Productions, Inc., in Cleveland, have been removed from the Columbia building to the Victor Film exchange, 850 Prospect avenue. The Jewel Productions, of course, will be handled as a separate department at the Victor, but under the supervision of E. J. Schmidt, manager.

R. A. Moran Made Mutual Manager.

Cleveland, O.—There's an old face on a new job at the Mutual Film exchange in Cleveland. R. A. Moran has been promoted from a salesman's position to that of manager, succeeding Walter Lusk, who resigned recently to become manager of the First National exchange.

Dillonvale Miners Will Have Shows.

Dillonvale, O.—As an indication of the fact that war workers need entertainment, and plenty of it, the U. S. Coal company has purchased from the United Theater Supply Corporation, Cleveland, Powers projecting machines, and has fitted up an exhibition room for film performances. The coal company is doing this to provide entertainment for the miners who work in the company's mines near Dillonvale.

Majestic at Lorain Taken by Peter Tender.

Lorain, O.—Peter Tender of the Ohio Theater company of Alliance, Ohio, has taken over the Majestic opera house here and after putting in new equipment reopened it.

Men Stars More in Demand.

Cleveland, O.—Following the recent visit of Wallace Reid to Cleveland, two of the first run theaters of the city have booked his new pictures.

These houses are the Mall and Alhambra, which run new pictures simultaneously. The first one to be shown at those theaters will be "Rimrock Jones," January 17, 18 and 19.

The Alhambra and Mall theaters also booked the Jack Pickford pictures and after booking these stars' pictures, they gave out the following statement:

"Women make up the greater part of photoplay audiences, and the men generally go to see the pictures which the women with them have picked out.

"Women are more interested in men stars than in girl stars. Using this logic we have added two more men stars to our list, instead of a man and a woman."

"For the Freedom of World" Shown at Camp Sherman.

Cleveland, O.—About 25,000 men at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio, were treated to an exhibition of the Goldwyn feature, "For the Freedom of the World," Christmas week.

Manager Bandy arranged to show this picture at the camp and sent Fred Schram down to the cantonment. It was shown several times each day, Friday and Saturday, December 28 and 29.

The boys were greatly interested in the picture and voted it a very realistic production.

Joseph M. Schenck Presents the Charming Star Norma Talmadge in the Story of a Loveless Marriage That Ended Well.

Cast.

Margot Hughes.....Norma Talmadge
Chadwick Himes.....Eugene O'Brien
Mrs. Hughes.....Ida Darling
Dick Derwent.....William Courtleigh, Jr.
Donald Nugent.....Charles Wellsley
Madge Sears.....Florence B. Billings

Directed by Charles Miller.

The Story: Margot Hughes is a butterfly society girl who sells herself to the highest bidder. Her husband does not press his ownership "by right of purchase," and his delicacy is misunderstood by her and she thinks that love is lost to her. She goes to France to serve the cause of humanity. There they meet again and understanding comes.

For the Program: A loveless marriage that turned out differently.

Norma Talmadge's newest triumph.

Advertising Phrases: Cupid reigns mid shot and shell.

He bought her hand, but he won her heart.

Feature These Players: Norma Talmadge, with reference to Ghosts of Yesterday, The Secret of the Storm Country, Poppy and The Moth, if you have played these.

Eugene O'Brien as the man she marries for money.

Stunt Suggestion: Do window work with hand-lettered legends such as "Wife for Sale," "Want to buy a wife?" with instructions to apply at your theater on the playing dates to see By Right of Purchase. For lobby display get a collection of battle-front pictures from the newspapers or news service. Cut out tiny cupids from valentines or other sources and paste them against the skies of the pictures. Letter a title card, "Even on the battle front Cupid manages to work his wiles and in By Right of Purchase (A Norma Talmadge picture) he brought two loving hearts together midst bursting shells. (Date)."

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one and three-sheets. One each, six and 24-sheets. Half sheet window cards. Die-cut heralds. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and three 22x28, including picture of star. One, two and three-column scene cuts. One-half, one and two-column star cuts. Press book.

Released in February.

CHEATING THE PUBLIC.

William Fox Presents the 1918 Cinemelodramatic Message on Food Profiteering With An Unusual Cast of Characters.

Cast.

John Dowling.....Ralph Lewis
Chester Dowling.....Bertram Grassby
Bull Thompson.....Tom Wilson
Mary Garvin.....Enid Markey

Directed by Richard Stanton.

The Story: John Dowling is the boss of Millvale, a grasping, greedy profiteer, who underpays his employees and overcharges them for their food. At last the goaded slaves strike and Dowling jeers. They attack his home and he shoots down a "trespasser," backed by the law. When Mary comes to remonstrate, he attacks her and during the struggle he is shot. In spite of all pleas Mary is condemned to suffer death punishment, but at the last moment the truth comes to light and Mary is saved after a tremendous automobile chase.

For the Program: A thrilling drama on a timely topic.

The peonage of the mill towns.

Advertising Phrases: Food profiteer pays death penalty.

Girl nearly pays with life for another's crime.

Feature These Players: Play up the size and importance of the cast rather than any particular players. There are twenty-two chief characters in addition to a large number of extras.

Stunt Suggestions: Make up half a dozen transparencies such as are carried in political parades with "Down with Dowling." "Don't cut our pay and raise food prices, too," etc. Place electric lights inside and use for a lobby display on showing dates. For a street wagon use the legend "The worst white slaver is the unfair employer. See Cheating the Public (house and date)."

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Slide. Mats. Press sheet.

Released January 20.

THE CITY OF PURPLE DREAMS.

The Exhibitors' Operating Corporation Presents William N. Selig's Seven-Act Screen Version of the Famous Novel of the Same Title.

Cast.

The Derelict.....Thomas Santschi
The Girl.....Bessie Eyton
The Anarchist.....Fritzi Brunett

Directed by Colin Campbell.

The Story: A derelict of the streets is knocked down by an automobile and the girl passenger, finding that he is not seriously hurt, gives him money with the advice to "Keep clean and stay clean." A few days later he meets another girl; a fiery anarchist, who draws him into her circle of Reds and vainly seeks to win the love he has already given the unknown girl. At the behest of the band he demands money "for the cause" of a wealthy manufacturer, who submits to blackmail in fear of violence, but the Derelict destroys the check when he finds he has blackmailed the father of the girl he loves. He resolutely forces himself to a position of importance and affluence to win the girl, but the realization of his dreams comes only after a hard-fought battle.

For the Program: A famous novel realized upon the screen.

He journeyed far to reach the City of Purple Dreams.

Advertising Phrases: Blackmails father of the girl he loves.

Kept clean and stayed clean for the sake of unknown girl.

Feature These Players: The three players named are all stars and should be equally featured.

Stunt Suggestions: The catch phrase used, "Stay clean and keep clean," lends itself well to window work, such as soap in a drug store, laundry supplies in dry goods and hardware stores, laundries, dry cleaners, etc. All cards should start off with "Stay clean and keep clean was the advice that made a millionaire of a Derelict in The City of Purple Dreams at (house and date). We can help you, etc." For street work use a tramp with a card: "This is the way I looked when I started for The City of Purple Dreams, but I was a millionaire before I reached my journey's end. See the play at (house and date)." For the lobby coat all electric bulbs with purple to get the proper shade and if possible use purple fabric for drapes for frames.

Advertising Aids: One, three, six, eight and twenty-sheets. Lobby cards. Cuts and mats. Lobby displays.

State rights.

HELL'S CRATER.

Universal Presents Grace Cunard in W. B. Pearson's Vivid Story of the Dance Hall Girl Who Was Made a Miner's Slave.

Cast.

Not stated.

The Story: Jim Shamrick spends two years in the desert developing his mine, and then he seeks a good time in a mining camp. Bill Gordon was prepared to give anyone a good time in his dance hall, but his idea of a good time was getting his victim drunk and robbing him. This he did to Jim with the aid of Cherry Maurice, but Jim was not as willing a victim as the others. He carried Cherry off to his mine, Hell's Crater, and for a year he makes a drudge of her. Then he takes her back, broken and toil-worn, to meet a fresh surprise.

For the Program: Slaved for a year in Hell's Crater for man she learned to love.

Miner's revenge gained him dance hall wife.

Advertising Phrases: Dance hall queen made miner's drudge.

She lost her beauty, but she gained a soul.

Feature This Player: Grace Cunard as the dance hall girl.

Stunt Suggestions: For a window display show a chamois bag holding about half a pint, supposedly filled with gold dust. The bag can be lightly sprinkled with gilding around its mouth. Alongside place a whiskey bottle and a small vial of colorless fluid. Pour a little of the whiskey into the glass. Have the sign read: "Most miners were contented to exchange their gold for a bottle of whiskey and knockout drops and called it a good time. Jim Shamrick was not that sort and when he found out he had been robbed, he abducted the dance hall queen and—but see Hell's Crater at (house and date) and enjoy the full story." For the lobby build a crater around a barrel. Paint the inside red and light with red incandescents with a cut-out of Miss Cunard from the three-sheet. If you can, use chiffon flame kept in motion by an electric fan. Tarpaulin, cloth or even dirt can be used to form the outside of the crater.

Advertising Aids: One style each, one, three and six-sheets. One sheet of star. Black-and-white lobby display. Heralds. Slides. Player cuts, scene cuts. Press book.

Released January 14.

THE CLOVEN TONGUE.

Pathe Presents the Russian Art Film Corporation's Production of the Story by Pushkin With Lesienka.

Cast.

Glasha Antonova.....Nadya Lesienka
Stephen Koronsky.....P. A. Baksheef
Nicolai Orloff.....N. V. Panoff
Sonia Orloff.....Sophie Karabana

Directed by Chester Sabinsky.

The Story: Nicolai Orloff, one of the petty nobles of Russia, becomes enamored of Glasha, his Circassian housekeeper, and so thoroughly does she dominate him that she completely changes his nature. Sonia, returning from boarding school, finds her father harsh and tyrannical, and she turns for comfort to Prince Alexis, a neighbor. Glasha tries to win the Prince for herself, seeking to separate the young people by insidious lies, but she goes too far and brings upon her own head the destruction she sought to work on others.

Pushkin interpreted by his fellow-countrymen.

Advertising Phrases: A Russian story by famous Russian players.

You have seen the Russian ballet. Now see the pick of Russian stage stars.

Feature These Players: Give general emphasis to the fact that these dramas are played by casts of representative players from the leading theaters.

Stunt Suggestions: For the lobby get any portrait of a woman, not the picture of a film player, and attach a red flannel tongue split into a fork at the end. Letter the card, "The Devil has cloven hoofs, His agents have cloven tongues. See the famous Pushkin story (with a remarkable cast of Russian Players) at (date here)." For a street wagon use a big "Russia Wins" and in smaller letters "Pathe's Russian productions have captured the interest of the film fans. See Pushkin's The Cloven Tongue at (house and date)."

Released January 20.

THE FIGHTING GRIN.

Bluebird Presents Franklyn Farnum in the Story of a Strenuous Elopement by R. E. Bradbury and F. H. Clark.

Cast.

Margie Meredith.....Edith Johnson
Billy Kennedy.....Franklyn Farnum
Harold De Vandeveer....J. Morris Foster
Otis Kennedy.....Charles H. Mailes
Amos Meredith.....Fred Montague

Directed by Joseph de Grasse.

The Story: Billy Kennedy and Margie Meredith have been sweethearts since childhood and the mere fact that their fathers object does not worry them in the least. Even Papa Meredith's determination to marry Margie to the man of his choice (and he's a pretty poor picker), does not worry them a lot and Billy wins the girl and $20,000 after stirring up several parts of the country and defeating a fake marriage.

For the Program: He exceeded the speed limits, but he won the girl.

A novel elopement with a dozen original twists.

Advertising Phrases: Robbed a saloon for his marriage fee.

No faint heart won this fair lady.

Feature These Players: Franklyn Farnum as the active eloper.

Edith Johnson as the girl who was worth all the trouble.

Stunt Suggestions: If you have a local fire alarm system, print up cards reading "Fire alarm! If your father wants you to marry a milksop, call out the department and turn the hose on him. See how it's done in The Fighting Grin at (house and date)." Tack these above the boxes, being careful not to cover or interfere with the box Cover your territory fully. It is best to see the fire chief in advance. If there is time for advance work have a slide made of Farnum's smile, blocking out all other features. Letter this: "Whose is this fighting grin? Watch the screen for details." Follow with the same slide lettered for the play. The same stunt may be worked in the lobby through a bromide enlargement, first showing only the smile and later adding the details. Or for a "prop" display get a toy Pullman and a freight car. Letter it "She went west in this (Pullman) and he was shipped in this (Freight), but they met and it wound up in this (brass curtain ring). See all about it in The Fighting Smile (date)." The cars and ring should be fastened to the card at their proper places.

Advertising Aids: One style each, one, three and six-sheets. Stock one-sheet of star. Colored and black and white lobby displays. Slide. Player cuts in three sizes. Heralds. Slides. Scene cuts one and two columns wide. Press sheet.

Released January 28.

THE FORBIDDEN PATH.

William Fox Presents Theda Bara in E. Lloyd Sheldon's Illuminating Story of the Art Colony of Greenwich Village.

Cast.

Mary Lynde.....Theda Bara
Robert Sinclair.....Hugh Thompson
Felix Benavente.....Sidney Mason
Mr. Lynde.....Walter Law
Barbara Reynolds.....Florence Martin
Mrs. Lynde.....Wynne Hope Allen
William Sinclair.....Alphonse Ethier

Directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

The Story: Though her parents have lived in the famous Greenwich Village section of New York City for many years, Mary Lynde has been carefully brought up and knows nothing of the gay art colony. She is delighted when an artist asks her to pose for a Madonna he has been commissioned to paint, but while posing she falls a victim to the wiles of Robert Sinclair. Her father turns her from the house and later Sinclair turns her adrift and she falls to the sodden level of the low dives. There the artist finds her, while in search for a model for a picture of "Sin," and once more she meets Sinclair and wrecks a unique revenge.

For the Program: The Madonna of Washington Square.

Trusting love, turned to hatred, plans unusual revenge.

Advertising Phrases: Same model served for Madonna and for Sin.

Unwilling groom is denounced and deserted at the altar.

Feature These Players: Theda Bara, as the model.

Hugh Thompson as her evil genius.

Stunt Suggestions: For window work get hold of a few good color prints of the Madonna and display with a card "She posed for a Madonna, but her second picture was as Sin, for between the two she had sunk to the lowest depths, yet she came back to happiness and love. See Theda Bara in The Forbidden Path at (house and date)." For lobby display use the regular stills supplied by the company.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Slide. Mats. Press sheet.

Released January 27.

GATES OF GLADNESS.

William A. Brady Presents Madge Evans and George MacQuarrie in a Charming Story of the Studios and the Better Things Beyond.

Cast.

Beth Leeds.....Madge Evans
Myron Leeds (Her Father)....Niles Welch
Roger Leeds (Beth's Uncle),
George MacQuarrie
Mrs. Myron Leeds.....Rosina Henley
Mrs. Colton.....Gerda Holmes
"Boy".....Baby Joan
Norah.....Mrs. Stuart Robson

Directed by Harley Knoles.

The Story: Myron and Roger Leeds are rivals for the favor of Helen Palmer. Myron wins her hand and his stern father cuts off his allowance because he had other plans for his son. Some years later Roger is the head of the house and Myron is a struggling artist. Roger loses his little son and to bring him comfort Norah introduces Beth, Myron's little daughter, into Roger's home as her own niece and an attachment is formed that paves the way—after a dramatic situation—to reconciliation.

For the Program: Famous World kiddie star in a charming role.

The Gates of Gladness open wide for Madge.

Advertising Phrases: With daughter's aid robs brother for starving wife.

Bought a baby for two-bits to give bereaved uncle.

Feature These Players: Madge Evans in an particularly sympathetic role.

George MacQuarrie as her uncle.

Stunt Suggestions: For a lobby attractor set up a pair of posts with a double gate, opened. It can be done without infringing the fire laws, let the gates open inward to the box office. Above use the legend "The Gates of Gladness are wide open. Come in and find enjoyment." You can probably induce many store keepers to hook up with the Gates of Gladness idea, the gates leading to their particular wares with a reference to your attraction. With a little effort you can make the title a local catchword for a few days. If you can locate a key cutout through your printer, send keys to the Gates of Gladness to your patrons.

Advertising Aids: Free advance poster. Two styles each, one and three-sheets. One six-sheet. One two-column cut and two ones. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Two color heralds. Slides. Press sheet.

Released January 28.

THE GUN WOMAN.

Triangle Presents Texas Guinan in a Cyclonic Story of the Old Hell-Roaring West by Alvin J. Heitz.

Cast.

The Tigress.....Texas Guinan
The Bostonian.....Ed Brady
The Gent.....Francis McDonald
The Vultures..... { George Chase. / Thornton Edwards
The Sheriff of La Mesa....Walter Perkins

Directed by Frank Borzage.

The Story: The Tigress was the owner of Hell's Kitchen, the toughest dance hall in La Mesa. She was quick at repartee and quicker with her gun, and the camp respected her aim if it did not admire her aims. Then the Tigress fell in love and staked the Gent to the bank roll to go out and make a decent home for her in a decent land. When she found that he had used her money to run a gambling hell in a new mining camp and never intended marriage, she did not shoot him, but gave him thirty days in which to make good—and then she went and collected, in full.

For the Program: She was tough, but she was a woman.

Texas Guinan as the Tigress of Hell's Kitchen.

Advertising Phrases: The tougher they are, the softer they get, and the Tigress sure was tough.

Never jilt a woman who can shoot.

Feature These Players: Texas Guinan as the toughest woman in the west.

Ed. Brady as the Bostonian.

Francis McDonald as The Gent.

Stunt Suggestions: If there is a nearby rifle range offer a month's pass to the woman who makes the best revolver score. Display the targets in the lobby and try and get some well known women to give you the first targets to set the example. Get the hardware stores to display pearl-handled revolvers alongside the real guns with a sign, "The Gun Woman did not pack a pair of toys. She took a chance with the men and used man-sized guns. We have revolvers to suit all tastes." Hook up with stills of the play and a lettered card. Dress your ticket seller in sombrero and leather jacket for the showing dates. Probably a large size play suit will serve. Over the box office put a large sign, "Check your guns when you buy your tickets." Do as much as you can to give the lobby a western air. For street work repeat the phrase "Never jilt a lady who can shoot. See The Gun Woman and what happened to the man who did (house and date)."

Advertising Aids: Two styles of one-sheets. One each, three and six-sheets. Heralds in rotogravure. Slides. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Press sheets. Electros and mats.

Released January 27.

THE HIRED MAN.

Thomas H. Ince Presents Charles Ray in An Original Story by Julien Josephson of a Hired Hand Who Made Good.

Cast.

Ezry Hollins.....Charles Ray
Caleb Endicott.....Charles French
Walter Endicott, his son...Gilbert Gordon
Mrs. Endicott, his wife.....Lydia Knott
Ruth Endicott, his daughter.....Doris Lee
Stuart Morley.....Carl Ullman

Directed by Victor L. Schertzinger.

The Story: Ezra Hollins, though a hired man, is ambitious because he loves Ruth Endicott, his employer's daughter. Ruth, not knowing of his love, helps him with his studies, though secretly, because she knows her father would not approve. Ezra passes his entrance examination, but at the last moment gives his tuiton money to save the brother of the girl he loves from the results of his peculations from the bank. His failure to go to college is misunderstood, but in the end his name is cleared and Caleb is proud of his chosen son-in-law.

For the Program: The "Typical American Boy" in a typical New England play.

A son of the soil, but no soiled son.

Program Phrases: A New England idyl with wonderfully realistic background.

Burned midnight oil in old barn lantern.

Feature These Players: Charles Ray as the man who wanted to do better things.

Doris Lee as the girl who helped.

Stunt Suggestions: Get the local stationer to place a battered lantern in the center of a display of school books with the sign: "It's a good thing for young eyes that they do not have to study by the light of a lantern as did Charles Ray in The Hired Man, at (house and date)." The hardware store might be coaxed to display a similar lantern as the center of a display of more modern types, with a card, "Charles Ray, in The Hired Man, studied for college by the light of the old barn lantern. Had he come here he could have obtained a much better light at no greater price. See the trouble he had at (house and date)." For the lobby play up the husking bee which supplies a part of the local color, decorating the lobby with ears of corn and other products, not forgetting a couple of red ears. If you can find no red ears try a can of transparent red enamel or varnish and package dye.

Advertising Aids: Two each, one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Photos of star, 8x10. Ten cuts each on star and production one, two and three columns in width. Photogravure. Mats and advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

Released January 28.

IN BAD.

American Presents William Russell in a Story of a Strenuous Young Society Man Who Prefers Sparring Matches to Pink Teas.

Cast.

Monty .....William Russell
Victoria.....Francelia Billington
Lefty.....Bull Montana
Slick.....Carl Stockdale

Directed by Edward Sloman.

The Story: Monty prefers pugilism to pink teas and his first meeting with Victoria is when his trainer, Lefty, knocks him over the ballustrade of his Aunt's home and casts him at Victoria's feet. Victoria is not impressed, but it is love at first sight with Monty. But association with Lefty brings about his arrest as a pickpocket and Aunt Theodosia leaves him to his fate and goes treasure hunting with Victoria. Monty follows them to South America and Victoria is forced to admit that there are times when an athlete makes a handy husband.

For the Program: The strenuous life of a society scrapper.

The courtship of a society athlete and a dainty debutante.

Advertising Phrases: Rescues his bride from Aztec treasure vaults.

Victoria did not approve fighting until Monty fought for her.

Feature These Players: William Russell, as Monty.

Francelia Billington as the finical society girl.

Stunt Suggestions: Get the sporting goods store to make a display of boxing gloves, foils, and similar goods, with a card, "Monty cared more for boxing than billiards, but even if it did get him in bad, it got him out good. See In Bad at (house and date) and chase those frowns away." Borrow displays for other windows if you can. In the lobby show a gauze shirt and a pair of trunks with a card, "This is all the clothes Monty had on when he first met Virginia. No wonder he had to follow her to South America to win her. See all about it in In Bad (date)."

Advertising Aids: One style each, one, three and six sheets. Unmounted banner. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Slides. One-half to three-column cuts and mats. Program cover cut. Press sheet.

Released January 21.

INNOCENT.

Pathe Presents Fannie Ward in An Adaptation of A. H. Wood's Stage Success of the Same Title by George Broadhurst.

Cast.

Innocent.....Fannie Ward
John Wyndham.....John Miltern
Louis Doucet.....Armand Kalitz
Peter McCormick.....Frederick Perry

Directed by George Fitzmaurice.

The Story: Innocent has been brought up within the confines of a high-walled Chinese garden and knows nothing of the world. When her guardian returns to Paris, taking her with him, her lack of experience leads her into grave troubles and Wyndham kills the man who has, as he thinks, led her astray. Then, broken in spirit and finances, he returns to China and in the well-remembered garden Innocent comes to him, still worthy of her name.

For the Program: Fannie Ward in a famous stage success.

A fanciful story of China and Paris.

Advertising Phrases: A play that startled even Broadway.

Love in a Chinese Garden.

Feature This Player: Fannie Ward in one of the best opportunities she has had in pictures.

Stunt Suggestions: Have tag cards printed up with "I am innocent" in very large letters and below in six or eight-point type "See me at (house and date)." Provide with string loops and pass out to the young people, who will cheerfully become walking advertisements for the sake of the changes to be run on the phrase. For lobby work use the "Love in a Chinese Garden" and strive for an oriental effect with lanters and drapes. If you can get a miniature Japanese garden, it will be just the thing for a lobby attractor and these are to be had in most of the larger towns.

Advertising Aids: Usual.

Released January 27.

HIS ROBE OF HONOR.

Paralta Plays, Inc., Presents the Illustrious Star, Henry B. Walthal, in a Romantic Story of Political Intrigue, By Ethel and James Dorrance.

Cast.

Julian Randolph.....Henry B. Walthall
Roxana Frisbee.....Mary Charleson
Laura Nelson.....Lois Wilson
"Boss" Nordhoff.....Noah Beery, Jr.
Bruce Nelson.....J. J. Dowling
Robert Partland.....Ray Laidlow
Million Mulligan.....Fred Montague
Clifford Nordhoff.....Eugene Palette
"Carrotts".....Guy Newhard

Directed by Rex Ingram.

The Story: Julian Randolph, a disreputable lawyer, gains an ad interim appointment to the Supreme bench as a reward for fixing a jury that acquits the brother of the political boss of a charge of murder. He was promised the nomination for the full term at the next election, but gains it only through threat of exposure of a bigamous marriage contracted by the boss. Then comes love for a noble woman and the question whether he shall take defeat with honor or gain seeming honor at the cost of his manhood. It is a momentous problem, but he makes a decision that proves him worthy of the robes of honor.

For the Program: Return to the screen of its greatest star.

A drama of loot and love.

Advertising Phrases: Shall he cast aside his shame-stained ermine.

Fixed jury to gain position on bench.

Feature These Players: Henry Walthall as the lawyer remade by love.

Mary Charleson as the woman worth while.

Stunt Suggestions: Backing up the press book suggestion, get some leading suffragist to write an article on the influence of women on politics. Then get someone to answer. Considerable free newspaper work can be done for this story if handled adroitly. Use plenty of window display, with the lobby stills for attractors and cards featuring Walthall's return to the screen. Try to suggest that it is an event. If you can get hold of a painting of Walthall use that for the lobby. Do not try for any freak stunt.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one and three-sheets. One six-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Slides. Rotogravure heralds. Cuts. Press book.

Released January 15.

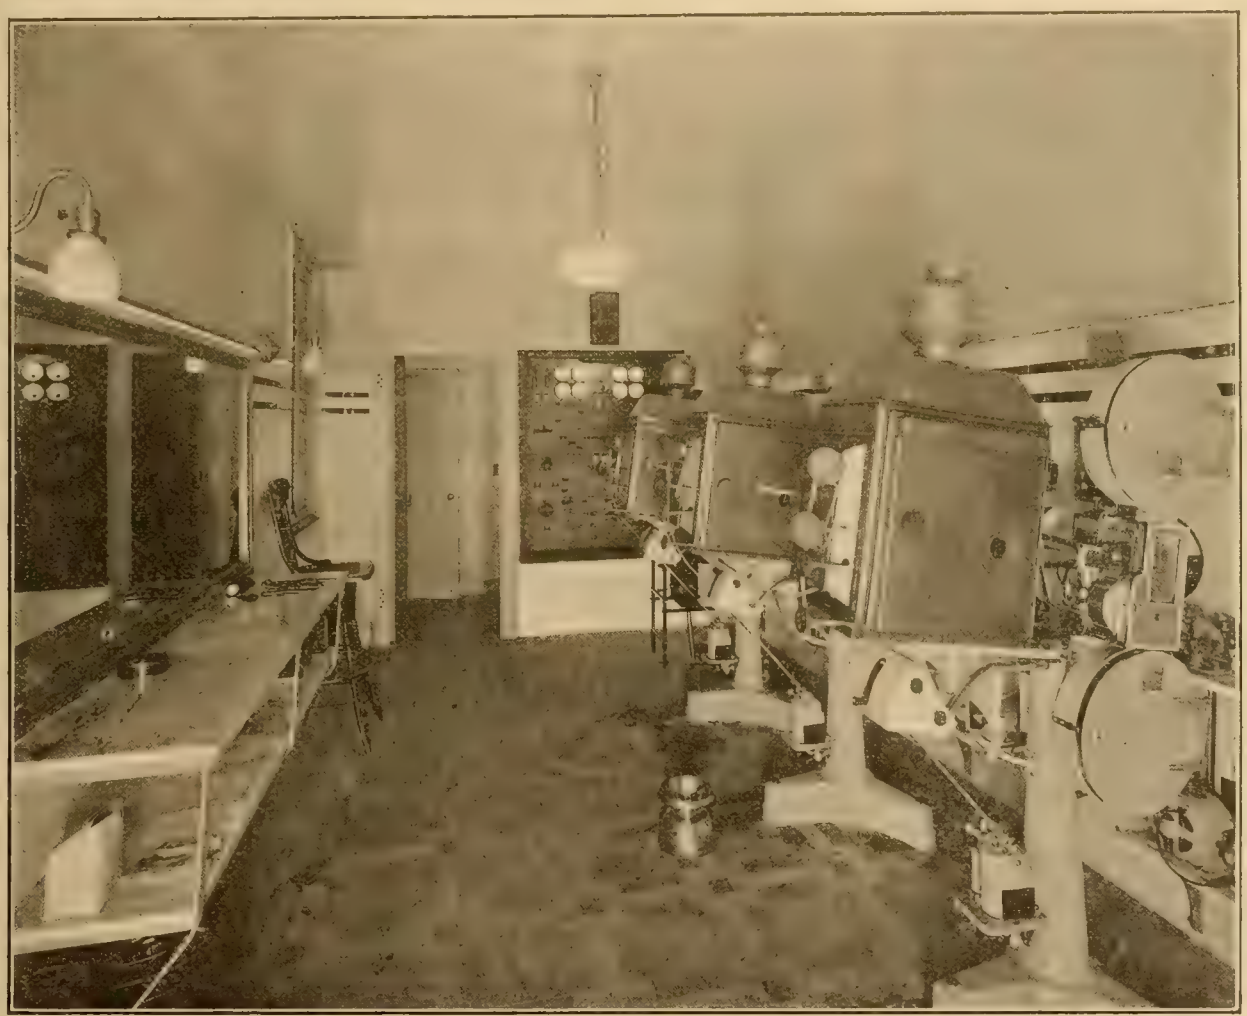
Simplex

Do not be misled

Lately we have told you of some Simplex installations in the best Theatres of the East; but please don't let this give you the idea that there is anything local about this preference for the Simplex.



Just now we are thinking of three San Francisco Houses—the Progress, the New Mission, and the New Fillmore, of the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit, under the management of Mr. Louis Greenfield—and all Simplex-equipped.

Here we show the Operating Room of the last-named theatre, pronounced by Mr. F. H. Richardson, the Projection Expert, as the finest he had seen.

It is further evidence that Exhibitors everywhere appreciate that Permanently Perfect Projection Pulls the People and the Profits.

THE PRECISION MACHINE CO. INC.
317 East 34th St. New York

HER AMERICAN HUSBAND.

Triangle Presents E. Magnus Ingleton's Story of Orient and Occident and the Fate of a Man Who Trifled With the Love of Cherry Blossom.

Cast.

Cherry Blossom.....Teddy Sampson
Miriam Faversham.....Leota Lorraine
Herbert Franklyn.....Darrell Foss
Tokimassa.....Thomas Kurihara
Yoshisada.....Misfo Seki
Kato Nakamura.....Jack Abbe

Directer by E. Mason Hopper.

The Story: Herbert Franklyn, known as "Mr. Butterfly" because of his many affairs of the heart, turns to the Orient when Mildred Faversham breaks their engagement. In Japan Franklyn meets Tokimassa, a wealthy merchant, and his daughter, Cherry Blossom. Cherry Blossom loves Kato, her father's secretary, but the old man has ideas of an international alliance that shall bring East and West into closer touch, and Cherry Blossom and Franklyn are married. Returned to America, Franklyn soon tires of his wife and neglects her for Miriam, whom he persuades to renew the engagement, his marriage having been kept a secret. But he goes to see Cherry Blossom once more and the profligate of the West meets the vengance of the East.

For the Program: Dainty Teddy Sampson in another charming Japanese part.

"For the East is East and the West is West."

Advertising Phrases: Cherry Blossom was no Mme. Butterfly.

"Mr. Butterfly" and Miss Cherry Blossom.

Feature These Players: Teddy Sampson as Cherry Blossom.

Darwell Foss as Mr. Butterfly.

Play up the Japanese actors.

Stunt Suggestions: A Japanese lobby is easily contrived and may run from a few lanterns to elaborate floral decorations if the material is handy. Japanese flags should be available to all Exhibitors and the crossed colors of Japan and the United States may drape the lobby frames. Dry goods stores can hook up their oriental goods with the picture through window displays with lobby photographs as attractors. A little incense burning in the lobby will help much to create atmosphere.

Advertising Aids: Two styles of one-sheets, one each three and six-sheets. Herald in rotogravure. Slides. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Press sheet. Cuts and mats.

Released January 27.

THE IMPOSTOR.

The Empire All-Star Corporation Presents Ann Murdock in a Charles Frohman Success, By Leonard Merrick and Michael Morton.

Cast.

Mary Fenton.....Ann Murdock
Blake Walford.....David Powell
Charles Owen.....Lionel Adams
Loftus Walford.....Richie Ling
Mrs. Walford.....Charlotte Granville
Mrs. Fowler.....Eleanor Seybolt
Mrs. Owen.....Edyth Latimer
Mr. Hampton.....Charles Mussett

The Story: Penniless, half starved, and unfamiliar with the big town, Mary Fenton asks Charles Owen for aid. He thinks it something of a lark to take the innocent, confiding girl to his hotel for something to eat and a chance to get warm, but he is discovered by friends in what might have been a compromising situation and to pass it off he introduces Mary as his wife's sister. She is made much of by his circle of acquaintances until Mrs. Owen returns and then Mary takes the only way out—frank confession and is an impostor no longer.

For the Program: A delightful little romance of a many-sided city.

Charles Frohman's "Baby star" in an international stage success.

Advertising Phrases: One good lie requires another and then several more.

A lesson to all married—and unmarried—men.

Feature These Players: Ann Murdock in one of her stage successes.

David Powell as Blake Walford, who loves the Impostor.

Lionel Adams as the man who makes her an Impostor.

Stunt Suggestions: Try and get one or two of the one-sheets into windows as the center of a clothing display with a card, "Ann Murdock displays the extreme Paris fashions in The Impostor (house and date). We show in our own stock models you are more likely to want to wear—but see her clothes, by all means." Get the real estate agent to use a card, "We have homes that rent from (minimum) to (maximum). If you want to see an apartment that rents for $240,000 a year see the suite used in The Impostor at (house and date). These scenes were made in the Hotel Plaza, New York, and the few rooms rent for $20,000 a month." For the lobby get eleven cards about 15x20. Letter each with a single letter to form the title, but put them up, "The Imposter." It will keep you busy explaining that you did it on purpose, but you'll know that the title has been seen.

Advertising Aids: One style each, one, three and six-sheets. One-half column cut. One, two and three-column cuts and mats. Cover cut 4x4. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Slides. Press sheet.

Released January 14.

MADAME SPY.

Universal Presents Jack Mulhall in a Timely Story of Prussian Espionage by Lee Morrison in Which He Impersonates a German Baroness.

Cast.

Robert Wesley .....Jack Mulhall
Admiral Wesley .....Wadsworth Harris
Margaret Wesley .....Maude Emory
Hanson, the Butler.....George Gebhart
Phyllis Covington .....Donna Drew
Baroness Von Helda.....Claire Du Brey

Directed by Douglas Gerrard.

The Story: Bob Wesley did not acquire much education at college, but he was the star "actress" of the dramatic club. This did not help around examination time, so he was dropped and sent home. It was a blow to his father. Admiral Wesley, but it turned out that Jack's one accomplishment was, for the moment, of greater importance to the country than Sanskrit and trigonometry, for he impersonated a German baroness and rounded up a neat little bag of Prussian spies.

For the Program: Jack Mulhall becomes a perfect lady.

College star turns skill at impersonation to good account.

Advertising Phrases: American Admiral's son as a German baroness.

Sleuthed in skirts to defeat a German plot.

Feature These Players: Jack Mulhall as the Admiral's son.

Donna Drew as his sweetheart.

Stunt Suggestions: For the lobby nothing could be better than the "Foreign spies admitted free," used in the press book. For street work the same thing can be done, with cards lettered in large type: "Are you a German Spy? And in smaller type: "If you are, you will be admitted free to the (house and date) to see Mme. Spy. If you are not, pay real money to see a real play." Run a string of hangman's nooses across the lobby with a "Welcome Spies!" banner suspended from them. Run the string straight across the lobby or across the sidewalk if you have opportunity.

Advertising Aids: One style each, one, three and six sheets. One sheet of star. Black and white lobby displays. Slide. Player cuts. Heralds. Press book.

Released January 21.

MEN WHO HAVE MADE LOVE TO ME.

Essanay Presents the Famous Author, Mary MacLane in a Startling Drama of Her Own Life as Written and Played By Herself.

Cast.

Mary MacLane .....Herself
The Callow Youth.....Ralph Graves
The Literary Man.....R. Paul Harvey
The Younger Son.....Clif Worman
The Prize Fighter.....Alador Prince
The Bank Clerk.....Clarence Derwent
Husband of Another.....Fred Tiden

The Story: Most persons recall the sensation the first confessions of Mary MacLane made when they were published. For her newest revelation she turns to the screen for her audience, and she tells the story of six lovers, with the addenda, "There were more—may there be others. One's loves are so real while they last." But the bank clerk lasted only nine days, and none of them were stayers.

For the Program: Mary MacLane's very human document.

If all were as frank as Mary MacLane what a turmoil there would be.

Advertising Phrases: "Down the line with Mary and Dan Cupid."

Six sweethearts in ninety minutes. Going some!

Feature This Player: Center your publicity upon the star.

Screen Stunts: Your stores may have some of the MacLane books. Display them with a card: "Mary MacLane's books are frank, but see her screen story at (house and date) and you'll understand her books better." For a teaser line before showing use, "Girls, have you the nerve of Mary MacLane?" and "How many sweethearts have you had?" For mail work issue invitations to meet Mary MacLane at your house and date. For the lobby use the introduction to her story: "Six piquant love episodes in my life—all of them damnably real."

Advertising Aids: One, three, six and 24 sheets in six colors. Window cards in six colors. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Black and white stills. Portrait photos. Announcement sildes. Three one-column and one two-column mats. Two each one and two column cuts. Press sheet.

Released in February.

LES MISERABLES.

William Fox Presents a Ten-Part Realization of Victor Hugo's Famous Work From An Adaptation by Frank Lloyd.

Cast.

Jean Valjean .....William Farnum
The Bishop .....George Moss
Javert .....Hardee Kirkland
Fantine .....Sonia Markova
Cosette:
At eight .....Kittens Reichert
At eighteen .....Jewel Carmen
Marius .....Harry Spingler
Eponine .....Dorothy Bernard
Gavroche .....Anthony Phillips
Thenardier .....Edward Elkus
Mme. Thenardier .....Mina Ross

Directed by Frank Lloyd.

The Story: Jean Valjean, sentenced to the galleys for stealing a loaf of bread to keep his sister and her children from starvation, serves nineteen years. On his release an encounter with a great-hearted bishop works a miracle, and the beast again becomes a man. But he is hounded by the police until at last he is enabled to get the better of Javert, his chief tormentor.

For the Program: A world-famous classic brought to life.

The gospel of the oppressed.

Advertising Phrases: The symphony of a soul.

William Farnum's greatest role.

Feature These Players: William Farnum as Jean Valjean, one of the best characterizations of his screen career.

Jewel Carmen in the role that brought her stellar honors.

Hardee Kirkland as the police inspector.

Stunt Suggestions: Work up interest in the schools and libraries. If you have the film on Saturday give a special morning performance for school children, giving their teachers tickets to a regular showing. Sell out a performance to the local literary or school society, giving them a chance to profit on the sale. Work the book stores for window displays or cards. Letter the cards: "Of course you will see "Les Miserables" at (theater and date), but have you ever read the book? We have it." Name the stores on a special slide. For the street use a gang of galley slaves with ball and chain. Start as far ahead as possible to work up interest.

Advertising Aids: Two each, one, three and six sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays 8x10 and 22x28, the latter in colors. Slides. One and two column advertising mats. Scene mats. Press book.

Released February 10.

A MOTHER'S SIN.

Greater Vitagraph Presents a Screen Version of The Seven Stars in Their Courses, By Hilda Sharp, Arranged By Edward Montagne.

Cast.

Patrick Yardley .....Earle Williams
Celia Graham .....Miriam Miles
Yardley .....Ernest Maupin
Vincent Tessier .....Denton Vane
Lady Fitzpatrick .....Betty Blythe
Rosa .....Louise Du Pre

Directed by Tom Mills.

The Story: Patrick Yardley is disowned by his father when he comes to confess his financial straits. The old man explains that Vincent's mother had run away, and since he was unable to reach her he has planned to take vengeance upon her son. He has named Vincent, a nephew, his heir, but he discovers that Vincent is unworthy and changes his will again in favor of Patrick; but the boy does not come into his inheritance until it is almost too late to be of use.

For the Program: Usurping heir smirches his cousin's name.

Faint heart nearly lost fair lady.

Advertising Phrases: Social leper steals fortune and good name.

She doubted, but her heart spoke true.

Feature These Players: Edward Earle in a congenial role.

Miriam Miles as Celia.

Denton Vane as the evil nephew.

Stunt Suggestions: The basic idea of this story, the father who disinherits his own son because his wife eloped and he cannot punish her, should be played up in a series of "question" advertisements. If your town is small enough work with the local paper in a prize contest for the best letter for or against Yardley's action. Help along with a couple of letters suggesting the general line of action, and make the prize a month's season ticket.

Advertising Aids: One style each one, three, and six sheets. Window cards. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Slide. Heralds. Plan book. Press sheet.

Released January 28.

REVELATION.

Metro Presents the Famous Russian Actress, Alla Nazimova in a Seven-Act Adaptation Based Upon Mabel Wagnalls' Novel, A Rose Bush of a Thousand Years.

Cast.

Joline .....Nazimova
Paul Granville .....Charles Bryant
The Prior .....Frank Currier
Duclos .....Syn De Conde
Fra Augustine .....John Martin
Pierre .....Eugene Borden
Mestaire, the Innkeeper..Philip Sandford
Count Adrian De Roche...Bigelow Cooper
The Monastery Gatekeeper....True James
German Officer .....Dave Turner
Patin .....Fred Radcliffe
Fochard .....A. C. Hadley
Madeleine Brevort .....Hazel Washburn

Directed by George D. Baker.

The Story: Joline, a "Daughter of Joy," becomes enamored of Paul Granville, a poor artist, and as his model enables him to win fame in a series of startling canvases. A wealthy patron of art commissions Paul to paint The Madonna of the Rose Bush, and he feels that a new model is needed; but the jealous Joline drives them away, and they start for the monastery, where the miracle of the rose bush is supposed to have occurred. There a monk declares that in Joline he has seen the Virgin, and some chord in her better nature is touched. She leaves Paul, but is reunited when she, a Red Cross nurse, finds him wounded upon the battlefield.

For the Program: An amazing tale of cabaret and cloister.

The story of a Madonna from Montmartre.

Advertising Phrases: Miracle wrought in model's soul.

Leaves cloister for the fields of death.

Feature This Player: Center the advertising upon Mme. Nazimova, whose work in "War Brides" will still vividly be remembered.

Stunt Suggestions: The best results will be gained through a generous use of the lobby displays as window cards, with a printed or lettered card announcing the house and playing dates. Most newspapers will take more than the usual amount of press work on this, and the legend upon which the story is based will give the basis of one good story. Special announcements, engraved or in one of the "shaded" type faces, should be sent to a select list if you can get a list large enough to justify the expense. Do not attempt to use any lobby attractor other than photographs unless you can get a rose bush in bloom in allusion to The Madonna of the Rose Bush.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six sheets. Press sheet. Filler sheet. Ten-minute novel for newspaper work. Slide. Heralds. Lobby sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Mats and cuts.

Special release.

STELLA MARIS.

Artcraft Presents Mary Pickford in One of the Most Important Productions of Her Brilliant Career, as the Dual Heroines in William J. Locke's Novel.

Cast.

Stella Maris.....
Unity Blake..... } Mary Pickford
John Risca .....Conway Tearle
Louise Risca .....Camille Ankewich
Lady Blount .....Ida Waterman
Sir Blount .....Herbert Standing
Agatha Linden .....Josephine Crowell
The Nurse .....Mrs. Coonleu

Directed by Marshall Nielan.

The Story: William J. Locke's novel of "The Star of the Sea" offers two wonderful character studies—Stella, the lovely, cherished daughter of the rich, and Unity Blake, the abused orphan, whose love leads her to make smooth the paths of the man she adores, though this entail the extinction of her own life. Miss Pickford in this dual role sounds the full gamut of the human emotions.

For the Program: Mary Pickford's supreme effort.

The Daughter of Love and the Child of Hate.

Advertising Phrases: The Pickford photoplay supreme.

Two Mary Pickfords in a single play.

Feature These Players: Miss Pickford in the first dual role she has ever played.

Conway Tearle as the man she loves in both characters.

Stunt Suggestions: Use the cut-outs suggested in the press book if within your resources, or for a window display a very respectable "sea" can be contrived with blue cloth, which need not be cut. Center with a gilt star, with Miss Pickford's head and the double title, "Stella Maris" (Star of the Sea), with house and date. Work the book stores and libraries on the Locke books. A window display of marine pictures might be arranged, with a card for the display. For street work use, "Can you imagine 'Little Mary' without the Pickford curls? See Stella Maris (house and date)." This might be repeated in the local hairdresser's window if you have one.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Rotogravure one sheet. Ten cuts each on star and production, one to three columns. Cartoon cut. Heralds. Adverting layouts. Slides. Heralds. Press book.

Released January 21.

THE WIDOW'S MIGHT.

Jesse L. Lasky Presents the Famous Impersonator, Julian Eltinge, in a New Play by Marion Fairfax, Written Especially to Fit His Unique Talents.

Cast.

Dick Tavish .....Julian Eltinge
Irene Stuart .....Florence Vidor
Horace Hammer,
Gustave von Seyffertitz
Mrs. Pomeroy Pomfret.....Maym Kelso
Red .....James Neill
Pete .....Larry Steers
Cob .....George McKenzie

Directed by William C. de Mille.

The Story: Dick Tavish, a young New Yorker, decides that there is money in cows, and he buys a western ranch. When the novelty has worn off he decided there is monotony as well. Then he falls in love with a girl on a calendar, and life takes on a new interest, particularly after he discovers who the girl is. The fact that her uncle swindled him on the ranch does not matter. He figures he can take care of the uncle, and he does, but not until he has been forced to masquerade as a woman, and have half the men at a fashionable resort fall in love with him.

For the Program: A widow's wiles in widow's weeds.

Dainty dresses and daring deeds.

Advertising Phrases: The most perfect woman of them all.

Clothes do not make the man this time.

Feature These Players: Julian Eltinge in his third Paramount production.

Florence Vidor as the girl on the calendar.

Stunt Suggestions: Make a cut-out of one of the three sheets and place before it a large doll in baby clothes. On a card ask the question: "Is baby looking at mama or papa? For the answer see Julian Eltinge in 'The Widow's Might' (date)." Use for lobby display, and repeat in windows, if desired. Don't make the mistake of working with mourning goods displays. Those who have use for mourning will resent the bad taste. Against a window of handsome gowns use a card: "Hundreds of men can make women's clothes, but only one man can wear them as Julian Eltinge does in 'The Widow's Might' (house and date). See him. It's a treat!"

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six sheets. Photogravure. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Photos of star, 8x10. Ten cuts each for star and production, one to three columns wide. Mats for same. Advertising layout cuts. Slides. Press book.

Released January 28.

THE KNIFE.

Select Pictures Presents Alice Brady in the Pertinent Melodrama of the Same Title by Eugene Walters—Screen Version by Charles Maigne.

Cast.

Kate Tarleton.....Alice Brady
Robert Manning.....Frank Morgan
Billy Meredith.....Crauford Kent
Louise Meredith.....Helen Lackaye
Jimmy Bristol.....Paul Doucet
Stella Hill.....Alice Hollister
Hampton Gray.....Jennie Walker
Detective Ellis.....Frank Evans

Directed by Robert G. Vignola.

The Story: Kate Tarleton is a firm believer in divination and her belief in the fates leads her, while on a visit to New York, to fall into the trap of a white slaver, masquerading as a fortune teller. She is rescued from her terrible situation, but her reason is unseated. How her surgeon-sweetheart restores her to sanity and the unique revenge he takes upon the miscreants forms an unusually absorbing drama.

For the Program: A Broadway hit made better for the screen.

Alice Brady eludes the slaver's snares.

Advertising Phrases: Fake fortune teller pays terrible price for misdeeds.

Fortune teller was slaver's agent.

Feature These Players: Alice Brady as the superstitious young Southern girl.

Frank Morgan as Manning.

Stunt Suggestions: For window work use fortune telling layouts with cards, leaves in teacups or other forms of domestic divination to vary the displays. Use the sign, "Tell your fortune at home, if you will, but beware of fortune tellers. For the reason see Alice Brady in The Knife at (house and date)." Work in connection with window cards. If you can get hold of some local woman who is clever at telling fortunes, open your house for a morning fortune telling matinee the first day of showing and have her tell the fortunes of those who apply. Advertise well in advance and try to work up some talk. Mask your seeress and make a mystery of it. Of course, each fortune should include some reference to the play.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one and three-sheets. One each six and 24-sheet. Half sheet window cards. Die-cut heralds. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and three 22x28, including portrait of star. One, two and three-column scene cuts. One-half, one and two-column star cuts. Press book.

Released in February.

ESSANAY.

THE WATER POWERS OF EASTERN CANADA (One Reel Scenic).—The extensive part played by water in the industries of Eastern Canada is vividly revealed in this Essanay scenic reel. The countless falls and rapids in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec are shown as well as the sluice gates capable of generating 160,000 horse power. The artistic side of Canada is not omitted, for some picturesque vistas along the St. Maurice River are shown, including Grand Mere Rock, which reveals the perfect profile of a grandmother type. Niagara, the famous water falls, was photographed for this picture, with its "harness" that generates 2,000,000 horse power. The industries dependent on this source of power supply you will also see.

NEXT (One Reel Comedy).—When the worthless husband refuses to fire up the furnace, his wife, weighing a full three hundred pounds, decides to go to work and be independent. She answers an ad asking for lady barbers. The lady barber shop is reaping a harvest, due to their staff of pretty girls, who coax in the patronage. And not the least patronizing of these patrons is the worthless husband. He and a dozen others partake in the various services the pretty girls render, from shaves to shines and manicures. And many are the flirtations carried on between the customers and the fair employes. The husband comes back for the third time that day for a shave. By that time his wife is established as one of the tonsorial artists. When she sees him in the chair and hears from the proprietress that he has been flirting with the girls, she orders him tied down and then smears his whole face and head with lather. After that punishment is inflicted, she turns him over her knee and spanks him.

A ROMANCE OF RAILS AND POWER (One Reel Scenic).—An Essanay leading actress takes an interesting part in this scenic. Virginia Valli appears in a story woven around the electrification of railroads. This picture reveals how the eastern railroads are employing the use of electric locomotive power and how, in many ways, it proves more efficient and cleanly than the steam mode of propulsion. You will also see some of the scenes along the railroads.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

THE THING'S THE PLAY (One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).—The cast: Helen (Mildred Manning); Frank Barry (Jack Crosby); John Delaney (Rex Burnett). Directed by George Ridgewell.

When Frank Barry married Helen Mayo, John Delaney, who also loved Helen, became bitterly jealous. One-half hour after the wedding ceremony while Helen was preparing to depart on her honeymoon, John Delaney stole into her room and begged her to fly with him. While he was kissing her hand in a last farewell the door was suddenly opened and Helen's husband entered the room. John Delaney quickly disappeared by way of the window and fire escape. Frank would listen to no explanation from Helen. Flinging her from him roughly, he rushed from the house like a madman.

Twenty years elapse. Helen conducts a little novelty shop and lets rooms. Ramonti, a bearded violinist, takes lodgings there and a strong attachment soon springs up between him and Helen. Then another lodger arrives, a man in the early forties, with strange, mysterious, haunting eyes. He also displays great interest in Helen, but her preference is for the violinist.

One day Ramonti declares his love, telling Helen the story of his life. When a young man he had been found lying in the street with a deep wound in his head, and taken to a hospital in an ambulance. His life up to the time of leaving the hospital was a total blank to him. He knows not who he is nor where he came from. His concern manager gave him the name of Ramonti. Now, Helen loves Ramonti, but has become convinced that lodger number two is her husband who has come back after twenty years. And then lodger number two also declares his love to Helen, begging her forgiveness for the wrong he has done her, and she learns that he is John Delaney and that Ramonti, the violinist, whom she really loves, is Frank Barry, her long lost husband.

THE FIFTH WHEEL (One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts)—The cast: Thomas McQuade (W. L. Rodgers); Mrs. Van Smuythe (Lydia Yeamans Titus); Prof. Cherubusco (Charles Wheelock); Annie West (Patricia Palmer); Mr. Walter (Chet Ryan); Mrs. Walter (Clare Toner). Directed by David Smith.

Thomas McQuade, the Van Smuythe's coachman, having been discharged for drunkenness, has joined the Bed Liners in Madison square. It is freezing cold. Standing beside him is a young man, shabby but neat. They exchange confidences and Thomas learns that the young man has just been discharged from a hospital without a penny, his wife and child having been obliged to return to her mother. He had married against the wishes of his unforgiving relatives. Just then an automobile dashes up Fifth avenue and when opposite the Bed Line drops an extra tire. Thomas catches it and returns it to the owner, expecting at least a dollar for the service, but, instead the imposing gentleman asks him mysteriously if he knows the Van Smuythes, and on learning that he does, Thomas is forthwith taken to a palatial house in the Seventies and fed on cold fowl, tea biscuits and wine. While thus pleasantly occupied two women are mysteriously ushered into a side room, where his host, Prof. Cherubusco, the great clairvoyant, tells them that the Chaldean Chiroscope has been successful, for had it not said "By the fifth wheel of the chariot he shall come?" But the professor, learning instead that Thomas is the Van Smuythe's ex-coachman, throws him into the street. So back to the Bed Line goes Thomas, where he resumes his conversation with his new friend. Suddenly a sturdy girl rushes up to him. It is Annie, his sweetheart and maid at the Van Smuythe's, whom he has not seen for a month. She says his old position is waiting for him, but suddenly catching sight of the other man the screams, "Mr. Walter!" And then it appears that she had accompanied her mistress to the great clairvoyant and he had hold her where she would find her sweetheart, and she had also found "Mr. Walter." After paying the carfares home she vows to give her remaining $11.85 to Professor Cherubusco, "the greatest man in the world."

JAXON FILM CORPORATION.

A DAUGHTER OF UNCLE SAM (Episode No. 2—One Reel).—The cast: Jessie Emerson (Jane Vance); Captain Leonard Taylor (William Sorelle); Henry Von Prague (Henry Carleton); Lieutenant Blake (Lewis Dayton).

Lieutenant Blake, having completed the model of his theoscope, invites his cousin, Jessie, to witness the initial test. This remarkable invention enables its user to pry into secrets hidden by walls and distances. Word of its completion is speedily carried to Von Prague by Blake's assistant, a spy. Looking through the theoscope, Jessie observes a battleship sailing for action in foreign waters, and in the air a government aeroplane performing unusual stunts. She also finds that she can peer through the walls of an apartment house, and is so enthused over the invention that she urges her cousin to give it to the government at once.

The following day Blake meets General Norton, who becomes interested in the theoscope and arranges to send Blake to Washington with it that night. Von Prague hears of these plans and determines to learn the secret of the invention which would make secret military operations, night raids and aeroplane bombardments impossible. Two false bluejackets meet Blake at the pier. He finds too late he is not being taken to his ship. The sailors overpower him and take him to the den of the plotters, where he is offered the choice of giving up the secret of his invention or death. He chooses the latter, and then the spies offer him money. This, too, is refused, and in the fight that follows Blake knocks down Von Prague and is about to escape when he is set upon from behind and knocked out. He is dropped through a trap into the river. Jessie, with the aid of the theoscope, locates Blake in the den of spies, and immediately rushes to the river to rescue him.

SPARKLE COMEDY.

THE BEST OF A BAD BARGAIN (One Reel).—Billie, the chauffeur, has won the heart, but not the hand, of Sussie, the daughter of his employer. Bibbs, a prude, has the parental approbation of his struggle for Sussie's hand. When Sussie shows that she has something to say in the matter, the parents decide it is time to send their daughter to a discipline school. Billie is on the scene at the moment of her departure and receives a note from Sussie telling him she is being packed off to school and begging him not to desert her. While Sussie is introduced into the school, Billie is trying to find an escape for her. He hits upon the plan of getting all the girls out by inviting them to a show. The girls climb out of the windows in their pajamas, dress on the lawn, and leave for the show. When they get to the box office, Billie and Sussie sneak away to get married.

In the meantime, Miss Prim discovers their absence and notifies the police, apprising them of the clue left by the program which had been found. Billie and Sussie arrive on the scene just before the police, and Billie manages to fool them while they are seeking the other runaways. Billie then tells Sussie's father that they are married and Dad makes the best of a bad bargain.

NESTOR.

WHO'S TO BLAME?" (Jan. 21).—The cast: Mr. Popp (William Franey); Mrs. Popp (Gale Henry); the sister (Lillian Peacock). Directed by Allen Curtis.

Mr. Popp was promised a raise. But the prospects were bad, so he decided to bust up the business by coming down late and going home early. At eleven Mr. Popp strolled into the dining-room to find the table littered with baby clothes. This was a great shock to him, for he didn't know—that his wife was making dresses for the Red Cross dollies, so he departed for the office with the happy thought that he was about to become a father. Soon he received a phone call from the maid, asking him to come home, that there was a surprise awaiting him. Mr. Popp came home to find the baby sitting up in the carriage, smiling happily. He phoned the office and asked the boys to come over to see the baby. Then, to his dismay, he learns that it is not his baby. Here was a perplexing situation for poor Popp. After sister and her baby had gone, Popp and Mrs. Popp rushed out to find a baby for the time being. Seeing a baby carriage near they wheeled it into their home, just as the boys arrived. "Doesn't the baby resemble its mother?" queried the apparently happy father; but the bunch couldn't see it, for, on close inspection, the baby was found to be a Jap. Suddenly the sky broke, and the owner of the child rushed in and claimed its own. But Popp would get his raise, so he adopted a whole orphan asylum and succeeded.

ASH-CAN ALLEY (Two Parts—Jan. 23).—The cast: Sally O'Malley (Eva Novak); Sylvester Soapsud (Eddie Barry); O'Malley (Bob McKenzie); Sofia Soapsud (Eva Heazlett); Grandpop Soapsud ("Pop" Jones). Directed by Dick Smith.

O'Malley was a bricklayer, and when he fell heir to thirty million dollars, he had a violent attack of social aspiration for himself and his daughter, and nothing would do but he must marry the Widow Sofia Soapsud, and that his daughter must marry a duke.

But the villains conspired with Wun Lung Woo to marry the daughter and secure the fortune. Wun Lung Woo practised the gentle art of laundry in the front part of his shop, and the exact science of torture in the torture chamber in the rear. He had various devices such as mechanical beating apparatus, feather ticklers for the soles of the feet, and a wash-wringer adapted to taking the starch out of victims. But the victims survived the ordeals of this torture chamber, and came through triumphantly to the usual movie finale—a wedding, with all of the fuss that Ash-Can Alley could kick up.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE RED ACE (Episode No. 15—"Hell's Riders" -Two Parts—Jan. 26).—"One hundred dollars to the man who brings back either one—dead or alive," said Doctor Hirtzman, head of the foreign Secret Service agents, when he saw that Virginia Dixon and Constable Winthrop had followed him across the border. Virginia having overheard Doctor Hirtzman planning to send the platinum home by boat, discovers an American ranch nearby and goes for help. It meant everything to the United States for Virginia to get the planitum which the foreign Secret Service agents had stolen. So, together with a band of cowpunchers, they start in pursuit of the fleeing secret agents, who had enlisted the aid of a hired hand of cattle rustlers and outlaws to help them reach the boat in safety. Virginia overtakes them and a gun fight ensues, in which Doctor Hirtzman, who has the plantinum in his possession, is thrown from his horse. Virginia, seeing her chance to get the platinum, makes a mad dash for it, but she is pursued and unhorsed.

THE MYSTERY SHIP (Episode No. 9—"The Black Masks"—Two Parts—Jan. 26).—"Hey, don't kill her, Fong!" shouted Harry Russel, formerly Betty Lee's fiance, when his Chinese henchmen were about to stab Betty who was held prisoner by him. Also held prisoner in the same house, was Miles Gaston, who had joined Betty in her effort to recover the treasure. Miles Gaston was menaced by a ferocious beast who was just then in the act of springing at him. His doom seemed sealed, when the Mystery Man opened for him an avenue of escape. He succeeded in rescuing Betty, and after avoiding a terrific explosion which was planted by "Spider," head of the waterfront gang, working in league with Harry, they reached Los Angeles to find the treasure missing. That night, while in the restaurant, he is decoyed by a clever ruse to the home of a secret society, and there accused of knowing the hiding-place of the treasure. Gaston's protestations of innocence are futile and only tend to arouse the anger of the members who take Gaston into the torture chamber in order to exact the truth from him. In the meantime, Betty is kidnapped from her home by the gang.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

ISSUE NO. 55 (Jan. 29).

The day of the mine salter will come to an end when engineers and investors in gold mines and others, see Screen Magazine No. 55. Its opening gun is an expose of the methods of promoters who shoot gold leaf into a bogus mine to make it appear like an eighteen-karat reality.

One woman has found that it is extremely profitable in this day of increasing milk values to raise goats, and the Screen Magazine tells you just how she is doing it. One of the most interesting chapters in this issue shows how all manner of commodities can be manufactured, wrapped and delivered without being touched by human hands. Through the courtesy of the National Packing Machinery Company, the entire elaborate process of mechanical packing is interestingly detailed.

But the big subject in this Screen Magazine is the first motion picture ever made of naked human bones in actual movement. It is made through an X-ray tube with elaborate machinery, all of which is shown, and enables a person to see on the screen the manner in which the elbow joint works, the knee cap performs, and one's ankle operates in real life. By aid of the fluoroscope an examination of the human stomach is also possible.

HE'S gone across—
YOU "come across"!

Adopt a SOLDIER and Supply him with "SMOKES" for the Duration of the WAR!

YOU know that our fighting men are begging for tobacco. Tobacco cheers them. They need it. "Send more cigarettes." "We can't get half enough smokes over here." "A cigarette is the first thing a wounded man asks for." Almost every mail brings many thousands of such requests.

$1.00 a Month Keeps a Soldier Supplied—Will YOU Be a "BIG BROTHER" or a "BIG SISTER" to a Lonely Fighting Man?

Every dollar sends four 45c packages of tobacco. Mail the money and coupon right now.

"OUR BOYS IN FRANCE TOBACCO FUND"
19 West 44th Street, New York

GENTLEMEN: I want to do my part to help the American soldiers who are fighting my battle in France. If tobacco will do it, I'm for tobacco. (Check below how you desire to contribute.)

I enclose $1.00. I will adopt a soldier and send you $1.00 a month to supply him with "smokes" for the duration of the war.

I send you herewith ....., my contribution towards the purchase of tobacco for American soldiers. This does not obligate me to contribute more.

ISSUE NO. 37 (Jan. 26).

Dynamite Defeats King Winter's Alliance With Kaiser.—Ice blocked, interrupting work on America's great warship progress at Government's new "Victory" destroyer plant, is broken by use of explosive, permitting delivery of coal. —Somewhere on the North Atlantic Coast. Subtitles: The dynamite is thawed out in warm water, prior to inserting the fuse. The explosive is lowered to a depth of four feet. "Let 'er go!" "After the battle."

Canoe Tilting Suggested As Army Bayonet Exercise.—Uncle Sam's military instructors should find some hints in the "annual plunge" of the San Diego Rowing Club.—San Diego, Cal. Subtitle: Either of these boys would make a good bayonet drill-master.

Tornado Demolishes Town, Sweeping Houses Before It.—Driving through center of the city, terrific wind storm destroys 75 buildings and injures many persons.—Leesville, La. Subtitle: Storm traces that suggest the handiwork of the Hun in France.

Spectacular Fire Wrecks Big Theatrical Warehouse.—Scenery of "The Mikado" and many famous productions goes up in smoke when William A. Brady warehouse is destroyed.—New York City. Subtitles: Billows of smoke hang over the city like a pall. Low water pressure and the cold hinder the fire-fighters.

Dig Down! Come Across! Buy Your Baby Bonds Now!—"Movie" stars urge purchase of Uncle Sam's war saving stamps.—Universal City, Cal. Subtitle: Uncle Sam needs your help! This means YOU!

(New York Only.) Chinese Tong Master Buried As a Christian.—Tom Lee, "Mayor of Chinatown," who brought about peace between the warring Chinese tongs, is laid to rest with Christian ceremonies.—New York City.

Aided by Allies, Italians Halt Great Hun Offensive.—French reinforcements dash across the border into Italy, turning the tide of battle against the Teutons on the Italo-Austrian front. —Somewhere Along the Franco-Italian Border. Subtitles: Arriving in Turin. The Chasseurs, famous light cavalry, on the way to give the Austro-Germans a taste of French steel. M. Painleve, former French Premier, after attending the inter-Allied conference at Milan. Off for the front!

"Ships! Then More Ships!" Is Slogan to Win the War.—One of Uncle Sam's vast shipyards under construction, where fifty vessels may be built at once.—Somewhere on the Atlantic Coast. Subtitles: In the bee-hive of industry, working day and night. The United States controls 113 shipyards. This is one of them. "In these 113 yards there are being built today 1,395 vessels with a total tonnage of 8,246,308, and the greater part will be completed in 1918."—Edward N. Hurley, Chairman U. S. Shipping Board. A battery at work. Pile-driver—not guns. The war will be won with ships, and America will supply them. Shipway No. 1, where, within two weeks, the first keel will be laid.

Official U. S. War Film. America's Mailed Fist Ready to Strike the Hun!—Pershing's field artillerymen learn fascinating art of smashing German trenches.—Somewhere in France. (Released by the Committee on Public Information through the American Red Cross.) Subtitles: Picking up a hot one. Artillery horses are temperamental brutes, at times. The condition of the horses is important, and veterinarians watch them constantly. Grub-time is a festive occasion. The army canteen is popular. The horrors of war can't overcome Yankee chivalry. Uncle Sam's nephews are "Daddies" to the French orphans.

Cartoons from the World's Greatest Newspapers.—"A Case of Now or Never," by Ding, in The Omaha Daily News. "False-Faces," by Harding, in The Brooklyn Eagle. "Only a Matter of Time," by Thomas, in The Detroit News.

ISSUE NO. 36 (Jan. 19).

Turf Favorites Clash in Opening of Winter Racing.—Fast track and 7,000 fans greet "Dick Williams," victor in the inaugural handicap.—New Orleans, La. Subtitles: "They're off." "The glasses—quick! Dick Williams leads!" The winner.

Roaring Pit of Flames Destroys Coast Resort.—Thousands see Hotel Redding completely consumed in most spectacular fire the Pacific Coast has known in years.—Redding, Cal. Subtitles: As usual, Universal cameraman is Johnny-on-the-spot. Blackened and charred skeleton walls crash to earth.

Hee-haw! Bullets Not Only Danger of Army Life.—What makes a mule wild? Ask the Chicago boys of the 108th Engineer train breaking them in for service with Pershing.—Camp Logan, Houston, Texas.

"For Allah and Liberty" is Cry of Nomad Arabs Fighting With the Allies.—In the oasis of Gidda the dare-devil riders of the desert mobilize under the flag of Mecca to wage war on the crescent of the Sultan of Turkey.—Somewhere in the Arabian Desert. Subtitles: Under command of Gen. Djafer Pasha, the tribesmen advance to drive the Turks from the Arabian foothills. Brothers in arms of our own boys, they too fight for Democracy. A Turkish outpost is taken by storm. Dazed by the fanatic zeal of the Arabs, the Turkish garrison surrenders. Turkish prisoners. Blessed be Allah! The children of the desert return victorious. "Ships of the Desert" serve as ambulances for the wounded.

Alaskan "Dogs of War" Aid Famous "Blue Devils."—Among eternal snows of the Vosges Summits powerful Arctic "Huskies" of the Alpine Chasseurs recover wounded from the crags and crevices of the battle-scarred mountain sides.—Somewhere in the Vosges. Subtitle: O'er the often red-dyed carpets of snow the courageous brutes dash to the dressing stations.

Official U. S. War film of Pershing's Boys in France.—"Suicide Squads," as machine gunners are called, learn details of the deadly weapon from French veterans of many battles. (Released by the Committee on Public Information through American Red Cross.) Subtitles: The "gasoline mule" hasn't yet entirely supplanted the famous American jack-ass. Nothing mechanical can long puzzle Yankee ingenuity. Properly directed, a machine gun can cut a breach in a trench wall. "Now for a crack at the aerial slayer of babies!" Pay day in France is as welcome as Sunday on the farm. Every man leaves a bit as payment on a Liberty Bond. Is everybody happy?—oh, boys!

Cartoons from the World's Greatest Newspapers. Subtitles: "He'll Never Find the Keyhole Unless He Sobers Up." By Plaschke in The Louisville Times. "Our Coal Substitute." By Chamberlain in The Philadelphia Evening Telegram. "Smoothing Out Transportation Wrinkles." By Rogers in The New York Herald.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 4 (Jan. 9).

Hoboken, N. J.—Firemen from three cities are called out to fight a disastrous blaze which completely destroys a large paper factory. Subtitles: Nearby munition plants are endangered as the fire spreads. Trying to keep the firemen warm despite the zero weather.

Chicago, Ill.—Thrill after thrill is furnished winter sport fans as the country's champion ice-skaters compete in the annual derby. Subtitles: Hooping it up for the finish. Snow sports, Winchendon, Mass. Childhood days again and the delights of the toboggan slide.

San Pedro, Cal.—Wash-day at the Naval Training Station finds the Jackies right on the job, and like all else, they do the job thoroughly. Subtitles: If mother could see them now; what dutiful sons—of Uncle Sam. You can tell a man by his pets; here's the Jackie's.

Everywhere in France.—All France pays tribute to the memory of her honored dead—her loyal sons who gave their "last full measure of devotion." Subtitles: At the graves of the martyrs; their deeds will live forever. A monument to the sacrifice of humanity that real peace on earth may prevail.

Los Angeles, Cal.—In order to conserve coal for making light and heat, this city opens one of the largest water-power plants in the world. Subtitles: The spillway, where the water takes a 1,000-foot drop. Giant dynamos convert this tremendous power into electricity.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—Most people shudder at zero weather; to others it is a boon. Icemen reap an unusual harvest, due to the long cold spell. Subtitles: The large blocks are then cut into the ordinary size cakes. Ice abounds everywhere. Jack Frost is in all his glory this winter. Scene in Boston Harbor.

Remember LaFayette.—Let us repay our debt to France by each American city adopting a ruined city, is the aim of a national movement started by the Hearst papers. Subtitles: All Northern France is a heap of ruins; scarcely a stone left untouched. On the Aisne. Reims, once a peaceful, prosperous city; this is it now. Chauny after the visit of the Huns; scores of other cities suffered the same fate. A new France is to rise from this ravaged and war-wasted land. She helped us in time of need. Snall we not lend her a helping hand.

Washington, D. C. (Local).—Members of the Capital's fire department utilize spare moments to make trench candles for the boys in camp. Subtitles: The rolls of paper are then dipped into paraffin. Loading a box for shipment to the Red Cross.

Somewhere in New York (Local).—A second contingent of army motor-trucks makes the overland journey to an Atlantic port for shipment to France. Subtitle: In some places the roads are blocked by the heavy snowfalls.

Boston, Mass. (Local).—In the presence of the executives from other New England states, Governor McCall is inaugurated for his next term. Subtitle: The Governors of the New England states and their staffs.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 5 (Jan. 12).

Somewhere in N. Y.—(Except New York.) A second contingent of army motor trucks makes the overland journey to an Atlantic port for shipment to France. Subtitle: In some places the roads are blocked by the heavy snow falls.

New York City.—The Bellevue Hospital Unit is determined to get "Over," and is prepared with the latest life-saving device to defy U-Boats. Subtitles: Presto! Twenty seconds and you are ready to meet any emergency. Icebergs, submarines—nothing in the briny deep can scare this human fish.

Rockland, Me.—(Except New York.) Starting in the business district, a terrible conflagration of unknown origin soon threatens to destroy the entire city. Subtitles: Millions of dollars' damage is done as house after house is consumed. Many buildings are torn down to stop the spread of the fire.

With the Stars and Stripes "Over There."—Official U. S. War films released by the Committee on Public Information through the American Red Cross. Subtitles: The American Expeditionary forces at the training camp in France get their first lessons in handling French machine guns. French chasseurs teach Uncle Sam's boys how to assemble a machine gun. On the target range—getting their eye on old Fritz. Learning how to feed the gun. Returning to camp. The ammunition is hauled in carts drawn by mules. Official War pictures of the activities of the U. S. Army in France will be shown regularly in the Hearst-Pathe News.

San Francisco, Cal.—Only babies these, but see them go! They have their big brothers "skinned a mile" when it comes to speeding it up. Subtitles: And when it's time to get up and get "under"— So close to earth—no room for a smash-up when only the "wheels" go rolling on.

Notice.—The War Department asks the Hearst-Pathe News to announce that: Men who registered in the draft are officially informed that "Signal Corps (Land Division)" should be added to Question 8, on Page 4 of the Questionnaire.

Washington, D. C.—The new War Council, appointed by Secretary Baker in reorganizing his staff for vigirous prosecution of the war: Subtitle: Secretary Baker (center) and General Bliss, Chief of Staff, to his left.

American Aims.—In an epoch-making address to Congress President Wilson clearly and definitely proclaims the goal for which the country is fighting. Subtitles: The Kaiser's plans of Mittel-Europa and world domination. The conditions for a lasting peace as set by the President. Bleeding Belgium must be evacuated and restored, as the first healing act of the world-war. King Albert of Belgium. The right of small nations to live, free and independent, must be definitely and forever settled. "The people of the United States are ready to devote their lives, their honor and everything they possess" to make the world safe for Democracy.

In Arabia.—(For New York City only.) Far in the East, the germs of Democracy have reached the nomads of the desert, and many Arabian tribes enlist in the struggle against the Turks. Subtitles: Emir Faical, King of Hedjaz and Grand Sheriff of Mecca, reviewing some of his troops. Medieval methods of warfare are picturesquely presented as they leave for the front on Camels. Bringing wounded to the base hospital on the oasis of Gidda. A batch of Turkish prisoners. The Arabs have not lost their historic prowess in battle.

THE HIDDEN HAND (Episode No. 8, "The Slide for Life"—Two Parts—Jan. 13).—The cast: Doris Whitney (Doris Kenyon); Doctor Scarley (Sheldon Lewis); Verda Crane (Arline Pretty); Jack Ramsey (Mahlon Hamilton); The Hidden Hand (? ? ?).

As the seventh episode came to a close the Hidden Hand was about to attack Doris and Ramsey as they were escaping from the fire trap. Quick action on the part of Doris supplemented by Ramsey's prowess routs the Hidden Hand, and Doris and Ramsey rescue Verda while the Hidden Hand's house burns up.

Later, at the Whitney home, one of the Hidden Hand's henchmen gives Verda a letter stating that the will is in an Adirondack hunting lodge belonging to Trask, the Whitney lawyer, who was killed. He instructs her to place this in a secret drawer in the library table. Verda follows instructions. While Doris and Ramsey are in the garden the butler discovers the note regarding the will and is reading it when Scarley takes it from him. Doris and Ramsey enter and decide to hasten to the hunting lodge to find the will. Scarley also has the same end in view.

Doris and Ramsey hasten to the hunting lodge and from a distance see Scarley entering. When they reach the lodge they find Scarley bound and gagged. He says he came to save the will and saw the Hidden Hand burning papers in the fireplace. He attacked him but the Hidden Hand overcame him and bound him. Ramsey says the story is false, but Doris is inclined to believe Scarley. Ramsey issues an ultimatum, saying that if Doris believes Scarley and allows him to remain he will go. Scarley says he will not embarrass Doris and leaves. The Hidden Hand's henchmen, who have been accompanied by Verda, tap the telephone wire and ring the bell to the hunting lodge telephone. Ramsey, fearing a trap, answers it with care. As he takes the receiver off the hook a trap-door under the phone drops. The Hidden Hand, who has joined his henchmen, thinks Doris is alone in the hut and sends one of his men to capture her. Ramsey overcomes him and throws him down through the trap door into the cistern beneath the cabin.

When the Hidden Hand and his henchmen advance on the hunting lodge Doris and Ramsey escape. They are pursued and rush over a high bridge. The Hidden Hand has divided his forces and Ramsey and Doris are trapped in the middle of the bridge. A cable from the bridge reaches to the earth many hundreds of feet away. Ramsey, pulling a pair of handcuffs from his pocket, clicks them around his wrists and, with Doris clinging to his waist, swings off from the bridge and they slide down the cable to the ground. One of the Hidden Hand's henchmen takes off his belt and starts to make the same dangerous slide. Doris and Ramsey, in safety, see him coming, and Ramsey draws his revolver, fires at the gangster as he swings along in midair. The bullet finds its mark in the gangster's body. He lets go his hold upon the belt and drops into the river and is carried away by the rapid current. The Hidden Hand stands in helpless rage on the bridge while Doris and Ramsey escape.

HAVE YOU AND HAVE YOU

Ever stopped to consider why a splendid film subject is sometimes killed in projecting to the screen?

Ever stopped to consider why a poor film subject has many times been improved in projecting to the screen?

The answers are—the OPERATING EQUIPMENT and the SCREEN. Watch your screen results and the box results will take care of themselves. CONSULT

Sure Fire Helps to Success

The CHALMERS PUBLISHING CO., publishers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and CINE MUNDIAL, the leading trade papers devoted to the Motion Picture Industry, are also publishers of the only library of practical text books dealing with the cinema art adapted to the every-day needs of those already engaged in the business or about to engage in it.

These text books, six in number, have been written by men carefully selected for their proven knowledge of the subjects to be covered, being almost without exception veteran members of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S editorial staff; entirely without exception these men are at present actively engaged in the motion picture business—they are not dreamers or theorists.

Each text book has been written to provide real help to the individual who reads it—consistent with the unswerving policy of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD—a genuine "Dedication to Service."

Motion Picture Handbook

for Managers and Operators

By F. H. RICHARDSON

IS NOW SUPPLIED WITH

SPEER ALTERNO CARBONS

Perfect Projection Immovable Arc
Noiseless Operation Brilliant Illumination

A bright, flickerless, eye-resting light
No changes required in booth equipment.

By the adoption of special materials, both in the body of the carbon and the core, the Speer Carbon Company is able to offer to the exhibitor and operator a carbon with intensely bright, white light producing qualities. The illuminating qualities of the SPEER "ALTERNO" CARBONS bring out the minute details of the film and yet have a most pleasing effect on the eye.

The operators' difficulties, which included a wandering light, ghosts in the picture, sputtering of the arc, and a noise almost intolerable, have all been relegated to by-gone days. This entire condition has been changed by the introduction of the SPEER "ALTERNO" NOISELESS CARBONS for alternating current.

The exceptional advantages and possibilities now afforded for alternating current counteract the arguments formerly used for the installation of elaborate and expensive apparatus for the changing of alternating current to direct.

Write today for the folder describing SPEER "ALTERNO" CARBONS.

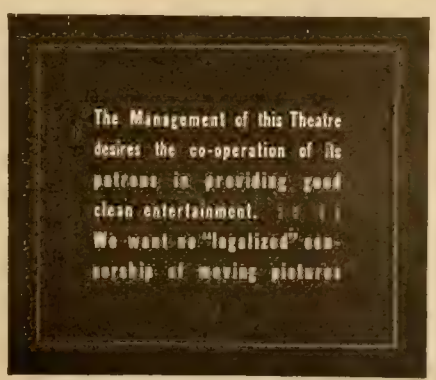
Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship!

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.



The Management of this Theatre
desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good
clean entertainment.
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00

Dear Sirs:

The Hallberg Motor Generator is surely a big improvement. After using it, I wouldn't be without it for twice what it cost. My only regret is that I didn't put it in long before. It is running like a top, and I will endeavor to keep it so. How long should the brushes last? Again assuring you I am perfectly satisfied with the outfit, and trusting you will give me all the information possible as to the upkeep, I am,

Very truly yours,

Dollars-Net!

"Today's matinee closed a two and one-half days' exhibition at The Orpheum of Lois Weber's matchless production, 'THE PRICE OF A GOOD TIME' and I deem it but fair to say that, judged either by box-office receipts or the comments of our patrons, 'THE PRICE OF A GOOD TIME' is one of the most successful pictures ever exhibited in Lincoln, Nebraska.

"Profit, five exhibitions, $447.12."

"Lincoln is blessed with many critical lovers of the motion picture, who lose no opportunity to attack any picture which is in any degree suggestive. IT SPEAKS WELL FOR 'THE PRICE OF A GOOD TIME' THAT WE HAVE HEARD NOTHING BUT WORDS OF HIGHEST PRAISE IN ITS BEHALF."

"JANE EYRE"

Directed by Edward José

Here is the ideal combination:
story plus star plus production!

"A powerful offering of the semi-tragic type!"
—Moving Picture World

"A highly thrilling melodrama in an attractive modern setting!" —N. Y. Morning Telegraph

"Miss Brady's portrayal of Jane Eyre was quite excellent, the great earnestness and sincerity of her manner, conveying as it always does, a most pleasing sense of reality."

with

Chester Conklin, Marie Provost and Gene Rogers

The Champion Cook in the Laughter Kitchen

Mack Sennett's recipes for comedies are world-famous. He makes big laughs and plenty of 'em.

In "His Hidden Purpose" he takes a pretty girl, an old swimming hole, a pile of lingerie, a funny man, a belligerent ram, and a barrel.

Then he mixes them all up into the biggest, wildest batch of joy the "laughter kitchen" has ever turned out.

TRIANGLE

How Do You Value a Picture?

There are different ways. How does this way appeal to you?

The value of a moving picture to an exhibitor is entirely dependent upon the amount of money that it will bring into his box office. This is independent of whether the picture contains a star, is made by any particular producer or is founded on an unusually interesting story.

A photoplay that does not return an exhibitor a reasonable profit is a failure. Beyond question—isn't it?

Our problem is two-fold—first, to distribute pictures that will be box office attractions and second, to sell them to exhibitors at prices that will leave them a profit.

There are a few motion picture stars whose popularity is sufficient to nearly always draw a crowd. Pictures made with these stars have the first requisite of success—that of being box office attractions. If, however, these pictures are sold at prices so exorbitant that exhibitors cannot realize a proper return from them, they lack the second requisite—that of profit. It therefore follows that from the exhibitor's point of view they are not successful productions.

TRIANGLE

The basis of a photoplay is an interesting story. Motion pictures can be made, based on themes of such vital interest and so well produced, that they will contain both requisites of success—box office attractions and money-makers for exhibitors.

The Triangle program offers an exhibitor pictures based on the best stories attainable and made at the largest and best equipped studios in the world.

Triangle pictures are also offered to exhibitors at reasonable prices. Any exhibitor who knows how to present moving pictures can make money with Triangle productions.

We also offer to exhibitors "star" productions—the best pictures ever made by two great film artists—William S. Hart and Douglas Fairbanks. Our policy is still consistent, however, in that we offer these pictures at prices which insure a profit.

The above shows you how we value a picture. As we have stated, we believe that successful productions must be first, box office pictures and second, must be sold at profitable prices to exhibitors.

Does this method of valuing a picture sound reasonable to you?

THE COMING OF TARZAN OF THE APES TO THE BROADWAY THEATRE

SUNDAY, JANUARY 27 FOR AN INDEFINITE RUN SIGNALIZES THE FIRST GREAT OUTSTANDING INCIDENT OF UNUSUAL CHARACTER SINCE THE INTRODUCTION OF MULTIPLE REEL PRODUCTIONS

DURING 1916-1917

NO NOVEL FEATURE, NO SUBJECT OF POPULAR IMPORT, NO FILM AWAY FROM THE CONVENTIONAL DRAMA WAS OFFERED THE PUBLIC. Features were exploited for short runs for the purpose of enhancing booking or attracting attention of state right buyers --- BUT THE MARKET HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BARREN OF PICTURES BIG ENOUGH TO ATTRACT PROFITABLE PATRONAGE BY REASON OF ITS POPULARITY OR IMMENSITY.

JANUARY 27, 1918

WILL SEE THE FIRST PRESENTATION OF THE MOST REMARKABLE ---SPLENDID---STRANGE WORK THE WORLD OF MOTOGRAPHY EVER CONCEIVED FROM THE REALM OF FICTION.

TARZAN OF THE APES WAS PUBLISHED IN 6000 DAILY PAPERS WITH THIRTY MILLION READERS. 1,700,000 books have been sold. It has run twice in serial form in many newspapers. It has never been paralelled before, it will never be duplicated.

Washington's Finest and Largest Photo-Play Theatres are well managed and prosperous—come down and look us over—we'll bear inspection.

As owners of more theatres than any other individual or theatre company in Washington, my associates and myself desire to go on record to all exhibitors, exchangemen and producers, with some undisputed facts—

—no one man or firm in Washington owns eighteen theatres;

—there are not five strictly first-run houses in the downtown section of Washington;

—we have never been bull-dozed by a producer or an exchange, nor have we ever bull-dozed an exchange or producer;

—we have been oversold at times, but we have also been undersold;

—we have always obtained fair adjustments from the exchange whenever we sought them;

—we use the following pictures: Artcraft, Paramount, Select, Goldwyn, Metro, World, Vitagraph, and the prestige of such productions assure our exclusive standing.

This plain statement of facts should forever lay at rest all misleading notices that have been printed regarding the Washington situation.

What They Say About

"THE EAGLE'S EYE"

By

WILLIAM J. FLYNN

Recently Retired

CHIEF OF THE U. S. SECRET SERVICE!

¶ "A photoplay serial that will serve as a strong reminder of the danger the United States has run from the Kaiser's representatives at Washington.

"Excellent entertainment * * * realistic."

—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

¶ "It is the first time that this reviewer has heard applause from the blasé critics at a private showing of any motion picture. Will create a positive sensation. Held everyone breathless. 'The Eagle's Eye' simply great. Its authenticity cannot be doubted.

"For pep, ginger, excellent photography, thrills, excitement, and patriotism galore 'The Eagle's Eye' starts a new era in the silent drama."

—Billboard.

—Exhibitors' Herald.

—N. Y. Herald.

¶ "Many important facts and the nature of many conspiracies made public for the first time. Exhibitors will find that they have not room enough to hold the people who will want to see and follow this serial. 'The Eagle's Eye' is more than a fine serial, it is a great serial, and any manager that shows it is doing his patrons a service."

—Dramatic Mirror.

¶ "Bound to win nation-wide approbation. Presents many facts not hitherto revealed. Exhibitors could not show a more effective drawing card."

—Morning Telegraph.

¶ "'The Eagle's Eye' is one of the best serials ever produced. The story is full of thrills and each episode is more exciting than the preceding one.

"Box office value. Full run everywhere."

—N. Y. Clipper.

¶ "The Eagle's Eye" is without parallel in the importance of its subject. No other serial has ever approached it in public interest and the intimacy of its theme in the mind of every American. Its twenty stirring episodes show the startling facts of what actually was planned and attempted by the Imperial German Government's spies in America—every fact vouched for by Chief Flynn.

"PICK O' THE PLAYS"

A MAN'S MAN

"Our Opinion," from
Screen Opinions

This is a light-hearted affair, full of action and fun, very well acted, with settings that look good, and good, clean-cut photography. The story is a breezy, entertaining tale, and there are chuckles all the way through. Kerrigan takes the part of the impulsive, reckless, happy-go-lucky Webster in good shape, although he is given a trifle to crowding up front stage whenever the opportunity presents. The cast has been well chosen. The big scenes—the scenes of the revolution and the fighting in the streets, have been handled very well. We would label this one a very worth-while picture that should please almost any audience of ordinary intelligence.

MADAM WHO

"Our Opinion," from
Screen Opinions

There isn't a let-up of interest throughout the entire seven reels of this Civil War play. Both the action and acting are fine. The story is told clearly, although it is a tangled plot, and the suspense is worked out very well. There are many film scenes of the Civil War -and many tense moments. We'll say it's a ripping, gripping war drama. Perhaps the idea of its being a war drama will discount its value somewhat, but seeing as it is a Civil War play and has nothing to do with the present strife, we hardly believe it will. Good music will help it immensely. The print reviewed was rather dark.

ROBERT BRUNTON, Manager of Productions

A PARALTA-BARRISCALE-PLAY

Writing in the Picture Play Magazine, the greatest critic in the United States, Mr. Alan Dale, says:—

"'Madam Who' is a particularly excellent picture. Miss Barriscale can give points to many a star who relies upon her 'emotional possibilities.' The 'close-ups' of Miss Barriscale's horror-stricken features are most vivid and admirable. It is the best piece of emotional work that I have seen in many a day, and some of our 'legitimate' stars might feel proud of it.

"Scenes in a night camp, and the view of a burning city and its evacuation, with rioting and pillage, lift 'Madam Who' into a prominent position. I should say that it is a distinct advance in the picture art—and I emphasize the word 'art.' Here's my hat off to Miss Barriscale."

WHY not address the moving picture exhibitor in the trade paper that he buys and reads? ¶You can print a sales message on a hand-bill and the arguments you offer why your goods should be bought will be just as strong in themselves as they could be printed in any other way. But the hand-bill has no standing in the eyes of the man that it reaches, and your sales message loses its punch because it is not received with an advance interest. ¶The MOVING PICTURE WORLD enjoys the highest standing as a medium for advertising in the moving picture trade. Facts and Comments

THERE is an encouraging bit of information elsewhere in this issue concerning the condition of business in a number of important centers of the United States and of Canada, reported by MOVING PICTURE WORLD correspondents. The critical reader will find much in these reports to justify the conclusion that the picture business is not going to the demnition bowwows after all. The general tone of these reports is optimistic, notwithstanding the fact that they were written at a time when weather conditions and coal shortage were about at their worst.

These reports should put a stop to the stories that have been given out by certain members of the trade who can see nothing but calamity and failure ahead of them. It is well to remember, when our little band of knockers get their hammers out, that they really represent themselves alone and that the conditions they complain of are their own troubles and not those of the trade at large. In the very nature of things this business of ours is too big and too important to fail utterly. The force of thousands of men and millions of dollars is too great to be so easily overcome.

MOTION pictures have been given credit for doing a lot of things beside turning dull hours into pleasant ones for picture theater patrons. Without enumerating the picture's many accomplishments we note the latest—a booster of real estate values. This does not include the operation by which the profiteering landlord demands three hundred dollars a month rental for a picture theater location which brought him only thirty dollars as a grocery store. B. A. Aughinbaugh, a school principal at Mingo, Ohio, tells about it in a story printed in this issue regarding the work he is doing with pictures in a country district. "Have we succeeded in our original intention?" he asks, and answering his own question he says: "Time is too short to report that, but I do know that a farm recently changed hands here at three hundred dollars per acre, that a year ago would not have brought half that sum, because the purchaser said he wanted to live here where the community was alive."

In effect the work of the enterprising school principal with motion pictures had made attractive a farm region that was previously as dead as the proverbial doornail, all of which should stir the imagination for the motion picture man who is looking for more fields to conquer.

THE mania for mergers that has been occupying the attention of the merry gossips of the trade has resulted in another "boomer." The five-company combination distributing interests which was talked about has gone into the discard. It was an ambitious plan but investigation revealed the incompatibilty of the interests concerned, so the plan was dropped. Theater mergers, though, seem to be going on as usual and time may reveal something startling along that line.

Something like a merger has taken place within the Paramount organization. The Paramount and Artcraft distributing corporations have ceased to exist legally and the Famous Players-Lasky companies become the parent organization. All branch exchanges, of which the Paramount and Artcraft corporations owned but fifty-one per cent., are now exclusively owned by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

NOTICE TO THE TRADE.

Commencing Monday, January 28, the offices of the Moving Picture World will be closed on that and each Monday thereafter up to and including Monday, March 25, in accord with the order of the Federal Fuel Administrator.

As a consequence thereof the Moving Picture World will close its forms on Tuesday of each week during that embargo, circulating in the mails and on the newsstands one day later than usual.

Exhibitors in the Lead

By Louis Reeves Harrison

DO YOU know why old Sock-and-Buskin is getting worried? His theaters are only half filled with people who buy their tickets, while there is a solid line at the box office of leading picture shows, with many small ones doing business "as usual." Not only the regular theatres, but the vaudeville houses, are suffering from a depression unprecedented in the history of the amusement world, and they don't seem to have the faintest idea why. They say it is "The War" in an indefinite sort of way and let it go at that. Meanwhile, in all parts of the country, veritable palaces are being erected for presenting pictures, and they are generously patronized when managed with skill.

Of course there are failures—there always will be—and men who are never satisfied to make good money, but, like hungry Oliver Twist, are always calling for "More," but a trip across the continent recently made by a keen observer revealed very little pessimism among live exhibitors, but to the contrary, a healthy optimism and a vigorous progressive tendency which promises much for the future of moving pictures. I have made a small personal examination of conditions through traveling men, and reports all indicate a sense of confidence opposed in every particular to the attitude of gloom shown by most trade papers.

The tendency to exaggerate the evils of any business is a bad one. It helps no one. And, if the truth be told, it reflects a sort of small-town spirit, that of limited vision, which cannot see beyond very restricted limitations. I make this assertion, and I can back it up, that the picture shows of this country would be crowded, every one of them, if they were given the right kind of product to exhibit.

Reduced to a very simple proposition, the motion-picture exhibitor is giving the public a better run for its money than can be found in any other form of indoor entertainment. Where he is not doing so it is not from lack of the right spirit, but from lack of facilities or from faulty judgment, and these cases constitute the occasional exceptions to a very general rule. The right spirit prevails, and, more than that, the motion picture exhibitor is less hampered by tradition and far more progressive than the average theatrical producer.

The Old Showman, who has a lot of faithful followers, both behind the scenes and in front, plays on a Chinese fiddle of one string and never sings but one song, "Give the People What They Want," from one year to another without variation. Why not? It sounds good to him. "It is not our business," he says, "to educate, but to cater to public taste." What has been done shall always be done. There is no need of attempting to change his mind—it is that of the turnip, feed, seed and die. And he imagines the rest of us are turnips.

The present world upheaval has no other meaning for the Old Showman than that it interferes with his business. At a time when our minds are aflame, our hearts throbbing their utmost, because of great vital issues we are called upon to meet, he announces that certain old theatrical stars will appear in certain old stage successes of the past. This is "giving the people what they want" with a vengeance. At the same moment, thousands upon thousands of moving picture patrons are applauding educationals more than they are reflection of popular plays of other days—there is about as much real live material of present interest in our features as there is nutriment in a turnip.

Go to any big picture show in the country, where the finest of feature plays and the finest of educationals are shown and note which is received with most favor. The people never went to the exhibitor and told him, "We want educationals." He was bold enough to give the people what they should have. The motion picture exhibitor of today is nearly a generation ahead of the theatrical producer in that one respect.

Why is it that there is not a good orchestra in any New York legitimate theatre today? Motion picture houses have gobbled up all the best musicians. Even the merry vaudeville houses are suffering—and such a headache! Their orchestras consist of the cornet-a-pistons, superlatively loud and blaring, with the weak support of a piano and a handful of other musical instruments, and a leader who tries to help the actors be funny at pitiful moments. Their masterpiece is "What d'ye want to make those eyes at me for?" This is supposed to be "what the people want" by the average vaudeville manager.

While the long-suffering people who like a good variety performance are good-naturedly tolerating the star, a lady who was good thirty-five years ago, or listening to imitations of Anna Held, Eddy Foy and Eva Tanguay, or the corseted young man with a nicely made-up face, who has a pianist of his own, and shows a new set of teeth while singing with a breath of perfumed cigarettes, "Over they-re, Over they-re," or the two Jew comedians, with derby hats pulled back on their ears, some of the grandest music ever heard in New York is being given to the people in splendid motion picture houses and receiving ovation after ovation from audiences which pack those places from orchestra to dome four and five times a day seven days in the week.

Though I have had nothing to do with the executive part of this splendid work, I rejoice down in my secret heart. Right in this same cozy corner of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, four, five, six, and even seven years ago, I constantly urged the exhibitor to give his audience a beautiful combination of music and the picture, if he would succeed in the highest degree. It is a pleasure to watch those visions of long ago gradually materialize, palaces of grandeur and beauty rise like those of Aladdin where were none at all. On every train of thought there should be at least one man at the front looking ahead.

Exhibitors are not only far in advance of theatrical managers, but they are gradually evolving ideas and ideals which may compel a revolution in producing and distributing methods. The exhibitor may not be theoretical—he may be very practical—but he will take a chance, try something new to see how it goes, explore as he goes along, partly because he has been venturesome from the outset. He is like the pioneer who started this country going, not easily discouraged by an occasional set back, ready to adapt himself to conditions which cannot be helped, or to forge ahead through sheer power of grit.

This does not mean he is infallible. It means that he is a tremendous factor in the progress of this new art toward a future undreamed of in our present philosophy. He is neither a crank nor a pessamist because he is not satisfied with what has been done and is now going on—he is inclined to use his influence and direct his efforts toward advancement and improvement, regardless of those producers and those trade papers who oppose innovation and change. He is moving onward toward those more influential forms of entertainment which the people should have.

Mystery or Art

By Edward Weitzel

ONE of the blessings in this life vouchsafed earnest souls is the joy of discovery, although scores have followed the identical path before, and many a Christopher Columbus, searching the domains of art, has brought back word of the same wonderful land. This is a wise provision. It is only just that seekers after the truth should feel the glow of pride that comes from discovering a gleam of knowledge. even if a little careful research would have revealed the fact that this same beam of light was known to workers in this field of endeavor the world over.

Current Opinion in its January number quotes from an article in the Los Angeles Times Illustrated Magazine devoted to the art of the Japanese actor, Sessue Hayakawa, and asks, "Is the higher art of the movies to come from Japan?" The reason for this query was the following scene which took place when the actor's associates saw his efforts in "The Cheat" thrown on the screen for the first time:

"It was the spectacle of an actor who could register great emotional effects without moving a muscle of his face. It dawned upon them, as it has probably dawned upon others, that this Japanese screen star was calling upon mysterious sources of power of which we western people know nothing. Questioned on the subject, Hayakawa gave a characteristically oblique answer. 'We are all trained from childhood never to betray emotion with our faces. We had an actor in Japan named Danjuro who could sway an audience more powerfully than Billy Sunday. He didn't fling his arms about. He didn't move a muscle. He stood in the center of the stage absolutely motionless, his face absolutely without expression. He stood there rigid until it seemed as if you must scream to relieve the tension.'

"Hayakawa, on the screen, obtains his most pronounced effects by this same repressed method. He refutes the theory that motion pictures can never tell a great story because there are no words; that subtle, psychological effects cannot be shown simply by gestures. On the contrary: 'Words are the crude things. It is words that cannot tell a subtle story.' 'But gestures? Can you tell the story of a man's soul struggle by wriggling your hands?'

"'I do not wriggle my hands," said Hayakawa with dignity. 'Neither do I make gestures. If I want to show on the screen that I hate a man I do not shake my fist at him. I think down in my heart how I hate him and try not to move a muscle of my face; just as I would in life.'

"The truth is that this Japanese has opened to the western world ideas on art to which we were strangers and still are strangers and always will be, perhaps."

The soundness of Hayakawa's views on the higher art of the screen is beyond dispute; but it is not given to all motion picture actors to employ the same method with equal results. That it is something the western world has never known and may never understand or that it comes from "mysterious sources of power of which we western people know nothing" is a bit of fine writing that will bring a smile to the face of any good American who ever saw Minnie Maddern Fiske in "The Light from St. Agnes'." The play is a tragedy in one act, and what Hayakawa says of Danjuro standing motionless or of his own way of expressing hate would apply, word for word, to Mrs. Fiske's acting in the strongest scene of her play.

The part the American actress takes is that of the mistress of a drunken, sullen brute, who learns that she has come under the influence of a sister at a nearby church, and threatens to leave him. The good woman who wrought the change of heart in the wretched girl is now lying dead in the church just beyond. As the drink-crazed man sits eating his supper and muttering threats against his companion and the dead sister, the repentant girl stands looking out of the window, motionless, expressionless, but every thought that is passing through her mind is conveyed to the audience with that same subtle power employed by the Japanese. You read the bitterness and self-loathing that have come to her now that she realizes for the first time her own sin and shame. Finding that he cannot shake her determination to leave him, the man threatens to go to the church and drag the body of the nun into the street. The girl springs forward to stop him, and he strangles her to death. The morning sun, reflected on the gold cross on the spire of the church, streams in at the window and shows a crucifix clasped in the dead Magdalen's hands. The actress makes the entire play marvelously impressive; but never more so than when she stands by the window silent and motionless.

There isn't any mumbo-jumbo to this: just the natural result of intelligence, feeling and a real genuis for acting. Its psychology should not be difficult to understand, if many of the commonest experiences of life are recalled. Even the human back is capable of expressing several degrees of emotion; and, under certain conditions, silence becomes positively eloquent. The application of this law to its fullest extent will give the screen a power that is not limited to the actors of the mysterious East.

Humanizing History

By Robert C. McElravy

J. N. DARLING, or perhaps it was the inimitable Mr. Briggs, had an amusing cartoon in The New York Tribune not long ago, in which the small boy of the future was pictured gazing at a bulky volume just being brought to a close by an old man representing the year 1917. The old man was looking down at the startled youth and saying, "Just wait till you get to me, young man!"

There certainly is an interminable amount of history in the making these days, and coming generations will find many additional chapters demanding the closest possible study if they would understand events prior to and immediately following the memorable month of August, 1914.

But the small boy of the future is going to have one great aid in his historical researches that men of the present day did not have. That aid will be moving pictures. He will not have to dig for all his facts through heavy and dreary volumes; he will not have to exercise his imagination in wondering what kind of a man the Kaiser was; he will not have to speculate vaguely about air raids and trench warfare and the submarine. He will find reel upon reel of valuable data in moving picture form to enlighten him; he will have "canned" history of the most graphic and thrilling sort to make things easier for him.

It is doubtful if even adult persons of today are fully awake to the tremendous extent of this record of current events that has been accomplished by the camera. It has mirrored and reflected back in scattered form, through the medium of weekly and semi-weekly pictorial reviews, all sorts of sidelights on the great war. The average observer has caught entertaining glimpses, here and there, of war preparations in the various countries, Red Cross relief work, troops in training, visiting commissions and close-ups of prominent statesmen and military leaders. But the record has gone further than this. Intrepid cameramen have gone into the very heart of battle to get pictures of war in its most awful form; they have penetrated No Man's Land with the boys going over the top; they have gone up in warplanes and swept the battle fields below with their cameras. Some of this has been done as the result of individual nerve and enterprise and much of it has been by official military appointment.

Taken altogether, when the weekly reviews have been sifted down and the three-reel and five-reel collections of war views have been enumerated and itemized, there is going to be an invaluable legacy to pass on to future generations. The life of the negatives on which these views have been taken is problematical, but it is to be hoped that inventive genius will find some way to preserve their usefulness for the ages. Some way should be devised to make this pictorial record as everlasting as the pyramids.

Schools and colleges, libraries and all sorts of institutions of an educational sort will need copies of these pictures. They will play as important a role in the historical curriculum of the future as compendiums like Gibbon's "Rome" or Carlyle's "History of the French Revolution." They will, indeed, supplement the written accounts of the present war in an illuminating way. History will be humanized and brought home to the student as never before. He will see the Kaiser reviewing his troops before the camera months before the war began and thus gain something of an idea of Germany's immense preparations; he will have views of the shattered towns and cities of Belgium, France, Serbia and other countries invaded by the foe; he will have glimpses of cabinet and parliamentary meetings in the countries involved; he will see Kerensky and Lenine in oratorical combat before the freed hosts of Russia; he will see President Wilson stating the American terms of peace to the foes of freedom. Great men of the present will never be as aloof to the world as men like Napoleon and George Washington must remain.

So it will not be such hard sailing for the boy student of the future as might be imagined. The moving picture seems destined to be a great aid in teaching the young idea how to shoot, or how not to shoot, whichever is to be the lesson he will draw from the world agony of the present day.

Bright Spots

By Sam Spedon.

WITH apologies to Lina Guilbert Ford, we quote the following with a slight change:

"There's a silver lining through the dark clouds shining—
Turn the dark clouds inside out till the "biz" comes back."

Instead of pointing out all the dark spots in the present crisis through which we are passing, let us point out a few of the bright ones.

The public is cheerfully paying the war tax on admissions. The Government didn't oblige the theaters to shut down during the five consecutive heatless days, nor the one heatless day a week. They were allowed to remain open on the ten proscribed Mondays and close on Tuesdays, as requested, instead. The fifteen-cent war tax imposed by producers is practically done away with, or greatly modified.

As an evidence of confidence in the future we have new theaters being opened and erected in different parts of the country. Also new producing companies starting. An old theatrical manager in New York, for instance, is building a new studio and a new chain of theaters in various cities. Another indication is the taking over of the old Lubin studio, in Philadelphia which is being remodeled preparatory to extensive producing. We are not saying whether the entrance of these new enterprises is going to benefit the industry or not, but they are indicative of a looked for boom and abiding faith in the increasing possibilities and the stability of the industry.

We have all had our fling about the threatened shut down of five days, the coal shortage and railroad congestion, blaming the Government for its lack of wisdom and its shortsightedness. Those of us who lived at that time will call to mind the blizzard of 1888, when business all over the country was paralyzed for ten days or more. The writer will never forget it—he was married that year. The civic government learned a lot through that blizzard. Today we are all benefited by it. We can't blame the Government for clogging up the river with ice, so we in New York and the East can't get coal that is in sight in New Jersey. If blizzards, earthquakes and other vagaries of the elements are endured because they can't be cured, we should accept the inevitable conditions of war with the same becoming grace for the good of the rest of mankind and the establishment of democracy and enduring peace. We have all got to grin and bear it. The more we grin the sooner and easier we will get through it. No use trying to fool ourselves or anybody else by saying it should be as good as it was. It never will be the same. It was abnormal. Don't borrow trouble. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." We feel like quoting poetry again. If we quote correctly, Longfellow said:

"Let us then be up and doing
With a heart of any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing;
Learn to labor and to wait."

Echoes From Tuesday's Closing

By Sam Spedon.

TWENTY exhibitors gathered together last Wednesday, made loud and vehement protestations against one of the distributing companies for charging them for rental on Tuesday when they were closed by the Government. They said all the other companies made no charge for that day, willing to bear their share of the patriotic sacrifice made for the welfare of the nation. Even where they had made a contract for a feature for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday most of the companies canceled Tuesday's showing. The exhibitors thought that this was rubbing it in by this same company and made it appear as if they were still further trying to pass its share of war taxes on to the exhibitors.

Not a Blue Monday

In almost every instance the theaters report a land office business on last Monday. They say they made enough money that day to cover Tuesday's overhead and pay their help on that day. They noted that many persons who attended the first showing stayed for the second. They found the theaters so comfortable they stayed in to keep out of the cold.

Old Home Day

Tuesday, while their theaters were closed, was a busy day for the managers. They found time to go over their books and arrange their advance programs, not to mention a chance to get acquainted with their families.

S. R. O. at Exchanges

Wednesday morning found the exchanges crowded with exhibitors all intent on making arrangements for new bookings to meet and discuss the Tuesday closing question, particularly Lincoln's Birthday, which falls on Tuesday, February 12th.

World Correspondents Describe Business Conditions

Cold Weather and Scarcity of Fuel Hurting Attendance, but the Situation Generally Is Sound

THE Moving Picture World herewith presents to its readers a resume of business conditions in the United States and Canada. From all points east of the Mississippi River come complaints of cold weather and scarcity of fuel. These unexpected complications of a situation already none too good by reason of the rising prices of commodities and the concentration in practically every household on Liberty Bonds have operated against the exhibitor of motion pictures. It is a combination of circumstances against which there could have been no provision. While it has hurt, it is reasonable to assume from a reading of the letters that the injury is not serious—that when weather conditions again are normal and the country straightens out for its full strength drive against its enemies the motion picture again will come into its own.

We commend to our readers the interesting letter from our Toronto correspondent, immediately following, wherein Mr. Gladish points out that the experience of Canadian picture men during the last three and a half years probably may serve as an example of what showmen in the United States may expect to encounter in the coming year or more. The correspondent says that in Canada the country undoubtedly is in a stronger position than it ever has been before—and it is so because of the war; that they are doing things not on account of the war, but because of the war.

While there is pessimism in some sections, we think our readers will agree that taking the situation by and large there is justification for optimism, that the story six months from now, or even less, will be a different tale. But here is what the correspondents have to say:

Conditions in Canada Fair to Good.

Moving picture business conditions in Ontario are fair to good, generally speaking. This statement is based on the reports of numerous exhibitors and the words of a number of exchange managers in this territory, as well as indications apparent to the writer.

During the first year of the war, conditions were generally regarded as poor. During the third year of the war, Ontario exhibitors practically all admitted that they were making money. The statement was made quite often during 1917 that money could be made out of any theater in Canada, providing ordinary horse-sense and showmanship methods were used, no matter how long the house in question had been considered a white elephant in previous years. Proof of this declaration was seen in the manner in which several dark houses in Toronto had been reopened and were being continued in operation. Two small theaters on Yonge street, Toronto's main thoroughfare, were not reopened, however, because there did not seem to be enough exhibitors to go around and the existence of the two houses did not seem to be necessary.

Then came the slump in December, 1917. For many reasons, the combination of which was well nigh killing, the bottom dropped out of things temporarily. There was a big Government loan campaign, Federal and municipal elections, the Halifax disaster, very bad weather, Christmas shopping—everything but bad war news. Immediately after the holidays, however, business again bounded upward and exhibitors are once more smiling.

The trend of events in Canada during the past four years probably serve as an example of what may happen in the United States during the next year or two, because it is plainly evident to this warring race of Canadians that the people of the U. S. A. are passing through the same experiences that were felt in the Dominion during the first year of the war for Canada. The same excitements, thrills, qualms, hesitations, doubts and determinations are being noticed in the American Republic from the Canadian viewpoint. Canada now seems to be holding fast, however, in spite of all adverse influences. This country weathered the storm and is now more or less cocky in viewing the manner of doing things. The country is undoubtedly in a stronger position than it has ever been before because of the war. The people seem to be more independent and fearless of threatening obstacles. They are doing things not on account of the war, but because of the war. Note the fine distinction?

Rentals are somewhat higher in Ontario these days than they were two or three years ago, but the exchanges declare that the exhibitors are getting far better value. Then, the slight advances in rental charges are only in keeping with the general increases in all other fields. But there are yet quite a number of exhibitors right in Toronto, who are not paying more than $60 a week for complete film service with paper. These houses are not running junk pictures either.

Canadian exchanges are complaining that they are up against it far more than the exhibitors in the field. They complain of the vast territory which they are called upon to cover for comparatively small business. Out in British Columbia, for instance, fourteen exchange companies are trying to do business, it is pointed out, when there are only sixty-two theatres to be served. The Winnipeg offices of the exchange companies cover the Province of Manitoba, part of Saskatchewan at least and the northern section of the Province of Ontario. There are probably only two hundred theatres in this vast expanse. Toronto exchange offices have it comparatively easy with about three hundred theatres under their thumb. Montreal exchanges are also doing quite well with the several hundred theatres in their territory. In the Maritime Provinces, however, there is another problem. Most every distributing house must have a branch in St. John, N. B., and exchange officials frequently declare that the cost of exchange licenses, overhead expense and many other details make the business in that section anything but a gold mine. Yet they continue to give the exhibitors there what they want. Canadian exchanges with six offices are called upon to cover a territory practically equal to the area of the whole United States, and the number of theatres in Canada does not exceed nine hundred. On account of this situation, there has been much talk of amalgamations and withdrawals. Several amalgamations have taken place recently, while one company has just closed its branches in Winnipeg and Vancouver in order to reduce overhead expenses.

The exchanges continue to insist that the exhibitors are doing fair business while the officials of some exchanges declare that they are doing far more business than they did two years ago. Manager Barrett, of the Toronto Vitagraph office, for instance, voices the opinion that his latest business returns are splendid and he is particularly optimistic about conditions. There are others.

The large theatres in the big centres have not been getting all the business. Two or three large houses have been giving cause for worry, but locations, policies and other features are partly to blame. There is very little competition any more between the photoplay houses and the legitimate theatres because the former have been getting a great share of business. One actor of the speaking stage recently declared in Toronto that the stage play companies would soon have to carry their own audiences around with them in order to be sure of having them. Several large film theaters have been opened in Toronto recently and, in each instance, the cry has been that there are enough theaters already and that the new-comers would surely fail. One new house was said to be too far away from anything to amount to much. Yet this theater has made good from the start. The Toronto vaudeville houses have been playing to capacity for months. Another big Loew theatre is contemplated for Toronto and will be built this year, it is declared. These houses owe a measure of success to the pictures which they play up in all newspaper advertising.

A Loew theater seating 2,900 was opened in Hamilton, Ontario, on New Year's Eve. Hamilton has a population of 110,000 and a house of this size was immediately classed as a tremendous enterprise for such a city when there were already a number of good houses already on the ground. Yet it is reported that 38,000 Hamilton people paid admissions at the new theater during the first five and one-half days of its operation. A large exclusively film theater in Montreal has been enjoying spasmodic success during the past five months, but it is apparently holding its own in spite of the fact that the house passed into the hands of a liquidator one year ago. The location of this theater is said to be its drawback, but yet it is being operated more or less successfully. If it could only be moved a few blocks it would be a huge success.

Ontario exhibitors do not enjoy the privilege of giving Sunday performances of any kind and, therefore, the exhibitors of the Province of Quebec have a far better chance of profiting. In Quebec they grind out the pictures hour after hour all day long for seven days in the week. In Ontario comparatively few houses hold matinee performances at all. Ontario exhibitors frequently complain that films which they receive after being used in Montreal are in rotten shape because of the manner in which they are punished with overwork. Many exchange men display a preference for the Quebec field because they declare that there is more money in the business in that territory than in Ontario. Sunday shows make the difference, it is declared.

Arthur Cohen, controlling three moving picture theaters in Toronto, recently declared that the people want entertainment and diversion and not amusement in the plain sense during war trials. That is the reason, he said, that moving picture theatres were doing well.

A notable development in the moving picture business in Ontario during the past year has been the employment of lobby displays to attract the people. Exhibitors are learning that a special front helps materially in drawing the crowds. Two years ago no lobby displays were ever seen in Toronto. Now most everybody is doing something more with posters than merely slapping them against the frames. They've come to the cutouts, scene reproductions and large signs. This feature undoubtedly has helped to stimulate and maintain healthy business.

A number of local exhibitors have told the writer on occasions during the past six months that they wished they could get to their brothers in the States with an assuring message to the effect that they need not be afraid of war's effect upon their business. They had been through the mill during the past three and a half years and they had become blase in the face of war's burdens and drains, taxes or no taxes.

Little Trouble at Cincinnati.

In spite of the war tax, which has made amusements of all sorts, including moving pictures, more expensive than formerly, and in spite of the tendency toward saving and economy caused by the war itself, with its demands for conservation of all sorts, Cincinnati moving picture exhibitors have as a rule suffered little, if any, in the volume of business they have handled. That is, they have not been able to attribute any reduction in business to the war or to causes growing out of the war. It is true that so far this winter business has run considerably below the average with most exhibitors, but this seems to be due entirely to the really frightful weather conditions experienced. Early in December, and again at this writing, temperatures below zero, accompanied by heavy snows, made it difficult or impossible for people to get out, either to go to picture shows or for any other purpose, and, at the same time, the fuel shortage, which affected gas as well as coal, made it hard for exhibitors to keep their houses warm. These causes, of course, affected attendance; but they have nothing to do with the war, except in so far as the coal shortage is due to the war. Certainly the great struggle cannot be blamed for the bad weather, although there are theorists who have been trying to do exactly that.

While several small houses have closed in Cincinnati during the past year, in no case can this be traced to bad business due to the war. On the other hand, there have been a number of sales lately, indicating that a moving picture house is still regarded as a good buy, and the completion of the handsome Gifts theater, by McMahan & Jackson, together with the fact that the work of the Palace Amusement Company on its beautiful new building and theater is going right ahead, proves pretty thoroughly that the leaders in the business have no fear of conditions in 1918.

There are some exhibitors who view the future with a gloomy eye; but there are always exhibitors who look on the future this way, and who could anticipate bad crops and so forth if the war did not give them a more prominent reason for pessimism. As a matter of fact, while it is all but certain that the big "legitimate" houses, with their high charges, have suffered and will continue to suffer in business, for the simple reason that people will not pay high prices for amusements under war conditions, this very fact makes it the more probable that people will continue to resort to the ten-cent or fifteen-cent moving picture house for their amusement. Recreation is demanded, and pictures furnish it in the best and most economical form.

It is also pointed out, with plenty of striking object lessons at hand, that while it is not difficult to move films from producers to exchanges and from exchanges to exhibitors, moving big theatrical companies, with heavy scenery and equipment, is another matter. The present transportation tangle has emphasized this fact, and has already hampered seriously the road schedules of companies making even the larger cities. This, again, seems to leave the stage clear for the moving-picture exhibitor, so to speak.

In Cincinnati, as well as in most other cities, industrial activity, caused either directly or indirectly by the war, is tremendous, and employment is consequently easy to obtain at relatively high wages. This means that the wage-earner has plenty of money, and it is hardly likely that he will deny to himself and his wife and children so clean and inexpensive an amusement as the moving picture theater affords. Rather experience has already shown that he will in no wise reduce his visits, but will come just as often as ever, and will pay cheerfully the added pennies which go to help Uncle Sam carry on the war.

Conditions Good in Maritime Provinces.

Business conditions throughout the territory are generally pretty good, though owing to weather conditions the attendance at theaters has not been nearly so large. In one town on the North Shore of New Brunswick business was reported as very poor. Another manager is only running the theater four nights each week, but on the other hand we hear good reports from other sources. The war stress is certainly telling on the spending of extra money, and the raising of prices will make a slight change in attendance. I cannot hear of the closing of any houses and the building of new ones certainly looks as if the business were profitable. A new theater, the Nickel, has opened in St. John and all the others are still open to good business apparently.

Big Munitions Plant Will Help Nashville.

The general business situation among Nashville moving picture theaters has been below normal for the year just ended, although the slump was not as great, on a comparative basis, as in some other southern cities for the same period. Cold weather of an excessive nature has held sway in this city for the past few weeks, and this, together with the shortage of fuel, has greatly impaired normal operating conditions. Many of the houses which have continued to face the extreme weather have been insufficiently heated, although only one house, the Alhambra, has closed its doors for as much as a single day. The Alhambra is the smallest and less important of the Crescent Amusement Company's string of theaters, and is a five-cent house. It opened after one day of darkness.

Moving picture men are extremely optimistic over the fact that the Government will expend $60,000,000 immediately in establishing a munitions plant in Nashville, and the greatest boom the South has ever known has already started. Construction work will begin just as soon as the titles are clear, which will be within a few days. New railroad lines, new industries and increased prosperity to the entire South are foreseen for the future, and the great plant will be a permanent fixture to this section. Military cantonments and similar projects do not begin to approach the magnitude of the new Government enterprise, and the best part about it is that it will bring a permanent increase of from 40,000 to 45,000 people to Nashville. From 15,000 to 25,000 men will be employed, 8,000 of this number to be engaged in its construction. These employees, with their wives and families, are destined to bring many thousands of dollars into Nashville moving picture box offices.

Satisfactory Situation in San Francisco.

Business conditions in the moving picture industry in the San Francisco territory are regarded as being quite satisfactory. But one theater in this field, which embraces more than two-thirds of California, has been closed as a direct result of the war tax, and this was a very small house. Fewer theaters have been closed during the past two months than in many years past and exhibitors have but few complaints to make.

Business was quiet just before the holidays, but during the holiday week was above the average and at the present time is 25 per cent. better than it was early in December. Perfect weather conditions have enabled people to get out, and within the past month several large downtown houses of San Francisco have broken attendance records of long standing.

The outlook for spring is regarded as being satisfactory, although the forthcoming draft will have the effect of taking away many theatergoers. The war tax is affecting business in the district theaters to some extent, but is not having any appreciable effect on attendance at the large downtown houses. Almost all of the theaters in this territory are charging the exact tax to their patrons. A few houses in the country districts have cut down the number of shows per week, but this retrenchment is due largely to local conditions, particularly the drought. There has been but an inch and a half of rain since July 1, and at no time have threatening weather conditions kept anyone from attending moving picture shows. The holiday business, which is usually expected to show a falling off, was the best on record.

Cold Weather and No Coal Michigan's Trouble.

Practically the entire state of Michigan is combating weather conditions and the coal situation. At the time of writing conditions are very chaotic—the very worst in the history of the motion picture industry. The severe cold weather and storm of January 12 and 13 so tied up the roads that very few theaters received any film, as a result of which most of the theaters have been forced to close.

The coal situation is extremely serious—more so than it has been at any previous time this year, and the state fuel administrator says that there is little hope for relief within the next 90 days. The snow and storms have so tied up the tracks that trains are not moving, many trains have been discontinued and there is no such thing as a regular schedule. This condition is raising havoc with the express shipments, and once a case of film starts on its way there is no telling where it will land or when it will reach the proper persons. Most of the smaller theaters throughout the State are running only a few nights each week, even under normal conditions.

It just seems this season that everything is operating to the disadvantage of the exhibitor and the theaters. First came the war itself; then the draft; then the Liberty Loans; the Red Cross funds; the lack of coal; and now the cold weather and the storms and the discontinuing of so many trains to conserve fuel. If exhibitors can "weather the storm for another sixty days" and either break even or show even a slight loss, they will be mighty lucky. Business ought certainly to pick up as soon as conditions are better, as people by this time are pretty hungry for good pictures. Local exchanges report that they can sell the pictures if they can make deliveries, and on the whole the demand for pictures—up to the time of the storms—was really better than it has been for a long while so far as the exchanges are concerned, which is rather surprising in view of the adverse reports of business by exhibitors.

Lack of Coal Hits Western New York.

Exhibitors and exchange men of Buffalo and vicinity report that business in that territory at present is the poorest on record. The coal shortage and the war tax are given as the cause. Many people are also using what they term "their moving picture change" to buy Thrift stamps. Others are spending their "amusement money" to pay on their Liberty bonds. In January and February the war taxes which the theaters in this territory will pay to the government will drop far below the December record. Poor business will be the cause.

It is reported that business at some of the Buffalo exchanges has dropped $3,000 a week. Many of the moving picture theaters in the small cities and towns outside of Buffalo have cut the number of their performances to two nights a week because of the coal shortage. They are receiving "a hand to mouth," "day by day" supply of coal and have no hope that conditions in this line will right themselves immediately.

The exhibitors, noting that their receipts are dwindling to a shadow, are asking the exchanges to cancel contracts. Every day the exchanges are receiving letters to this effect. The exhibitors are not giving their full quota of shows. They say their hands are being tied because they are not getting the money. The exchanges in turn are dealing fairly with the exhibitors. If theaters are compelled to close on account of the fuel shortage, the exchanges, as a rule, are inclined to hold contracts in abeyance until the houses open again. The theory back of this attitude is that "it is pretty hard to get blood out of a stone."

Many of the theaters playing to small audiences twice a week are cutting out their big films to save expenses and are using cheap shows. They claim the knife must be used ruthlessly on the expense sheet, otherwise their efforts will spell bankruptcy. Houses that paid $50 a day for a show are now paying $10 a day. The $5 to $7.50 shows are in demand.

The road men for the exchanges are receiving practically no new contracts. They also find that the train service in and out of the small towns are so demoralized that they are delayed for hours. This hold-up and extra hotel bills increase their traveling expenses.

The order to close the schools of Rochester has been issued. The purpose is to conserve the limited coal supply for the homes, hospitals and munition factories. "Close the theaters, too," is the cry of the radicals of the Flower City. The exhibitors there are making a Herculean effort to save the day and keep their doors open.

The theaters of Ithaca are now open only three nights a week. They have been ordered to close the remaining three nights on account of the coal shortage. The Park theater, Silver Creek, is running only two nights a week instead of six. "Old King Coal" is duly blamed for this condition.

The Elk theater, Buffalo, has closed and will remain so until Easter Sunday. This is in a prosperous locality, where the citizens make big money on the nearby docks, railroads and grain elevators. The war tax and lack of coal hurt business at the Elk.

The patrons of Jamestown, N. Y., houses wear overcoats and sweaters while watching the shows. The Jamestown exhibitors receive very little encouragement when they ask for coal from the local fuel administrator. Geneva theaters are in the same plight. The Strand theater, Salamanca, is among the many houses suffering from the coal shortage. The Susquehanna Valley, Floral and Laurel theaters, Binghamton, have been closed on account of poor business. The coal shortage and war tax are given as the cause of the slump. The Elmira and Binghamton picture and legitimate theaters—those running—must close at 10 o'clock in the evening to save coal. The legitimate houses start their shows at 6.45 in the evening. "Closed" is a sign in front of the Peerless theater of Hornell.

In a town near Buffalo a bank offered each person in the place a gift of fifty cents worth of Thrift stamps provided the recipient would purchase $1 worth of the stamps immediately. Nearly everybody in the town accepted the offer, and men, women and children are enthusiastically spending their spare money to buy more stamps. This cash formerly went to the moving picture theaters. Citizens of all the other towns are following the same plan.

There was a Fairbanks picture in a theater near Buffalo. A road man for a Buffalo exchange looked over the audience. It was an easy job. There were eighteen present. The house was poorly heated and the people preferrd to stay at thir homes.

Exhibitors and exchange men in the Buffalo territory say they are justified in spending a few minutes each day in "lambasting the Kaiser" and wishing for "the good old summertime."

Spokane Exhibitors Are Optimistic.

Moving picture exhibitors of Spokane are optimistic as to the outlook for good business for the remainder of the winter and also for the spring months. The majority of them are strong in their statements of business improvement despite the war tax.

W. Potter, of the Universal Film and Supply Company exchange, for this territory, reports that while business appeared to fall a little shy when the war tax was assessed, it has more than recovered. He predicts the worst has passed and that business will continue to improve. He further reports that in the territory extending into Western Montana, all of Northern Idaho and west to the Cascades in Washington, only a couple of houses have closed. However, he reports that some of the managers who were running nightly have cut to four nights a week and some of those who were running four nights have cut to two nights, or matinees and nights as the case may be, weekly.

The Strand was burned in the fall and is closed, but is the only Spokane house not doing any business. It had been open only a few months.

Spokane theater patrons are contributing approximately $9,400 monthly to Uncle Sam's war chests, almost without their knowledge, according to a report just published here. The amount represents the war tax on theater admissions which local managers are turning over to the secretary of the treasury each month. To date they have poured into the government coffers about $18,200, as the war tax on theater tickets has been in force since November 1.

Outside of the Hippodrome theater, which collects only the even cents, local theaters get the war tax through a horizontal increase of 5 cents in the price of admission. This system does not apply to the Auditorium theater, where the tax, coming in larger amounts, usually figures on a five-cent multiple and the extra amount only is collected.

According to the report the revenue checks from the various theaters run as follows: Hippodrome, $2,000; Pantages, $1,800; Auditorium, $800; Clemmer, $1,500; Liberty, $1,500; Casino, $800; Class A, $500; Lyric, $500.

The figures should remain constant throughout the year. The $800 given by the Auditorium represents the month of November. Fewer shows have played at the Auditorium, but the tax is higher because the admission is higher. It will be open daily hereafter.

On the basis of the figures given, Spokane theaters, in a year, would pay over $109,200 to Uncle Sam. The monthly attendance at the various theaters appear as follows: Hippodrome, 100,000; Pantages, 80,000; Clemmer, 75,000; Liberty, 75,000; Casino, 40,000; Class A, 25,000; Lyric, 25,000; Auditorium, 5,300.

This represents an aggregate monthly attendance in Spokane theaters of 435,300 or a total for a year of 5,223,600. The unusual thing about the war tax feature is the almost complete absence of protests from patrons and the undiminished attendance at the theaters since it went into effect, according to the managers.

The total attendance at Spokane's theaters during 1917 was 6,288,000, according to figures presented by the managers of the show houses. Every theater in Spokane has done a better business in 1917 than in 1916, in spite of war times.

Why their totals should have shown an increase appears to be a mystery to a majority of the exhibitors. It is pointed out that many of our young men have left town to go to war and that young men are responsible for a goodly proportion of theater ticket sales; that their women friends, without escorts, remain at home; that families from which boys have gone do not feel in the mood for entertainment—but the fact remains that thousands of more admissions were sold this year.

"I don't know how to account for it except that times are better," said Walker C. Smith, manager of the Hippodrome, where 1,250,000 tickets were sold in 1917, in comparison with an even 1,000,000 for 1916.

"Of course, in times like these many people seek to lay aside their worries by taking in a show, and that may have helped some. I can't help but think people like the idea that when they buy their admission they are making a small contribution to the government at the same time. Our first month's war tax business amounted to $1,500, and December was fully as good.

"Business at the Clemmer theater has been fine and we are entirely satisfied with the showing we have made," said Dr. H. S. Clemmer, manager of the Clemmer Theater.

"Since we have moved to the American Theater we have done about 15 per cent. increased business," said E. Clarke Walker, manager of the Pantages offices. "Up to that time, owing to limited space, we did about the same business as the year before. We are looking ahead to a big season this coming year, and expect to be in our new building in May."

"We will play pictures at the Auditorium between other engagements," said J. W. Allender, manager of the Lyric Theater. "Business at the Lyric has been good, but our space is very limited. We have some large features now booked and expect to make contracts for others for showing at the Auditorium."

"I can't compare our present business with that of last year because I have not had the theater that long, but I am well satisfied with the patronage we are receiving," said J. C. Knipe of the Majestic Theater.

Marking Time in Cleveland.

The situation in Cleveland has greatly improved since the holidays, in spite of the fact that the weather has been steadily more severe than in many years. The first run theaters, in nearly every case, have rearranged their policies, cutting down film rentals and doing much open booking.

The neighborhood houses, however, continue below normal, but much better than November. Not one new theater is in the course of construction, whereas at this time last year about four good-sized houses were under way. The recent depression is and has been felt during the last month in the supply houses and film exchanges to a considerable extent. Only two theaters have closed, but several more are on the verge of doing so.

Outside of Cleveland, throughout the smaller cities of northern Ohio, there has been little improvement, the slump starting November 1. Many very small towns, with one or two theaters, are opened only one or two nights a week, and about fifteen have been closed.

There is a general air of worry among the theater managers, except those operating large houses, but this has been due principally to the war tax scare. Much talk and printed matter of the experiences of England and Canada after the war tax scare was over, is serving to enlighten the spirits of the exhibitors.

The General Situation in Baltimore.

The general situation in Baltimore at the present time has the appearance of a predestined event in that the inevitable is happening as the industry grows to greater proportions. As the business is gradually becoming recognized as an art, so are the theaters which are not being kept up to the standard of an art gradually being diminished, while exquisite structures which are a delight to the eye and a comfort to the body, although they are fewer in number, but larger in attraction, are gradually taking their places.

It has been found by conversing with several exhibitors that the war tax on tickets is not fully understood by the people who attend their shows, for when the admission is five cents, they do not seem to be able to grasp the fact that the tax is only due when the admission is ten cents, and when the manager cannot make his patron understand this situation the latter turns to another house. The point is that the patron does not understand the tax being paid on the ten cents admission and not on the five cent.

There seems to be no question but that there has been somewhat of a slump in business and especially might this be noted, it is said, in the districts which are inhabited by people holding clerical positions. For while the cost of living has advanced in the neighborhood of 30 to 50 per cent., the salaries of these people still remain near to their original amounts, with probably in many instances only an advance of 10 to 15 per cent., and according to this reasoning it is evident that they cannot spend as much on amusement as formerly.

According to observations made concerning the audiences of the Baltimore moving picture theaters, it can readily be seen that the higher grade of pictures are in demand. And a thing to be noted is the fact that the word of mouth advertising is by all means the best. As an instance, take "The Barrier," which played at the New Theater in Baltimore recently. The usual amount of advertising was given this play. But it was wonderful to note how the crowds began to swell along about the third day of the week.

Reports that come in from the road indicate the film business is falling off to some extent owing to the fact that so many men are being called away to the cantonments and therefore the theaters in the smaller cities throughout the state do not have the patronage they formerly did as many of the girls and the older people do not go to the moving pictures as formerly as they have not the desire. In many cases this falling off of patronage may be traced directly to the present crisis, and some of the theaters, it is reported, have been forced to open only two or three nights a week.

As to the prospects in Baltimore for the coming Spring business it can probably be said that it will be just as it always has been, i. e., that the city is a hard one for salesmen to work owing to the competition and the hard first-run proposition. There appears to be no reason to doubt that there will always be a demand for fine, high-class productions, and always for pictures that contain plenty of high-class punch and plot. If the film production is to be curtailed, probably it will be a good thing for Baltimore, as it will, in all cases, mean that the productions will be made with greater care and this will have a tendency to bring a greater demand from discriminating moving picture theater patrons.

In the last six months or so about two theaters of the smaller seating capacities have gone out of business, and whether this can be attributed to the present condition of affairs throughout the nation is a matter of much conjecture; but it is a fact that competition has had a great deal to do with it. The theaters included in this list are the Aladdin, the Crescent, on West Lafayette avenue; the Daisy, the Dream, the Jewell, the Lexington, the New Queen (colored), the Plaza, the Patterson, the Govans.

No Theaters Closed in Philadelphia.

Although there is a general feeling among the Philadelphia exhibitors that they are overburdened with numerous taxes, still there is the first theater yet to be heard from that has been compelled to close on that account.

The amount of business expected during this winter and spring is predicted to be generally fair, although it will not at any time exceed the amount of business done during the previous year. In fact, many of the exhibitors are of the opinion that if, with the high cost of film rental and increased taxes, wages and coal, they are able to approach last year's figures, they shall consider themselves extremely fortunate. The greatest depression is felt chiefly in neighboring sections, while the houses that cater to a transient business, both in and out of town, enjoy splendid attendances.

After having obtained several interviews with local exhibitors, the general opinion is that they may be compelled to close two or three days a week owing to the lack of coal. Mr. Lewis, who is in charge of the conservation of fuel, stated that motion picture houses would be ordered to close only as a last resort. At present, some theaters up the state are running on a schedule of three days a week, owing to the scarcity of coal.

Stanley V. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company, predicts a notable year in the film world for 1918. "I prophesy that during the coming twelve months, the motion picture business is going to take on a boom such as has never before been experienced," he said. "The high tension to which millions have been wrought will, as a matter of course, necessitate relaxation. What more probably than that it will take the form of amusements? And why not pictures, especially in view of the positive efforts of manufacturers to provide a wonderful form of entertainment at nominal admission? I am confident that 1918 is going to be a splendid year in the motion picture business, not only from a financial but from an artistic viewpoint, and I do not hesitate to say that I firmly believe the year will mark a big step towards the progress of motion pictures."

Good Outlook for Spring in Iowa.

After a round of the Des Moines exchange managers, visits with the theater managers and the reports of the salesmen for the different exchanges, the spring outlook in Iowa is decidedly to the good. Although it is a bit hard just now for every exhibitor in the state, with the possible exception of the Des Moines exhibitors—who have the soldiers from the cantonment to draw from—they all are looking forward to the spring for relief. Lack of coal, zero weather, and handicapped shipping service are the big hoodoos just now, but all of these naturally will be overcome with the coming of the spring.

There have been approximately 150 theaters closed in Iowa in the last 120 days, but few of them have closed within the last thirty days. Many of the theaters now open are running but from one to three nights a week in the small country towns. However, nearly all of the 120 theaters will open when warmer weather sets in and the "small time" theaters will remain open the entire six days. Lack of coal closed up some theaters this last couple of weeks, but nearly every one is opened again now.

A small percentage of the exhibitors cannot be convinced that the present condition is but temporary and they are inclined to look at the world through very dark glasses, prophecying failure before spring comes to their relief. All agree that conditions are as low as they will get and that the tendency will have to be up—as it can't go any lower.

The closing of nearly every legitimate theater in the smaller towns on account of the canceling of road show engagements has turned this money into the picture houses. Every one agrees that there has never been so much money circulating in the state as at the present time and that the picture theater will get its share when the weather warms up enough for people to get in from the country in their cars—and for the townspeople to get out. Iowa had a big crop last season and the returns from this will be just about coming in in the spring and the farmers will be anxious to spend it in forgetting the war and high cost of living.

The admission tax has not hurt Iowa exhibitors at all, and while a few are still raising a row over the reel tax, most of them find it not the burden they expected. So, with exhibitors feeling the mid-winter pressure badly right now and most of them losing money right along, the general outlook for spring is optimistic in the extreme.

Atlanta Looks Forward to Good Year.

The past year, up to two months ago, has been a hard year on exhibitors in Atlanta. Practically no money has been made by the exhibitors, still they have managed to pull through. Several theaters have changed ownerships, and owners have changed managers so often as to make it almost impossible for the public to acquaint themselves with the policy of the theater.

Two Atlanta theaters have within the past year closed. The Victoria, on Peachtree street, shut down on account of remodeling the building. The "Euclid," on Euclid avenue, a neighborhood theater, closed on account of the death of the manager and lack of patronage.

For a while no new films were shown at the theaters, and repeats caused patronage to grow indifferent. During the past two months new films has awakened old patrons, and soldiers from Camp Gordon have crowded the theaters, especially at night.

Strange as it may seem, the Savoy theater, the oldest in the city, and which has not been remodeled for years, has never increased its admission price and is crowded day and night. About half the time repeats of film made years ago are given and still the theater remains crowded.

Atlanta has never in the history of moving picture theaters had a corps of more efficient, wideawake and progressive exhibitors as at the present time, and with interest awakening among Atlantians and with forty thousand moving picture loving soldiers in the neighborhood, the year 1918 looks splendid, especially if new films are shown now and then.

Not Much Complaint in Texas.

War-time conditions—taxes, added costs and the like—have not been responsible for the closing of theaters in Texas. It is doubtful whether a single Texas house has quit business on that account. Drought conditions in the western and southwestern portions of the state have taken their toll during the last year, however, to the extent of perhaps seventy-five houses in the smaller towns. Elsewhere in the state, where crop conditions have been satisfactory, little or no complaint is heard.

Minnesota Exhibitors Have Been Hard Hit.

A few Minneapolis exhibitors who are making money have given the impression that "everything is rosy" with Northwest exhibitors this winter, but after inquiring around, going over roadmen's records and reading exhibitors' correspondence, the World can truthfully state that the present season thus far has been a "killer" for the Northwest theater man.

The Government tax and the inability of many exhibitors to raise their admission prices and exist brought about the first blow. The exhibitors do not begrudge the Government its tax money, but at a majority of theaters it is very evident the tax has caused many hardships to the theater man, and where, because of the tax, exhibitors have deemed it necessary to raise admission prices a falling off in business has been noted. Records show that during last November (this month is usually the banner period) a majority of exhibitors made little or no money. Records also show that because of the tax on film reels and the raised cost of operating theaters a good percentage of Northwest houses have gone out of business or cut down the number of shows given each week.

Referring to reports the following facts show how the "high cost of photoplay presentation" has affected the Northwest: Eau Claire, Wis., a town of 18,000, formerly had five theaters operating daily; now three theaters are operating, not one showing films every night of the week. At Chippewa Falls, Wis., one house is now in operation; three were previously running. At Spooner, Wis., the Lyric is operating two nights a week, and the theater at Cumberland is doing likewise. At Stillwater, Minn., (12,000 population) the Majestic is closed, and the Metropolitan is operating two nights a week. At Menomonee, Wis., only one house (Smith Bros.) is now in operation; two were previously showing films.

At Mellen, Wis., one theater has cut down its showings from every night a week to four nights, and at Rice Lake, Wis., Mr. McLaughlin is operating only one of his two theaters at the present time. Turtle Lake, Wis., is said to have cut down its show nights from seven to one. The Best theater at Brainerd, Minn., is now running two nights a week, and the Strand is closed. In the Twin Cities an even dozen theaters have closed up, and the Oak, a new Minneapolis house, has cut down its show nights from seven to four. The Victoria, a new St. Paul theater, has cut down to Sunday night showings only.

The new fuelless Tuesday ordinance has lost some business for theaters, but it has been estimated that the new rule has built up Monday's business to such an extent that it is now almost equal to the amount previously recorded on both Monday and Tuesday. In the city the light ordinance has kept the theater fronts so dark that this has caused a small falling off in patronage. Downtown Minneapolis theaters are now allowed to burn only a limited number of lights in their lobbies and under canopies. Flasher signs and other lighted ornamentation has been eliminated.

Louisville Exhibitors Doing Well.

While reports have been received to the effect that exhibitors in some sections of the country were not making any money, and that some theaters had been forced to close, due to the additional war tax, special film tax, music tax, and general war conditions, things in Louisville are in just about the same shape as they were a year or even two years ago. Every house that was operating at this time last season is operating today, although the bad weather of the past two months has decreased revenues considerably for many of the houses, which are seldom pulling a full house, regardless of how good a film is or how big the star may be. However, conditions in Louisville have been much better than in many cities, due to local manufacturers having big war orders; while Camp Taylor has contributed many a dollar to the exhibitors' coffers.

Between 25,000 and 50,000 men are stationed at this camp all the time, these men being off duty on Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday afternoons, and about two-thirds of the men are off every evening after 5:30 until 10:30 o'clock. The boys jam the street cars to come to the city as soon as they get off, and the theaters catch a big crowd on the off afternoons and evenings. However, heavy snows have isolated the camp on several occasions this winter and cut off this business, while soldier subscriptions to the Liberty Loan, the Red Cross and their insurance premiums have reduced their spending money considerably.

Louisville's prosperity was shown when bank clearings jumped over the billion dollar mark near the close of 1917, this being the first time that clearings reached such a figure. Workingmen have been fully employed at high wages, and weather conditions have been about the only factor working against the exhibitor.

Out in the state a number of theaters have been forced to close this winter, due to lack of fuel for heating and the fact that many power plants have been down frequently on account of lack of fuel. In addition the roads have been impassable, and country theaters have not been able to draw business from any great area. However, agricultural conditions have been good, crops being big and the farmers receiving high prices; while live stock, lumber and coal operations have also been going ahead at a big pace.

General conditions out in the state are good, and there is plenty of money. Altogether, combinations of circumstances have worked against the exhibitor, and many of the smaller theaters have been having a hard time. However, the theaters to quit have been principally the ones in small, isolated villages, and no reports have been received concerning any theaters in the larger cities having been forced to quit. In the coal and timber sections the theaters have been having a fairly good run, as the highest labor prices ever paid to miners and timbermen are now in effect.

Directors' Supper Dance a Brilliant Affair

Association's Initial Function Attended by Practically all the Producing Celebrities in the East

I'm a member of the M. P. D. A....
And I know that you'll believe me when I say....
That my method of direction is the climax of perfection—
I'm an artist with a cap-i-tal A.
I'm a member of the M. P. D. A.
And delight to show my power every day.
When the star gets temp'ramental
I remark in tones parental:
"Just remember—I'm a member—
I'm a member of the M. P. D. A."

THE STARS, temp'ramental and otherwise, if so be in the latter category there are any, joined with manufacturers in a lusty outgiving of the chorus of the official song of the Motion Picture Directors' Association at the Biltmore Saturday, January 26. The occasion was what the Association modestly described as its "initial supper dance." Actually it was much more than that. Reckoned on the basis of its full achievement—by the trade prominence of the men and women present; by the novelties provided for their entertainment, and by the spirit of good fellowship that prevailed—it set an unusual standard in an industry that already has established worthy precedent in social affairs.

There will be successors of Saturday night's function. That already has been determined. Daniel Frohman, who "came early and remained late," was among the more insistent on this point, and the half thousand others present will back him in his demands.

The setting for the dance was the nineteenth floor of the big hotel. The grand ballroom—the same hall in which President Wilson two years ago talked to motion picture men—was the center of attraction for the dancers. On the stage was an orchestra of thirty pieces; and it was mostly busy, the intermissions being of short duration. There was a goodly throng in the dining room on the same floor, where a jazz band and colored entertainers held forth. There was another room, too, which by many present received more rather than less attention. Here during all the earlier hours there were on tap in large bowls mild but seductive mixtures; and there was lemonade, too.

It was shortly after 11 o'clock, when nearly all the guests had arrived, that a band of Scotch bagpipers paraded through the rooms and aroused the enthusiasm of the throng. Soon afterward everyone went to the ballroom where the Spanish dancers from "The Land of Joy" company gave a performance lasting a half hour. It was one of the features of the night. The grace and art and speed of the splendidly trained young women brought forth continued and hearty applause.

Supper was then served in the adjoining dining rooms. After the coffee had been reached Travers Vale announced that Sidney Jarvis would sing the chorus of the club song and invited the diners to join him. While they were a bit slow in getting started the lyric of Carroll Fleming and the catchy music of Ted Barron proved an irresistible combination and they went to it with a will.

To enumerate the men and women present would require a long story. Among those noted by the World man, however, were monocled Nat Goodwin, who did not come in very early but who did remain to the finish; Adolph Zukor, P. A. Powers, Samuel Goldfish, Mr. and Mrs. William Fox, Fred B. Warren, Watterson R. Rothacker of Chicago, H. H. Bruenner, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Rowland, Mr. and Mrs. John Rock, John F. Chalmers, I. E. Chadwick, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis J. Selznick, Joe Engel, S. L. Rothapfel, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Blache, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Hoff, Mr. and Mrs. Max Karger, Captain and Mrs. E. H. Calvert, William A. Johnston, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Willat, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Brenon, Lieutenant Al. Kaufman, "Bill" Russell, Frank Keeney, James Kirkwood, Major McCutcheon, Harry Garson, Mabel Condon, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Terriss, Louise Vale, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Losee, Nathan Burkan, Clara Kimball Young, Phil Lang, Charles Abrams, Oscar A. C. Lund, Gail Kane, Elsie Ferguson, Pauline Frederick, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Selwyn, Miriam Nesbitt, Marjorie Rambeau, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Morey, Valentine Grant, George Trimble, Alice Brady, June Caprice, Oscar Appel, Owen Moore, Jack Pickford, Olive Thomas, Pearl White, Gertrude McCoy, Lois Meredith, Sheldon Lewis, Virginia Pearson, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Selden, Georgia Gardiner, Carlyle Blackwell, Anders Randolph and a host of others.

Committees in Charge of the Dance.

Wally Van was chairman of the dance committee. His aids were Maurice Tourneur, Robert G. Vignola, Perry Vekroff, Joseph Kaufman and J. Searle Dawley. On the sale of tickets were Mr. Vignola and Frank Crane. In charge of the door were Carroll Fleming, Edwin Middleton, William F. Haddock, Barry O'Neil, Lawrence McGill and Jay Hunt. In charge of refreshments were James Vincent, John G. Harvey, John G. Adolphi, and Harley Knoles. The music and dancing were looked out for by Mr. Van, Mr. Kaufman, Mr. Vale, Edwin Carewe, Mr. Tourneur and Mr. Dawley. On the supper committee were Dell Henderson, Charles Giblyn, Charles F. Miller, Charles M. Seay and George Fitzmaurice.

The reception committee was headed by Sid Olcott. Named as his aids, although some were on the west coast, were Edwin August, Kenean Buel, Allan Dwan, Oscar Eagle, J. Gordon Edwards, William J. Humphreys, John C. Ince, George Irving, Edmund Lawrence, Ashley Miller, Leonce Perrett, Paul Scardon, Joseph W. Smiley, Robert T. Thornby, Stanner E. V. Taylor, C. Jay Williams, Emile Chautard, James Young, F. G. Grandon and Burton King.

It was about 5 o'clock when the last elevator descended from the nineteenth floor. It had been a great night. There was no dissenting voice on the freely expresed opinion that the directors were to be congratulated on their first party—that it had been cleverely conceived and splendidly executed. G. B.

SHELDON LEWIS TO REMAIN IN PICTURES.

Sheldon Lewis, the popular Pathe "villain," will not desert the screen after all. Although he had recently decided to accept a very tempting offer from a prominent theatrical manager, Mr. Lewis changed his mind at the last moment because of the fact that he felt it would be harmful to leave the screen if only for the length of a theatrical season. A tempting motion picture offer which has just been made him will therefore receive his consideration upon conclusion of his present contract with Pathe. Mr. Lewis is the husband of Virginia Pearson, the popular Fox star, and is perhaps one of the most beloved "heavies" in motion pictures.

MAX LINDER COMING BACK.

Max Linder, the popular French comedian, who terminated his contract with Essanay last July on account of ill health, has cabled to friends in this city that he has now fully recovered, and that he expects to visit this country again in April. After making a few productions at his own studio, the Cinemax, in Paris, M. Linder took himself to Switzerland, and will sail for the United State in a few months. Just which company will present him is still a point of conjecture, but there is little doubt but that his efforts will be crowned with success.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Varner Outlines Legislative Program

Chairman of Allied Committee Suggests to Congressmen Changes Desired in Tax Law.

HARRY B. VARNER, secretary-treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of North Carolina, and I. Stern, of Philadelphia, were last week around the Capitol conferring with members of Congress on the legislative program agreed upon at a recent joint meeting of the allied exhibitors' legislative committee in conference with a like committee of manufacturers. This program includes the following Suggestions for Amendments.

1. That all children under twelve years of age shall be exempt from any admission tax.

2. That the film footage tax of one-fourth and one-half cent a foot be repealed and eliminated entirely.

3. That the theater seat tax be repealed and eliminated entirely.

4. That for the purpose of raising additional revenue, in lieu of the eliminations asked for, the admission tax be made to cover all admissions, including the five-cent admissions (except on children under twelve).

5. That the method of collecting admission taxes shall be through the sale of tax tickets furnished by the Government to the theaters for that purpose.

6. That these tickets be sold in blocks at a discount so as to allow the purchaser a 10 per cent. margin for handling.

Varner Writes North Carolina Exhibitors.

In an effort to mobilize the united forces of every motion picture theater owner in North Carolina to combat the ruinous admission and other taxes confronting them, Secretary H. B. Varner, of the North Carolina Exhibitors' Association, has addressed a call to every theater manager in his state urging him immediately to report actual conditions to all North Carolina Congressmen and Senators for the month of November, 1917, as compared with the previous November. Mr. Varner's letter in part follows:

Lexington, N. C., January 23, 1918.

At our convention in Raleigh last week I was directed to write you and ask you to write the strongest letter that you can write to each of our ten Congressmen and two United States Senators urging them to work for the revision of the war tax on motion picture theaters. I want you to write these men the plain truth, giving actual conditions, showing the receipts and disbursements of your theater for November, 1917; giving the exact amount that you paid for war taxes, showing how much you made or lost during that month, and compare these figures with your business for November, 1916.

I am confident Congress has no desire to do the moving picture industry an injustice; yet it has taxed us out of all reason, much more than any other industry in the country is taxed, and you want to urge in this letter that this tax be revised so that the theaters of the country may continue to stay open and operate and pay a good revenue to the Government.

It is estimated that 25 per cent. of the theaters of the nation have been forced to close since November 1 on account of the war tax, and it is generally believed that if Congress does not revise this war revenue tax affecting theaters that 50 per cent. more of them will be closed between now and April. What you want to do is to give the members of Congress actual facts and figures.

The entire industry throughout the nation is working harmoniously back of the Legislative Committee of which I am Chairman, and I shall spend a great deal of my time from now on in Washington looking after your interest; but I cannot accomplish anything unless you do your duty by writing these letters. H. B. VARNER, Secretary.

Washington Theater Managers Meet

Association Hears Report of Delegate to Capital—New Janitors' Union Reported On.

THE Washington Theater Managers' Association met on January 15 at their headquarters in the Central building in Seattle. W. H. Smythe, who was sent as a delegate from the Washington exhibitors to the convention of theater men in the national capital gave his report of the proceedings, and reports from several small town exhibitors throughout the territory on the subject of the admission tax were read. These letters told of decreased box office receipts since the tax had gone into effect and complained of the hardship it was working on the "little fellow." A report was also made on the conference of a committee with the Central Labor Union regarding the formation of a janitors' union and its relation to exhibitors as employers.

J. L. Pierce, Northwest manager for the Four Minute Men, addressed the meeting, promising the theater men that the appearance of men who claimed to be Four Minute Men, but were not, would be stopped. Some of these would-be orators have come to the theaters, alleging that they were Four Minute Men, and have spoken on subjects that were on the schedule of the Four Minute speeches. Mr. Pierce told the theater managers that the real Four Minute Man would carry a slide announcing his name and his connection with the patriotic orators. He also promised that the poor orators among them should be weeded out, so that theater patrons would not be bored by poor speeches. After Mr. Pierce's address the organization proceeded to discuss private business.

BRONX EXHIBITORS INSTALL OFFICERS.

The Cinema Exhibitors' Association of Bronx County held its sixth annual installation of officers and banquet at Fleischman's, Bronx, on Thursday evening, January 10. There was a large attendance of county officials and exhibitors of Bronx County. District Attorney Francis Martin was installing officer and also toastmaster. Splendid and telling speeches were made by Judge Sheil, Judge Robitzek, District Attorney Martin, Chief Inspector Frank Fitzpatrick of Bronx Department of Water, Gas and Electricity, Superintendent Charles Sweeney, Bronx Children's Society, and several others.

President John J. Wittman, after being installed into office for his sixth consecutive term as president of this association, was presented with a handsome and valuable diamond scarf pin. All present had a very enjoyable time.

ST. LOUIS LEAGUE LISTENS TO NEW SCHEME.

The Exhibitors' League of St. Louis, at its meeting Friday, January 18, was greatly interested or entertained by a plan proposed by Floyd Lewis, formerly manager of the Goldwyn offices here and recently resigned.

Mr. Lewis appeared unannounced at the League meeting and proposed the formation of the Exhibitors' Film Company, a city-wide organization, incorporated for the purchase, wholesale or on a large scale, of feature and serial pictures. Lewis, who is promoting the organization, set forth what he could save the exhibitors annually in the cost of films.

The exhibitors took no action with regard to the proposal.

How Tuesday Became "Heatless Day"

Barry M. Buckley Prevails on Fuel Administrator to Give Different Day to Amusements—Order Permitting the Change.

By C. L. Linz.

THE credit is due to Barry M. Bulkley for having prevailed upon the United States Fuel Administration to change from Monday until Tuesday as the day upon which all theatres in the United States must darken their doors to conform with the "stop industry" order of Dr. Harry A. Garfield, the United States Fuel Administrator.

When the original order came out, Harry M. Crandall, who represents the league in Washington in all matters pertaining to legislation, was in New York City. He got in touch with Mr. Bulkley, who is vice-president of the Crandall Theaters Company and prominent both politically and socially in the National Capital, and explained the situation to him. Following this conference by telephone, Mr. Bulkley, with Arthur Robb and Joseph P. Morgan, who are connected with this company, formulated the following brief, which was presented to the authorities here:

Brief Presented to Government.

"The local motion picture industry desires to co-operate with the United States Government in its efforts to conserve coal and respectfully submits that the order closing the motion picture houses on Mondays be changed and that Tuesdays be substituted.

"It is unnecessary to refer to the popularity of the motion picture. It has proven to be, during the time of the war, a tremendous aid in numberless ways to the United States Government. President Wilson is authority for the statement that the motion picture houses have contributed one-half to the Liberty Loan. There can be no question of patriotism and loyalty of their management and they are as ready now as ever to do their share and to acquiesce heartily in any plan the Government may propose. They respectfully submit that their reason for substituting Tuesday for Monday is entirely logical and will assist rather than retard the Government's purposes.

"By reason of the Monday order there will be a great number of idle people who will be compelled to stay at home, thereby burning an increased supply of coal and gas. The motion picture houses remaining open on that day will not only afford inexpensive amusement, but will be the means of decreasing the home consumption of fuel and light. The cost of maintaining the motion picture houses on that day would be most insignificant when compared with that required to keep the homes properly heated and lighted. The substitution of Tuesday for Monday and its widespread announcement will do more to lessen public discontent and to generally popularize the recent act of the Fuel Administration than anything conceivable.

"A leading New York daily says: 'If they (the moving picture houses) are closed on this enforced holiday, the public will have no place to go, and nothing to take their minds off the temporary misfortune of lack of work.

"'The managers' proposition is that the motion picture houses be allowed to remain open on Mondays, and closed on some other day, say Tuesdays. This would affect a greater saving of light and heat.'

"The Government must know that the keeping of the motion picture houses open on Monday would prevent quite a loss in the war revenue taxes.

"Telegram received at two-thirty p. m., on Friday, January 18, 1918, from the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the State of Wisconsin, reads: 'We respectfully submit the following plan: That motion picture houses be closed on Tuesdays and remain open Mondays, thereby providing places of recreation and proper warmth and facilitate conservation of fuel in the homes on this day.'"

It is believed that on the strength of this argument, that the change of day was made. The order covering this change was as follows:

Order for Change Dated January 19.

The United States Fuel Administrator has today changed the days on which fuel is not to be used for theaters and other places of amusement from Mondays to Tuesdays. This change is made to accommodate the holiday crowds on Mondays. The prohibition upon the use of fuel for heating such places of amusement for Tuesdays includes the use of fuel for lighting.

The regulation issued today reads:

"Regulation making the provisions of Section IV of the Fuel Administrator's regulation of January 17, 1918, applicable to theaters and other places of amusement referred to in paragraph (c) of said section upon Tuesdays instead of Mondays.

"In order to accommodate public holiday attendance fuel may be burned on any of the Mondays beginning January 21, 1918, and continuing up to and including March 25, 1918, for the purpose of supplying heat for theaters, moving picture houses, bowling alleys, billiard rooms, private or public dance halls, or any other place of public amusement; but no fuel shall be burned on any Tuesday, beginning January 22, 1918, and continuing up to and including Tuesday, March 26, 1918 (except to such extent as is essential to prevent injury to property from freezing), for the purpose of supplying either heat or light for any of the places of amusement aforesaid on any of the Tuesdays above specified. To the extent indicated herein the regulation of the United State Fuel Administrator dated January 17, 1918, is hereby modified.

"(Signed.) H. A. GARFIELD,
"UNITED STATES FUEL ADMINISTRATOR.
"Washington, 19th of January, 1918."

New York Sunday Shows in Balance

Test Closing Case to Be Argued Before the Court of Appeals February 28.

By C. L. Grant.

ALL branches of the motion picture industry will be interested in the outcome of a test case which will be argued before the Court of Appeals in Albany on February 28, for on the outcome depends the fate of Sunday motion pictures in this state. There was a preliminary motion slated for Saturday, January 26, before Judge Cuthbert W. Pound to stay the execution of a judgment obtained in the case of Vincent Bergstrom, owner of a motion picture house in Schenectady, and convicted some time ago by a police court jury of that city on the charge of having run his theater Sundays.

Interest in the Bergstrom case, the first of its kind in New York state, is far-reaching, for an adverse decision means the closing of all motion picture houses on Sundays.

There is a singular state of affairs existing in this state at the present time in connection with the legality of Sunday pictures. There have been two Appellate decisions on the subject, the third department ruling that Sunday motion pictures are illegal, while in other divisions the reverse has been held. It is more than likely that many motion picture houses will be put out of business should the Court of Appeals decide against Sunday shows.

There are no Sunday movies in Albany, but the houses in Troy run full blast seven days a week and attract large numbers from the former city on Sunday. The shows have been well conducted and pastors have admitted that the shows are responsible for keeping many persons from saloons and similar places. During the last few days moving picture exhibitors in Albany have unsuccessfully sought permission of Mayor Watt to give Sunday evening performances, claiming that such was only due them in view of the fact that they were compelled to close Tuesdays.

The Schenectady situation dates back for over a year, at which time the police in the electric town endeavored to close all picture houses on Sunday. A number of managers were arrested and given a police court trial. All were acquitted with the exception of Bergstrom, his conviction being based on the contention of the Corporation Counsel that as Schenectady was within the third department of the Appellate Division, that department's ruling against Sunday pictures was paramount.

SCHENECTADY OFFICIALS IGNORE STAY.

Albany, January 27.—Schenectady's moving picture theaters were closed today despite the fact that attorneys had on Friday secured a stay of execution from Supreme Court Justice Nichols in Schoharie in the case of Vincent Bergstrom who was some time ago convicted in a court in Schenectady on a charge of having run his place Sundays. The case is one which has aroused much interest in motion picture circles over the State and one which is being watched by both the industry and the courts for a final ruling.

The attorneys representing Bergstrom made an effort yesterday to secure an order from Judge Cuthbert Pound of the Court of Appeals in Albany, but the Judge had returned to his home in Lockport for the week-end and nothing was accomplished in the matter. The motion picture houses in the Electric City had apparently taken it for granted that they could operate today, had advertised the fact, only to receive a jolt from the authorities last night.

The stay of execution, obtained from Justice Nichols, was served on Mayor Charles Simon of Schenectady who in turn referred it to the city's legal department. The Mayor was advised that the city was not interested in the matter in a legal way, it being up to the District Attorney to decide. Commissioner of Public Safety Alexander of Schenectady put his foot down on the attempted opening for today, on the grounds that the stay of execution in Bergstrom's case affected only the defendant and could not be construed as covering all movies in the city. Michael F. Lydon Heads Bay State League

Seventy-Five Massachusetts and Rhode Island Exhibitors Discuss Many Matters of Moment

MASSACHUSETTS and Rhode Island members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America gave undivided and enthusiastic support to the Government in the war measure affecting the moving picture industry at the annual meeting and banquet of the two state leagues held at the Quincy House Tuesday afternoon and evening, January 22. Seventy-five of the leading exhibitors of these two states attended. They pledged their allegiance to President Wilson and to Congress to continue their patriotic work of supporting the Government in the war. They praised the work of the national theater leaders who had secured a change of the Monday holiday closing order to apply on Tuesday. This, it was agreed, had saved tremendous losses to all moving picture exhibitors in New England.

Matters of vital importance to the exhibitors and their business were discussed at the convention, and there was a spirited contest over the election of a state president. Michael F. Lydon, the new standard bearer of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island leagues, is one of the best-known exhibitors in New England. He is a man who has worked hard and consistently for the exhibitors' organization and is a keen politician. He has been the author and sponsor of legislation in Massachusetts which has been of great benefit to the moving picture industry. Mr. Lydon has promised to work "tooth and nail" to make the local organization the best in the country, and his enthusiastic supporters believe there is a big boom in store for the eastern organizations of the national league under Mr. Lydon's leadership.

Miss Rose E. Tapley, who is making a nation-wide tour under the auspices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was a special guest at the banquet. She spoke enthusiastically of the work of the exhibitors' league in all parts of the country.

The exhibitors gathered for their business session at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and Ernest H. Horstmann called the session to order. The first business taken up was a discussion of the plan of a group of independent film manufacturers to market their productions direct to the moving picture exhibitor. Mr. Horstmann read their plan to the members. It was finally agreed that a committee of five be appointed to investigate the matter and report to the organization on February 5.

It was decided that the committee go to New York January 25 and confer with the two associations at the meeting in that city.

Mr. Horstmann scored members of the league for their failure to reply to the request of Frank Rembusch, of Indiana, secretary of the Allied Exhibitors' Legislative Committee, requesting that exhibitors fill out blanks which call for comment from every theater manager on how the war tax affected his theater during the months of November and December. He said that only seven theaters in New England had answered the request and that only 207 out of 14,000 in the entire United States had taken the trouble to give the desired information.

On motion of Alfred S. Black, a motion that the league at once send out notices to every moving picture house in Massachusetts requesting them to answer immediately the request of Mr. Rembusch was adopted.

When Mr. Horstmann asked how many exhibitors present would send in their information at once, the entire body arose.

Whether or not children under 12 years should be exempt from the war tax was taken up for discussion. Leon Dadman said he had collected the tax from juveniles and had forwarded the money to the Government. He said it was returned with the request that the money be rebated to the children. There was a laugh from the exhibitors at this suggestion.

The matter of the theaters being closed on Tuesdays came up when one exhibitor asked what protest, if any, was to be made against the Tuesday closing order. Mr. Horstmann declared that the exhibitors should be satisfied with the concessions already granted by the Government and he advised the exhibitors to "leave well enought alone."

Some interesting information on this subject was given by Samuel Grant, who said he was in New York when the theater committee had gone to Washington to protest to President Wilson against the Monday closing order. He said that Adolph Zukor had gone to Washington representing the film manufacturing and producers' interests with a list of protests he intended to make for the industry. He said that what Mr. Zukor heard from the president himself caused him to withdraw all the protests except the Monday closing order. This caused an end of the Tuesday protest argument.

Who Pays for Film on Tuesday?

Whether or not the exhibitors should pay for films for Tuesdays brought forth some lively discussion. It was pointed out that the man who pays for a program or who had contracts for his bookings is now unable to use the material he has contracted for on Tuesdays. Colonel Henry L. Kincaide, of Quincy, declared it was not fair for the exchanges to bill the exhibitors for Tuesday films. He said a united protest should be made against such charges.

It was explained by Stanley Sumner that the Paramount company had agreed to stand the loss for Monday when that day was ordered for theater closing, but that when the order was changed to Tuesday the company had withdrawn their offer. The action of the Paramount company was caused by the belief that the exhibitors would make as much on Monday as if they were open both Monday and Tuesday, under the new conditions, was the explanation of George A. Giles.

On motion of Michael J. Lydon a committee was appointed to call the exchanges by phone and find out their attitude in regard to this matter. While the committee was at work the debate on the matter was continued.

Stanley Sumner said that every exhibitor ought to refuse to pay for his Tuesday films. He said he was going to follow that policy. As the theaters were closed by order of the Government he said he was in favor of employing counsel to investigate and care for the matter, amicably if possible.

Alfred S. Black said he did not believe the exchanges could collect money for the pictures and he was in favor of an investigation by counsel.

The committee reported that the exchanges in Boston which said they would not charge for the Tuesday films were Mutual, Kleine, Vitagraph and Universal. The General Film declared it would rebate in full and Triangle stated it would give the exhibitor a square deal. The Eastern Feature Film Company said it would charge 35 or 40 per cent. of the film cost.

Paramount officials reported they were not authorized to rebate, but that they would give the picture for use on another date or substitute another picture. Metro officials said they were willing to make allowance for loss of pictures, but that they would try and prevail upon the exhibitor to use another picture at another date.

The Pathe exchange reported that no charge would be made for Tuesday films, but that they would base their charge on the length of time films were used. The Fox management did not know what action the home office was to take, but indications were that the exhibitors would suffer no loss from the Tuesday closing as the Monday holiday would make up for the loss of Tuesday.

The matter of paying theater employees on Tuesdays was discussed, but it was the prevailing opinion that this was a matter for each exhibitor to settle for his own house and that no concerted action could be taken.

Chairman Horstmann read a letter from Jacob Conn, an exhibitor from Providence, announcing his resignation from the league. Jacob Lourie moved that the letter be placed on file, which was done.

A. E. Ramsdell, secretary of the Kincaide organization before the amalgamation, was called upon to read his report for the year 1917, which was as follows:

"Seventy-five dollars in dues was paid into the organization during the past year. The organization paid out $42.80 for expenses, leaving a balance in the treasury of $32.20. Thirty-one members of the organization are in good standing, while thirty-seven have failed to pay their dues." The report was accepted.

The exhibitors then heard the report of the nominating committee, which was read by Chairman Horstmann. The nominating committee consisted of Colonel Henry L. Kincaide and Ernest H. Horstmann, who in secret session had agreed on the nominations. The nominations were:

Michael Lydon Is Elected President.

President, Edward R. Gregory, of Dorchester; vice president, W. G. Hartford; secretary, B. H. Cornell; treasurer, Herbert A. Gillman, of Dorchester; auditing committee, A. E. Ramsdell, of Malden; William B. Sproule, East Boston, and George F. Washburn, of Boston; membership committee, George S. Benslev, A. Montague, Al Somerby. Executive Committee, Ernest H. Horstmann, Nathan H. Gordon, William Keon, Jacob Lourie, Colonel Henry L. Kincaide, Edward R. Gregory and Frank J. Howard.

Harry I. Wasserman nominated Michael F. Lydon for the presidency in opposition to Mr. Gregory. Several members were in favor of having the original nomination of E. R. Gregory for president stand, but Wasserman demanded that he have the right to nominate who he wished and his motion was allowed to stand, Lydon's name being placed on the list. The result of the vote was Lydon 27 and Gregory 24. Immediately after the vote was officially counted, Mr. Gregory stepped up to where Mr. Lydon was sitting and grasped him by the hand and wished him best of luck for his coming term. He also asked the committee to make the vote unanimous, which was done. Three rousing cheers went up for Mr. Gregory for the spirit he showed in the election. The secretary then cast one vote ballot for the entire list of officers.

When Ernest H. Horstmann's name was proposed for the executive committee he declared he was through with the league as an active officer. He stated, however, that he would always be ready to help in time of necessity and would be glad to act in an advisory way at any time but that he did not wish to be tied down to an executive position.

Mr. Washburn also urged the former president to remain. Mr. Washburn stated that it had been his intention to refuse the nomination as a member of the auditing board, because of the many outside business cares he had to take up his time, but that he would stick if Mr. Horstmann would. The members finally prevailed upon Mr. Horstmann to accept the nomination, which he did.

David Lourie called for a vote of thanks for President Horstmann, and Michael J. Lydon called for the members to stand up and give it. Three cheers rang out for the retiring president. Mr. Horstmann bowed his appreciation and then proceeded to make a short speech of thanks.

Straight Talk from Horstmann.

"I have always worked for the best interests of the league," he said. "I know I have been accused more than once of having a clique with me. Yes, I have had a clique, and I am proud of the fact. But whose fault is it? It is your fault. You do not attend the meetings, so how can we accomplish anything. I have many times sent out 140 letters to league members announcing a meeting and seven or eight have attended. We automatically became a clique. Please don't let this happen with the incoming president. I have worked hard for the league. I have made trips to New York and Washington in behalf of the organization.

"Speaking of laxity in attendance look at this one here today. The meeting is a disgrace because of the small number of exhibitors attending. With theaters closed throughout the state we should have a record attendance. 'In union there is strength.' Without union we can accomplish nothing. If there was no Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and National Association of the Motion Picture Industry your theaters would have been closed yesterday.

"Another important question to discuss while I am at it is dues. Any member can come along and pay his initation fee. Then he goes away and forgets all about the league. Notices are sent out to him. He fails to answer them or attend. Soon he is dropped and there you are. That is what I have had to contend with. Dues are a regular insurance. The organization loses its strength if its members do not attend the meetings. If there had been no national association we could not have gone to Garfield and asked him to change the closing order.

"Only two exhibitors sent in their three dollars to fight the music tax. Yet your battle has been fought for you. The least you could have done was to send in your three dollars. The money could not be misappropriated as the checks had to be signed and countersigned. All of these things go to show that you are lax in such matters.

"You exhibitors must look after state and national legislation and you must attend meetings. Try and bring in new members. I want to thank you all very much for your vote of thanks, and if at any time I can help you in your difficulties I will be glad to do so."

Samuel Grant proposed a vote of thanks to be tendered to all retiring officers of the two organizations. They were given enthusiastically.

Colonel Kincaide declared he would put his shoulder to the wheel and aid the new president as much as possible during the ensuing year.

Mr. Washburn said that the single act of the officers in Washington in substituting Tuesday for Monday as the closing day brought in enough money to the exhibitors to pay their dues for the entire coming year.

Mr. Lydon stated that he believed the license cost for running Sunday shows in Boston would soon be reduced from $10 to $5. He said that he saw the Mayor's secretary Tuesday, the Mayor himself being sick at home, and he said he could not promise any action on the matter. Mr. Lydon stated, however, that he got in touch with the Mayor by telephone later in the day and put the question up to the chief executive. The Mayor said he would take the matter under consideration.

The cost of Sunday licensing was formerly only $5, but when the Mayor came in he raised the cost to $10, claiming it was a war measure and that the treasury was low at that time. Now that conditions are nearly normal again, the chances look rosy for the original amount to come back.

It was voted that Mr. Horstmann, as national treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, be given desk room in the Massachusetts' league headquarters at 127 Pleasant street.

President Lydon Promises His Best.

Dinner was served at 7 o'clock and the menu was elaborate. When the banquet was over Mr. Horstmann introduced the new president, Mr. Lydon, and called for a rousing cheer for the incoming chief executive.

"As much as I had dreaded the election," Mr. Lydon declared, "I will certainly do my best to aid the league and make it one of the finest organizations in the country. I feel proud of the confidence put in me and I will take off my coat and delve into the work of the organization and make the league a 100 per cent. organization.

"I believe that it is time we had an organization where we can demand the rights that are due us. During the coming year there are many things to be done. We are fortunate to get the date of closing changed from Monday to Tuesday. We must always be on our job so as to fight just such cases as that. No man is going to do the work alone. He must have the hearty support of every member. I am in favor of monthly meetings. We should get together and exchange ideas and accomplish something."

Alfred S. Black, president of the Maine Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and an ardent worker in the Massachusetts branch, was the next speaker on the schedule.

"I have rather dreaded the annual meeting of the league as I though there would be considerable fireworks," said Mr. Black. 'Of course, there were a few, but now the air is cleared and a lot of good has come from it. Differences will be a thing of the past and we will all work together from now on."

Mrs. Alice Rice Carroll, film executive of the New England Bureau of United States Official Government War Films and a well-known bay state lecturer, followed Mr. Black.

Marion Brazier Howard, president of the Film Club of Boston, and a writer for the Moving Picture World, was the next speaker. She praised the organizaton and reminded the members of the old Colonial expression, "If you don't hang together, you will all hang separately." The speaker paid a tribute to Mr. Horstmann. "The efforts of Mr. Horstmann will never be known," she said. "Of course mistakes have been made, mistakes will be made, but he has given an enormous amount of time to the league and those who have worked with him appreciate him."

Samuel Grant notified the meeting that because of the acute coal shortage, the new closing orders and other possibilities that might arise the officials in charge had decided to call off the New York exposition and devote their energies toward making the exposition in Boston, next summer, a complete success. Mr. Grant expects the Hub convention to make between $10,000 and $15,000.

"Boston," Mr. Grant continued, "can put over as big a convention as Chicago. World's Series, Auto Shows, and other affairs have always proved a success in the Hub, and the movie exposition will undoubtedly prove a tremendous success. You must all put your shoulder to the wheel and help make it a success."

Frank J. Howard, of the Atlas Film Company of this city, and dean of the industry, also spoke briefly.

Those present at the banquet were:

George F. Barlow, 2d, Princess theater, Plymouth; Charles H. Phillips, Universal exchange; Frank S. Truda, Goldwyn; Nathan Ross, Boston Photoplay; Edward E. Golden, manager, Boston Photoplay; "Al" Somerby, manager, Bowdoin Square; George Robinson, Paramount; Al Bevan, Olympic theater, South Boston; Alton H. Rocky Mountain Exhibitors Hold Election

H. T. Nolan Chosen President—Preparing to Hold the Annual Ball.

THE annual election of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club was held at its headquarters in Denver, Colo., January 18, H. T. Nolan being re-elected president, H. E. Huffman vice-president, and H. Bradley Fish secretary and treasurer.

The following directors were elected: Non-resident—Provas of Albuquerque, Morrison of Aspen, Anderson of Rawlins, Marquand of Longmont. Resident—H. T. Nolan, A. E. Fair, R. J. Churchill, D. L. Lehrberger, T. Y. Henry, H. B. Fish, H A Goodridge, H E Huffman.

R. J. Churchill was appointed chairman of the House Committee, H. T. Nolan of the Legislative Committee and H. Bradley Fish of the Publicity Committee.

The club is just entering upon its third year with the brightest of prospects. The Screen Club rooms are being enlarged and refinished and attention is at present focused upon the annual ball to take place about the 9th of February. Any person who may be passing through this district at that time is invited to stay over for this affair, which is planned to be a very brilliant one.

CINCINNATI HELPED IN OPENING THEATERS MONDAYS.

The Cincinnati Theater Managers Association takes some credit to itself for the concession made by the Fuel Administration in allowing the theaters to remain open on Mondays and to close Tuesdays instead. The organization met promptly upon the announcement of the suspension order, and discussed the matter thoroughly, the opinion being at once seen that the closing should be on Tuesday rather than on Monday. The fact that there will be thousands of people idle on the ten Monday holidays, and that they should have some place of decent amusement to resort to, was one of the principal arguments made, and it is probable that this was of weight with the Washington authorities in connection with the action taken. Attorney Ben L. Heidingsfeld, of Cincinnati, who was in New York at the time, was instructed by wire to work with the National Theatrical Managers' Association in its Washington conference, representing Cincinnati theaters, including moving picture houses as well as others, and the result of this action was highly gratifying to all concerned.

Detroit and Michigan A. E. A. Merge

M. W. McGee Elected President of Larger Organization—to Meet Weekly.

AT a special meeting held January 17 the Detroit and Michigan charters of the American Exhibitors' Association merged into one organization, to be known as the American Exhibitors' Association of Michigan. There will be weekly meetings at 1:30 every Thursday at the Board of Commerce. The membership is growing, but during the coming twelve months a vigorous effort will be made to increase it to 100 per cent. of the state exhibitors.

M. W. McGee.

The new officers are: President, M. W. McGee, Majestic Theatre, Detroit; 1st vice-president, Charles W. Porter, Forest Theater, Detroit; 2d vice-president, W. S. McLaren, Majestic Theater, Jackson; secretary, King Perry, Luna Theater, Detroit; treasurer, John Brennan, Cozy Theater, Detroit; M. W. McGee and Peter Jeup are national directors. The board of directors contains six from the state and four from Detroit.

A resolution was passed lending every aid and support to the state fuel administrator in the conservation of coal.

The latest ruling up to the time of writing was that theaters could operate all day Monday, close on Tuesday, and five hours the remainder of the week. A change modifying this order by the state fuel administrator is expected at any time.

The first Monday under the new order found all theaters doing a thriving business, the same as they would on any holiday or Sunday.

North Carolina Exhibitors to Meet

Gathering is Called to Consider Forming Booking Organization for League Members.

NORTH CAROLINA exhibitors have been called to meet at Greensboro on Tuesday, February 12, for the purpose of forming a co-operative booking office to handle all bookings for members of that league over the entire state of North Carolina, a committee, of which Percy W. Wells, of Wilmington, is chairman, having in hand the preparation of all working machinery for the operation of the office and to make a report to the meeting at that time.

It is the purpose of the Carolina exhibitors to handle the office upon a purely co-operative basis, without profit to any one, the services of the office to be available to any member of the state league who will come into the booking organization and sign such agreements of good faith as may be deemed necessary. It will be the intent of the members to use no service whatever in their theaters except that which is booked through the office, and the organization will therefore in all probability open negotiations with every manufacturer and distributor of pictures in the country. The manufacturers' representatives will be invited to attend the meeting at Greensboro so that immediately upon the completion of working plans the matter of bookings may be taken up with them without further delay.

It is also the purpose of the North Carolina League to handle all supplies and equipment for theaters under the same basis, through a co-operative supply house, to be located at a central point for distribution throughout the state. As a nuclues for the suppy house the league has been offered, at cost inventory, a supply house already established and enjoying a prosperous business, to be turned over to the league upon perfecting of satisfactory arrangements.

North Carolina Meeting

Small Attendance But Much Business at Raleigh—Will Meet Every Thirty Days Hereafter.

ADOPTING a resolution to meet in future every thirty days during the war crisis, the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association concluded a two-day business session at Raleigh, N. C., Friday night, Jan. 18, having accomplished much work despite the fact that the convention was the poorest attended in many years. The meetings were devoted strictly to business, all the directors being present and no social features disturbed the serious deliberations of one of the most progressive and compact State organizations in the United States.

At the final session Thursday a strong resolution was presented and adopted, urging upon Congress to rescind the seat and film taxes and exempt from the admission tax schedule all children under twelve years of age, who now pay a flat tax of one cent per admission. The resolution set forth that while the exhibitors of North Carolina are willing to co-operate with the government in every way possible, as has been done since the beginning of the war, that the three tax items mentioned imposed hardships upon them that were out of proportion to war taxation measures in other lines of industry.

In order to raise money to take the place of the eliminated taxes, the resolution proposes that admission taxes be placed on all adults, including admission to theaters charging five cents. Another item in this proposal pleads that the method of collection of the admission tax be made through the sale of tax tickets to be furnished by the government, and that the theaters purchase the tickets in blocks and that they be allowed a 10 per cent. discount for handling them.

That the State League may replenish its treasury which was badly depleted by the expense of their invasion of Chicago last July, every member of the State organization will on February 8 donate ten per cent. of its gross receipts to the treasury of the Association, to be used as needed at the discretion of the Board of Directors in furthering the interests of the industry both local and national. A part of this fund will go toward paying the pledge of this State toward the expense of Hon. Henry B. Varner, chairman of the National Legislative Committee, in his work at Washington. Another need is for the employment of a representative to remain at the State Capital during sessions of the Legislature, with duties similar to Mr. Varner's, but of only Statewide scope.

For the purpose of investigating a proposed system for the establishment of a co-operative booking office to handle blanket contracts for all pictures for the use of members of the league, a committee composed of H. R. Mason, Goldsboro; B. S. Aronson, Raleigh; R. D. Craver, Charlotte; H. B. Varner, Lexington, and P. W. Wells, Wilmington, was named. This committee will investigate several systems now in operation in different sections of the country, notably one originated by E. V. Richards, Jr., of the Saenger Amusement Company, which is said to be the ideal plan for handling co-operative booking contracts. It is the purpose of the Association to handle supplies and equipment in the same manner through a co-operative plant to be located at Charlotte.

To investigate the "Manufacturer-to-Exhibitor Direct Plan" of booking being promoted by several independent producers, a committee was named to confer with C. C. Pettijohn, former manager of the American Exhibitors' Association, who has undertaken the task of organizing this plan, approved by the allied exhibitor organizations at the Washington convention.

Another business session of the Association has been called to convene at Greensboro, February 11, when reports from those committees will be heard and such recommendations as may be made will be immediately acted upon. The last act of the convention was adoption of resolutions praising and thanking Hon. Henry B. Varner, for able work in behalf of the industry at Washington, and to Messrs. Aronson and Browne, the local committee on arrangements for entertaining the convention. D. M. BAIN.

ONTARIO LEAGUE ELECTS OFFICERS.

Members of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of Ontario gathered in Toronto on January 15 for the second annual meeting of the organization. W. Baillie, a well-known Toronto exhibitor, was elected president for the ensuing year in succession to Arthur Cohen of Toronto. P. J. Nolan of Ottawa was re-elected vice-president, F. E. Karn was elected treasurer, and H. Alexander of Toronto was re-elected secretary.

Various matters of importance were discussed, and the new executive committee was instructed to get busy on a number of features affecting conditions in Ontario. The executives held a meeting in Toronto on Sunday, January 20, to follow up the annual convention.

The membership of the association is about equally divided between Toronto and outside exhibitors.

Miami Valley Exhibitors' League Meets

Passes Resolutions to Aid Fuel Conservation and Take Pathe Dayton Exchange Back to the Fold.

A ROUSING meeting was held at the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League quarters Friday, January 18, in Dayton, Ohio, at which session the League sent telegrams to President Wilson, National Fuel Administrator Garfield, Senator Atlee Pomerene and Congressman Warren Gard who were no doubt a great help in changing the Monday closing order to Tuesday.

The meeting was a long one and was attended by all the members of the League, who number about 95 per cent. of the total. A. F. Kinsler was responsible for the framing of the telegram and to him belongs a large part of the credit for the accomplishment.

One of the important resolutions passed as far as the film exchanges are concerned was the motion made by Ed Banker to the effect the Pathe exchange be again given the patronage of the members of the League. Pathe has for quite a while been under ban in Dayton as far as the League is concerned, and this is mentional as the principal cause of the numerous changes made in local salesmen by the Pathe exchange. Ever since the coming of Jim Hamilton things have looked better for Pathe in Dayton, according to those who know, and it resulted in the motion passed and carried as given above.

A motion was also passed pledging allegiance to the local fuel administrator and promising him the use of the members' screens for any slides or pictures that would help in any of the numerous campaigns that are now in progress. The members of the League also pledged themselves to cut all useless lights as well as useless outside illumination for the period of the war.

Smaller Theaters Getting Slippery End

Portland Exhibitor Says Little Fellow Has to Pay Out of All Proportion.

AFTER three months' operation under war tax conditions, W. A. Graeper, manager of the Union Avenue Theater of Portland, Ore., and vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of that state, maintains that the smaller exhibitor—and there are, comparatively, thousands of him—is getting the worst end of the deal all around.

When interviewed recently Mr. Graeper spoke against the injustice of the 15 cents per reel tax. This, he says, is unfair because it charges the small exhibitor the same flat rate as it does the big fellow, while the margin of profit to the small theater is greatly smaller than that of the larger house.

Then comes the question of the admission tax. In order to show certain recognized good brands of films in that locality the exhibitors must charge 15 cents, and by reason of other high film rental prices 15 cents admission must be had to make the business go at all. The Portland downtown houses charge 20 cents, and it is not considered practical for the suburban shows to demand this price at this time. But the war tax requires 2 cents of the 15 the same as it does of the 20. Likewise, in order to keep the children's patronage, which is very good, suburban shows charge but 5 cents for the youngsters even where the adult price is 15 cents. The war tax is a cent just the same. Ten cents is received for children in downtown theaters and the tax is also a cent.

So figuring it all out Mr. Graeper concludes that the little fellow who must charge 15 cents admission pays a bigger percentage of his profits to the government as war tax than the big theater.

REID, FROZEN OUT, TAKES BACK TRAIL.

Wallace Reid, who recently started work at the New York studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Studio following his tour of the country, has left for California. Under the direction of Donald Crisp, Mr. Reid commenced activities on his new Paramount picture in the East, but owing to conditions brought about by the coal situation it was decided that he discontinue operation here.

New York Exposition Date Changed

Motion Picture Trade Show Postponed from February to October—All Contracts to Hold.

AT A MEETING of the motion picture exposition directors of the N. A. M. P. I., held Monday, January 21, it was decided to postpone the motion picture exposition scheduled for February 2-10 at the Grand Central Palace, New York, to October 5-13. The principal reason given was the unfavorable condition of the industry. All agreed that it would be inopportune to hold it now and much better in the fall, after Labor Day, when every one was on edge for the starting of a new season and when industrial conditions would probably be much improved.

The Grand Central Palace management released the National Association from the rental contract for February with the understanding that the $1,000 deposit would stand until October and the balance of $10,000 be paid at that time. This was very satisfactory to the National Association. Secretary H. F. Elliott has already collected 25 per cent. of the rental space from those who have contracted for it, and they agreed to pay another 25 per cent., which would more than cover the exposition's obligations. $26,000 worth of space had been contracted for. The $13,000 which will have been collected will be kept in bank until needed. If it is not used it will be returned to those who advanced it. This proposition met the approval of all who had contracted, although they were willing to pay the obligations of the National Association pro rata, and give up the exposition altogether if necessary.

It is the opinion of the majority of the trade that the exposition in October will be a big success, as the hoped for revival of business at that time will greatly aid it. Some thought it would follow the Boston exposition too closely, that one would run counter to the other unless the Boston show should be called off.

"LEST WE FORGET" OPENS AT LYRIC.

Metro's great screen spectacle of international war events, "Lest We Forget," starring Rita Jolivet, the noted Lusitania survivor, opens for a run at the Lyric Theater, New York, on January 28, marking the entry of Metro pictures into the ranks of regular Broadway theater attractions.

The showing on Broadway of this spectacle, which is a screen presentation of many causes contributing to the American entry into the great world war, is in line with Metro's announced drive for leadership. Recent evidences of the great strides made by Metro toward its desired goal are the productions of such pictures as "Revelation," with Nazimova; "The Legion of Death," with Edith Storey; "Blue Jeans," with Viola Dana, and "Daybreak," with Emily Stevens.

J. A. DERHAM ON TRIP FOR SELECT.

Controller J. A. Derham, of the Select Pictures organization, left January 24 for an extended trip to the Southwest and West. Mr. Derham's first stop will be made at Dallas. Here he expects to spend a week. Mr. Derham will spend several days or a week each in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle, and will probably stop in Denver on his way home.

MORE NATURAL COLOR FILMS AT WURLITZER HALL

The Douglass Natural Color Film Co. announces that it will give a trade exhibition of natural color films at Wurlitzer Hall, 120 West 40th street, New York, at 10.30 a. m. February 4, 5 and 6. These pictures are made under a process invented by Leon Forest Douglass of San Rafael, Cal.

Blue Tuesdays Mean Good Mondays

Telegrams to Goldwyn Tell of Big Business Sunday, Monday and Wednesday.

ON the Saturday before the first Tuesday shutdown in the theaters throughout the East the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation sent out several hundred telegrams to representatives, agents and employees in as many towns and cities, asking them to report accurately to the company as to the business done in the theaters on Monday, January 21.

Replies to these telegrams, coming in by mail and wire for the past week, reveal the encouraging news that the majority of the theaters in cities large and small and in houses of large and small capacity did a record-breaking business on that day. The outlook is that prosperous Mondays will continue for exhibitors throughout the period when their houses are dark on Tuesdays.

Business on Wednesday also, following the Tuesday shutdown, has been greatly stimulated. Many exhibitors, now having definite information born of actual experience, do not hesitate to predict that they will do a business in six days equal to that done in seven in localities where pictures are shown for the full seven days, and to equal in five days the business usually done in six days in zones where Sunday shows are not permitted.

This unlooked for outcome of what at first appeared to be a most damaging step by the Government's Fuel Administrator is not applicable merely to large cities, but was found to have been duplicated in small cities and towns as well. Intelligent exhibitors in many cities, sensing this possibility of focusing the public mind upon making up for a Tuesday deprivation by seeking their screen amusement on Monday, combined in paying for a newspaper announcement in the leading papers of their cities to make use of this argument for their patrons. There was an immediate response.

Goldwyn makes public the results of this investigation for the benefit of exhibitors everywhere, with the added suggestion that in some community where Monday attendance did not show immediate increase as a result of the Tuesday closing orders that Monday patronage can be immediately stimulated by bringing the situation of a theater's patrons through the medium of the customary advertising in the amusement columns of the local newspaper, in the house programs each week, or even by means of the special mailing lists that each alert theater manager maintains.

In the reports to Goldwyn there were also instances of exhibitors who found that the public's knowledge of the Tuesday shutdown also stimulated Sunday patronage above previous levels, giving many exhibitors the virtual benefit of two holiday-size days a week instead of the customary one.

Poughkeepsie Stratford Opens

First Showing in Hundred-Thousand-Dollar House is "The Cinderella Man."

WHEN Poughkeepsie's new $100,000 motion picture theater, The Stratford, opened for the first time on Monday, January 21, the honor fell to a Goldwyn production—Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man"—to be the initial attraction.

The Stratford is distinctly a Poughkeepsie institution, made possible by the public spirit and interest of Ely Elting, Herbert R. Gurney, John Lurie, W. De Garmo Smith, D. W. Wilbur, Dr. H. L. Salsbury, Albert F. Schwartz, John H. Doherty, Edward E. Perkins and C. W. H. Arnold. It is situated at the corner of Liberty and Cannon streets, and is the largest theater for the exclusive production of photoplays in that section of the state. The structure was designed by W. H. McElfatrick, of New York. Edgar V. Anderson, of Poughkeepsie, was the general contractor. The main floor seats 1,000 persons and the balcony 500. There will be daily changes of program. W. W. Williams is the manager.

SCHAYER FINALLY GETS CHANCE TO FIGHT.

E. Richard Schayer, of the Paralta staff of authors, has applied for enlistment in the army aviation corps, and has passed the physical examinations. He expects to be called in a week or ten days. Mr. Schayer has tried several times before to enlist in some branch or other of the army, but was unable to do so because he had previously lost his citizenship by serving in the British army. This was at the beginning of the war.

Seeing Nature for Millions of Spectators

By Hanford C. Judson

Wonderful Microscopic Camera in Argus Film Laboratories Gives Magic Eye to All Who Sit Before the Screen—Broadening Human Experience

"WHAT are you trying to do?" asked a representative of the Moving Picture World of Horace D. Ashton, head of the Argus Film laboratories.

"We are trying to make it possible for the world to see the secrets of nature and be entertained at the same time," was his reply.

"Can you make microbes entertaining?"

"Why not? If we can show their life cycle, the natural history of a microbe, and he is more wonderful to look at than any beast of the forest, won't he be worth seeing? Besides there is much for us to show that can be seen without a microscope."

A Cyclops, Showing External Egg Sacs.

We begged Mr. Ashton to let us see just how he went about making the wonder films, so interesting and at the same time so instructive, that are being released for him by the Pathe Exchange in the Argus Pictorial.

"The first work on microscopical pictures was done by the Marey Institute of Paris," he told us as he led the way into his laboratory. "They had to discontinue work at the outbreak of the war and I tried to get their apparatus; but the French Government refused to let it leave the country. I have managed to get all the apparatus I need and, perhaps, have one or two wrinkles that even the Marey Institute didn't have. As I said, this microscope work is only a part of our field; but it is limitless in its variety of interest.

"One of the beauties of it is that you don't have to travel. A trolley trip will bring you to the edge of a swamp or stream. You scoop a bit of the ground scum into a bottle and carry it home. It becomes a great hunting ground and you search over it with your microscope. You can work in winter as well as in summer. In winter some forms of this minute, microscopic life take shapes hard to recognize and I have had to call on a specialist to identify certain specimens. Dr. R. W. Miner, Ph.D., assistant curator of the Department of Invertebrate Zoology at the Museum of Natural History of New York, has helped me a great deal along these lines.

"When we get the subject home and discover him with the microscope we make a study of him, taking moving pictures of scenes in his life with an eye always to a screen exhibition. The interest that the spectator takes in what we show depends largely on our choice of scenes. We have to know something about the creature to know what interesting things we may expect him to do and what to wait for. Some of the best things we grind out are wholly unexpected. Something makes him perform for us in a way that is a delight on the screen.

"I will show you just how we go about making a picture. Here is a jar of moss and water cress that has a rich scum on the bottom. The water in this is always fresh. The vegetable life and the animal life in it are balanced and keep the water just as it is. We never change it, merely keep it full. Now we'll dip down and get just a drop of the dirt and water on the bottom and put it on a slide of glass and put this other very thin piece of glass over it. It looks like very narrow quarters between those glasses; but when you look through this microscope you will see room enough for the microbe to dive and swim and do any thing he pleases."

He looked through the brass tube and uttered an exclamation of delight. "Here's a beautiful Brown Hydra. I didn't expect him here. Take a peep at him and then I'll take a picture and I'm glad indeed to get it."

I looked and saw something like a silver plant growing up in the middle of all the room in the world. It lengthened its stem and felt around with delicate tentacle arms. Then something made the instrument shake and the creature crouched down again making itself shrink into almost no dimensions.

Mr. Ashton then took the microscope to a special frame shown in the accompanying illustration that permits rigging up the microscope as an integral part of moving picture camera and at the same time the use of a properly housed arc lamp to shed a ray of light through glass slide holding the specimen and through the microscope to the film in the camera. There is an arrangement on the camera by which the operator can watch what is going on so that he can start grinding when something worth recording is going on and not waste film on unimportant things.

"This Brown Hydra will make a part of one of our screen magazines some day," said Mr. Ashton. "There won't be enough of him to tire the people and in the same magazine number there will be four or five other subjects of an entirely different nature. One of our releases, for instance, contained a picture of two mackaws which one of our associates caught while working on the Orinoco River in South America. He was watching and he saw the two begin to climb a great tree with the help of their bills. It was so interesting that he brought the camera into play and got a fine picture of it. There will also be a picture showing a sheep ranch in Peru and making clear that the wool from North American sheep is different from that of these sheep. There will also be a picture of a beaver dam and of beaver homes. They are the hardest animals in the world to photograph, for they work only in darkness. You have to plan carefully to get worth while views of them. Then there will be some bit of microscopical photography like the picture of the Brown Hydra. We aim to get some bit of microscopical life in every release, just enough of it to be interesting.

Horace D. Ashton, President and General Manager, Argus Laboratories, and J. Jas, de Vyres Professor of Natural History.

"We have eight screen magazine numbers ready to go out and have already released six of them. The intention is to have a new one ready and release it every two weeks."

The Argus Film Laboratories are finely housed on the top of the Candler Building, 220 West 42d street, New York City. Here is every facility for the production of the interesting and instructive pictures that are growing most popular.

To Present Tax Brief to Congress

Legislative Committee of Allied Exhibitors About Ready to Report Result of Country-Wide Investigation of Conditions.

IN the furtherance of his work as secretary of the Allied Exhibitors' Legislative Committee, which body is about to present to Congress a brief representing the consensus of opinion of the exhibitors of the country respecting remedial legislation on tax matters, Frank J. Rembusch of Indiana was in New York last week. Mr. Rembusch, as secretary, has been busy collating the replies received from exhibitors as to their present business troubles. He has digested and summarized these and turned them over to H. B. Varner, chairman of the committee, for further welding into shape for presentation to Congress. The other exhibitors on the committee are Lee A. Ochs, E. H. Horstmann and J. H. O'Donnell. This is the body named as the result of the recent exhibitors gathering in Washington at which were present representatives of the National League and the American Exhibitors' Association.

Working in conjunction with the exhibitors have been five representatives of the producers. The sole aim of the joint body has been to determine what the industry as a whole really wants. In answer to the advertisements printed in the trade papers several hundred replies have been received. They have come from forty-four states, and in some instances have been sent in by exhibitors' organizations, these latter being framed to express the collective opinion of their members. The secretary of the committee is anxious to get more answers from exhibitors as to how they and their competitors are affected by the war tax. Brief, concise replies are requested, and they may be sent to him at 407 Indiana Trust Building, Indianapolis. It is unnecessary for exhibitors or film men to come to Washington. Mr. Varner is there on the job and is giving his closest attention to the tax matter.

Prospects for remedial legislation in Washington are favorable, Mr. Rembusch says. The Indianian besides taking care of the correspondence of the joint committee is also acting as the chief executive of the American Exhibitors' Association. In this latter work he has taken over the duties that formerly fell to Charles C. Pettijohn, who previous to his resignation and affiliation with an independent producers' association, was general manager. Mr. Rembusch made a strong plea for the hearty support by the industry of Mr. Varner, who, he says, has been doing splendid work.

Summing up the replies so far received from exhibitors Mr. Rembusch expressed the opinion that 30 per cent. of the theaters in the country had been closed in recent months, with a consequent similar decline in the amount of film being booked. He declared his belief that this was no exaggeration as to the loss of business, that conditions were worse than the great majority of picture men realized. In Indianapolis, for instance, twenty-four theaters out of a total of seventy had been closed in the last three months.

Hardest hit by war conditions have been the theaters in the small towns. The allied committee secretary has been more impressed by the reports he has received from traveling men than from letters he has had from exhibitors direct. These former quoted many small exhibitors as saying they would be willing to keep open if they could be sure of clearing ten or twelve dollars a week, but that they could not stand a loss. It is these smaller showmen who must receive the whole-hearted support of their more fortunate fellows, Mr. Rembusch declares. They must be tided over. An instance was cited of the only theater in a town of 4,600 population that had been running at a loss of $30 a week and consequently compelled to suspend.

"We have got to give the little theaters more time and attention," said Mr. Rembusch.

LEONHARDT TEMPORARILY IN NEW ENGLAND.

Harry Leonhardt, general Western Manager of Goldwyn Pictures, with headquarters in Los Angeles, has been called east and is now on a special commission for his organization in New England, temporarily stationed in Boston. Mr. Leonhardt, who is one of the best-known executives in film salesmanship, has direction for Goldwyn of the Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle zones, and is one of the outstanding figures in the West Coast country. Owing to his years of experience in theatricals in the east and his business association with the Keith and Proctor interests, he is known to theatrical men in every part of the east, and Goldwyn is fortunate in having him available for confidential work in New England. During his temporary trip to the east Mr. Leonhardt's family are remaining in warmer California.

Rowland Re-elected President of Metro

Stern, Stoneman, Hulsey and Cohen Are New Members of the Board of Directors.

RICHARD A. ROWLAND was unanimously re-elected president of the Metro Pictures Corporation at the annual meeting of the directors, following a two days' session of the stockholders of the corporation, at their offices in the Long Acre Building January 18. James B. Clark, of Pittsburgh, was elected first vice-president; E. H. Hulsey, of Dallas, Texas, second vice-president; J. W. Engel, treasurer; Charles K. Stern, assistant treasurer, and J. Robert Rubin, secretary and general counsel. The directorate elected includes four new names, namely, Charles K. Stern, who has been cashier and auditor for Metro since its organization; David Stoneman, of Boston; E. H. Hulsey, of Dallas, and H. J. Cohen, of New York. The directors re-elected were Richard A. Rowland, James B. Clark, J. W. Engel, John Kunsky of Detroit and A. S. Behmer of Pittsburgh.

It was announced that Metro's renewed activities along larger and broader lines would be dealt with in a forthcoming statement from President Rowland. Metro has definitely announced that it proposes to go after the leadership of the motion picture industry. Metro has further plans matured, including a five-reel picture production by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew of an unusual and mirth-provoking sort, which is the most pretentious thing ever done by these well-known stars.

Metro recently has pronounced a policy of open booking for first, second and third-run theaters, and this policy will not only be continued but will be vigorously advocated in all parts of the United States by the Metro representatives, who are still meeting at the home offices in this city.

"Smiling Jimmy" Returns to Consolidated

Takes Up Old Job of Sales Manager in Atlantic Office Following Advent of William Oldknow.

JAMES B. KELLY, former manager of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company of Atlanta, who severed his connection with that company last fall, has again taken charge of the sales force of the Atlanta office, with the advent of William Oldknow, who returns to that company as general manager.

In addition to being general sales manager Mr. Kelly will continue to look after his interests in the Southern States Film Company, which is handling the output of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation in the South. Mr. Kelly reports quite a large success so far with the two inital releases, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" and "Those Who Pay."

Mr. Kelly has engaged as his assistant manager, Mrs. E. Wright, who has been connected with the film industry in Atlanta for the past six years, having been associated with the General, Mutual and other organizations. She also retains her position of assistant manager of The Southern States Film Company. Mr. Kelly has installed his offices at 111 Walton street, adjacent to the local branch office of the Consolidated.

Mr. Kelly reports that business in Florida is about normal and the weather unusually hot.

Among the changes made by Mr. Oldknow in assuming general management of the Consolidated was in appointing C. T. Jordan manager of his Jacksonville office, as the former manager, John R. Barton, has reported to the army camp at Columbia, S. C.; W. E. Sipe, former roadman, was appointed manager of the Memphis office, and U. T. ("Doc") Kook, former special representative of the Paramount in Atlanta, was installed as office manager in the Atlanta branch.

HENLEY TO DIRECT MAE MARSH.

Preparations for Goldwyn's new production starring Mae Marsh include the engagement of Hobart Henley as director. His pronounced success in presenting "Parentage" to the public brought Mr. Henley to the attention of Goldwyn, and a contract was signed whereby he becomes the guiding factor in the Mae Marsh drama.

Hobart Henley's capital work as leading man in several Universal features, notably "The Evil Women Do" and "June Madness," seemed to make stardom his future place in the world of motion pictures. But he chose to give directing a higher place than acting and produced a number of features before sponsoring "Parentage."

The finished scenario of the Mae Marsh play is now in his hands and the cast is being gradually selected. Again Irwin S. Cobb furnishes Mae Marsh with a play. Mr. Henley promises to sustain the directors' important part with noteworthy skill.

General Film Executives Move Uptown

Big Exchange Organization Deserts Its Fourth Avenue Quarters for Berkeley Building in Forty-fourth Street.

BY a lease signed last week the executive offices of General Film Company will be located in the new Berkeley Building, 25 West Forty-fourth street, New York City. The change is effective February 1.

Thus another film company removes its headquarters uptown from what was formerly a considerable motion picture district of New York. The quarters which the executive officers of General Film Company are vacating at 440 Fourth avenue, at Thirtieth street, were occupied by it for two years after its removal from the Fifth Avenue Building at Twenty-fourth street. Before that the company occupied a location at 80 Fifth avenue. The location now being relinquished is in the center of the silk district, which also has been known as a magazine district. However, in going uptown General Film by chance is following a number of magazines which have gone uptown, and in fact enters a building already occupied by some of its former Fourth avenue neighbors, notably the McClure publications.

General Film will be found occupying the seventeenth or top floor of the Berkeley Building, the whole suite being splendidly lighted from all sides. Accommodations will be maintained here for the executive officers, board of directors, auditing department, general sales department, legal department, and accounting department. The modern plan of office arrangement will prevail, the entire personnel of the offices occupying the entire space of the suite without partitions. This permits of diffusion of light to best advantage and also of ventilation to best advantage, and promotes the co-ordination of office activities.

The Berkeley Building is excellently situated as regards transportation, being within easy reach of all subways, elevated and surface lines, Grand Central terminal, and is also close to the uptown motion picture district. The building was finished and first occupied by tenants a few months ago. It runs through from Forty-fourth street to Forty-fifth street, with a main floor arcade, and is situated just west of Fifth avenue. There is up-to-date elevator service.

Mail intended for General Film Company's main office after January 31 should be directed to reach the new location in the Berkeley Building, 25 West Forty-fourth street. The New York exchange office of the company remains at 71 West Twenty-third street as formerly.

Pathe Weekly Seven Years Old

Review of the Life of a Department of Trade Activity That Has Developed Into an Institution.

WITH 1918 the Hearst-Pathe News, or at least the Pathe Weekly end of it, celebrates its seventh anniversary, a record unparalleled in the industry. During that time not an issue has been missed, not once has it failed to come out on time. The value which it has been to the exhibitor and the hold that it has upon the affections of the public is shown by its wide popularity.

The motion picture news weekly, first conceived by Charles Pathe eleven years ago, in 1907, today has a power that at first was not dreamed of. Its strength is so great that it is invoked to aid the Government in matters of national welfare. The Hearst-Pathe News was and is of great aid in stimulating recruiting for the army and navy and aviation corps; it was of great assistance in helping the Red Cross attain its ambitions in acquiring its big membership and in depicting the work done by the organization; it was called upon to aid both of the Liberty Bond issues, and did so constantly week after week with cartoons, titles and pictures. "Unlike newspapers," says a Pathe official, "it has no politics and favors no candidate. It is unbiased save in the interests of truth, justice and patriotism. It knows no church as distinguished from another, yet it is a force for morality and the right. Its views cannot be bought. Each issue is of such a character that it may be safety shown in any church without censorship and without cutting, and yet it is always interesting. Of what other class of pictures can all this be truthfully said?"

The alliance made with the Hearst organization one year ago brought to the old Pathe News force of news picture gatherers in all parts of the world a much larger source of supply. The many Hearst newspapers have each of them staffs of news photographers who thus at once were automatically added to the force of motion picture cameramen.

"The Hearst-Pathe News is not content to rest upon its laurels," said one of the men connected with it the other day. "Its plans for 1918 contemplate an even wider activity, usefulness and distribution."

De Mille Comments on Los Angeles Censorship

Sane Supervision Is All Right, Says Famous Players-Lasky Director, but We Have No Room for Czars.

SANE censorship would be a good thing for the motion picture industry in Los Angeles, but the matter of a sane censorship is a very hard thing to secure," declared C. B. De Mille, commenting upon the recent move by the City Council of Los Angeles to create the position of a local motion picture censor.

"If censorship is conducted in any city on reasonable grounds it will be of value, not only to the public, but to the motion picture industry. In Los Angeles at the present time, for instance, there are a few pictures seen on the screen which should undoubtedly be consigned to the flames. They are a bad thing for the industry, casting discredit upon the legitimate producers who, I believe, are doing the best they can to produce good, clean pictures.

"The great difficulty is to secure a censorship which is not czarlike. In certain cities, notably Chicago, we have had examples of censorship in which the official sets himself up not only as a guardian of public morals, but also as a critic of art. It is a condition similar to that which has applied in Russia. There the country has been burdened by high officials who, overstepping their natural rights, have for personal or other reasons made themselves censors of matters both civil and religious, denying to the public things which are theirs by inalienable right.

"We have no room for czarlike censors in America. Let them act with due reason and within their limitations. But let them keep their fingers off the matter of artistic criticism. If a film production contains matters which they would bar for purely personal reasons such censors have no right to their position. Let us have sane censorship."

BROOKS TO MANAGE HESPERIA.

The latest addition to the ranks of film exploiters on a world-wide scale is Hesperia Films Company, Inc., of which concern Edgar O. Brooks has been elected vice-president and general manager. The Hesperia Company will handle big features only, of both foreign and domestic manufacture, for exploitation in the United States, Canada, Cuba, South America, and Central America, with a probability of extending its operations later to Australasia, China, Japan, Philippines, India and South Africa.

The directors of Hesperia have shown great business acumen in appointing such a well-known and experienced executive for general manager. Mr. Brooks' qualifications for the position are obvious. He recently resigned the general sales management of the Mutual Film Corporation (after a connection lasting upward of two years), and his previous affiliations with the firms of Gaumont, Universal and Cosmofotofilm, when he handled every conceivable branch of the business end of motion pictures during six years of active participation in the American field will make him valuable.

Hesperia's initial feature release will be "Morok," a seven-reel picturization of Eugene Sue's dramatic masterpiece, "The Wandering Jew."

BROUSE TO RELEASE THROUGH METRO.

Henry Brouse, the holder of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Eastern Canada, announces that he has completed arrangements with J. J. Unger, of the Metro film service, whereby the latter's exchange will handle all First National releases, including the forthcoming "Signature Protected" Chaplin Comedies. Mr. Brouse still owns the franchise, and retains his full rights as a member of the circuit, the new affiliation being solely an exchange convenience, which both parties feel will prove mutually beneficial.

WHITNEY TO MANAGE GENERAL IN DENVER.

G. W. Whitney, an experienced film salesman and executive of several years standing, has just been appointed manager of General Film Company's branch office at Denver, which, by the way, is in the nature of a return engagement. He leaves the management of the Mutual Butte exchange to assume his new position. Mr. Whitney is well acquainted with both the exchange and exhibitor departments of the film industry, having been manager of a Kewanee (Ill.) theater for a time, and later proprietor of a well-known Denver theater.

Gaumont to Distribute Paramount Subjects

John C. Graham Returns from Europe Bringing Contract Covering France and Colonies, Switzerland, Belgium and Egypt.

WITH the return of John C. Graham, general foreign representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who has been in Europe for the past eight months studying the situation in Great Britain and France, comes the announcement of a contract entered into with the Gaumont Company which is said to be the biggest moving picture deal ever consummated in France. This contract, which becomes immediately effective, is important not only owing to the amount of money involved, but as an indication of the future policy of the film business in Europe, as well as demonstrating that the modern film production with famous play and noted star is sweeping the world. The contract covers France and her colonies, Switzerland, Belgium and Egypt, which will be served by the distributing offices. The distribution in Belgium, of course, will begin when the war closes.

"The star system was already well established in England," says Mr. Graham, "but in France no effort had been made properly to exploit such productions. We had a contract with a concern for the handling of our film, but Mr. Zukor sent me to Europe owing to the extreme necessity of arranging to have the output placed for France in the hands of an institution strong enough financially and with an organization well enough equipped to handle the distribution satisfactorily, in accordance with the new policy covering the changes in production.

John C. Graham.

"I found Leon Gaumont, the head of the Gaumont Company, in a receptive frame of mind for the ambitious and enlarged policies of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. As a famous producer and controlling a powerful chain of distribution as well as operating large picture houses, Mr. Gaumont has given much study to existing conditions, and though he has not been in America for more than a year he has kept in close touch and has adjusted his organization for the inevitable new policies.

"Under the old regime the Gaumont Company had a contract for Pallas and Morosco pictures, and their experience with these films, through their distributing offices and in their own theaters, satisfactorily demonstrated the future trend of the business in France. On account of war conditions they have decided to change their own producing plans, and confine their production activities to a few larger subjects each year.

"As in this country and in England the public had become critical, and the Gaumont Company wished to secure a contract that was in line with its high standing in France, and recognized the fact that Paramount and Artcraft pictures are splendidly suited for the long runs that have become the vogue. They were far-sighted enough to perceive the trend the star situation had taken in England and America, and felt confident that the French public would follow. They have arranged for a big campaign of publicity Deal Shows French Confidence in Future.

"This move of Gaumont should dispel any pessimism that may exist in this country, for it reflects the confidence in France of ultimate victory over Germany. It has been shown that the motion picture is the favorite amusement of France, for despite the dark days that gallant country has seen, and the curtailment of non-essential things due to economic conditions, the public has held determinedly to its picture houses.

"I must confess I have been surprised at the pessimistic talk I have heard from some quarters, which is in contrast to the spirit exhibited in France, where the fighting is taking place, and the nation is repelling attacks by air and undersea. We all have to make sacrifices, and experience some inconveniences, but the American exhibitor with the instincts of a real showman who will adjust himself to the inevitable need have no serious fears. In times like these the biggest and best productions with the famous plays and noted stars will weather the storm. In the battle for supremacy the man who brings the biggest guns to bear will win, and longer runs with the best pictures is the slogan to be adopted."

The Situation in England.

"England has been far in the lead in the way of getting higher admission prices," says Mr. Graham, "for there they have always been on a good plane, especially with the better class of houses, though in the small towns they have been up against the proposition of patronage composed of workingmen receiving small wages and they could not raise prices as they would like to.

"The J. D. Walker World's Films, Limited, began several years ago with the distribution of Famous Players films, and they have grown to a remarkable degree. We have effected with that corporation a much more close and satisfactory working arrangement for the handling of Paramount and Artcraft pictures, with the result that these subjects are now being distributed through ten offices throughout the United Kingdom, where stars have already become extremely popular, and where our films are, without any question, in the largest percentage of the best theaters throughout Great Britain.

"The showmen as a class are wideawake and intelligent, and it is simply wonderful what they have been able to do in spite of the war obstacles confronting them for the past three years. The theaters generally are all doing a good business, the admission ranging from 25 to 75 cents and some of the lower-class houses charging 10 and 15 cents.

"In normal times the number of houses is approximately 4,200, and the decrease has been inconsequential. In fact, they have done remarkably well. The government has seen that to counteract the gloom of the war the public must be amused, to divert the mind from the fact that practically every family has some loved one at the front or has suffered losses. The British government has been very far-sighted in that respect after the people passed through the first shock of the early months of the war. Drastic action was contemplated at first in regard to restricting the theaters, but the prominent film men of England interceded and nothing was done, and it is now recognized that it would have been detrimental to the public good to have interfered with the popular entertainment.

"The war tax is arrived at in a different manner than here, for it is an arbitrary amount, increasing with the price of the ticket. One benefit derived from the war is the fact that the government has discovered that the motion picture industry is an important one, and to be seriously taken into consideration in the life of the nation.

"The continual changing of help is one of the many difficulties under which the theaters have had to labor, as the men were taken into the army, and women have taken their places. It is a common thing to see a staff of women, including the ushers and even the managers. The shortage in operators is being replaced by the commendable work of Capt. Kimberly, who is running a school in which he trains incapacitated soldiers for this branch of the industry.

"The importation of certain machinery is prohibited, and this includes motion picture machines and parts, so that as the projectors have worn out the exhibitors have had hard work maintaining good projection.

"The British exhibitor thinks far ahead, and books for six months ahead. He moves cautiously, but hews close to the line. That is the reason he has been so successful in adverse times. A booking contract is considered sacred and rarely is broken.

Mr. Graham is well known throughout the film world as a man of exceptional ability, who withdrew from large and successful commercial business projects to become identified with the film industry. He was at one time a large stockholder in the Reliance and other motion picture producing companies and one of the promoters and organizers of the Mutual Film Corporation, in which he held a position of great responsibility from which he resigned to take the general management of the Universal. His successful conduct of the affairs of that company won the admiration and respect of the trade. He again became connected with the Mutual Film Corporation as assistant to the president, and about two years ago was offered the position he now holds.

Entertainment for Country Districts

How the Mingo Centralized Rural School Is Operating a Public Picture Show

By B. A. Aughinbaugh, Principal Mingo Centralized School, Mingo, Ohio.

FOR some time past public schools in the larger cities have been installing motion picture apparatus with a view to using the motion pictures for illustrating class work and giving now and then a public entertainment. Much of the apparatus installed in this manner has been of the portable type which was never, of course, intended for any other purpose than the above.

This serves the purpose of the city people well enough for they have the regular show houses to depend on for their entertainment and recreation. In the rural districts this form of entertainment is almost entirely lacking, and it is because of this unfortunate condition more than any other that we have had the lamentable migration from the country to the cities. This migration has depopulated whole rural communities and this unfortunate depopulation has been felt only too keenly in the markets of the nation. It is an old saying that all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy, and the country Jacks do not differ from those in town.

A few years ago a cry arose, "Back to the farm" or we'll starve. The national and state governments became frantic in their efforts to better country life and attract people to farm work. The farmer no longer became an object of scorn in cartoons and funny papers. The "little red school house" received a death blow and in its place arose palatial palaces of education equal and even superior to the school buildings of the large cities. The youth must be taken care of and educated at home to keep the parents on the farms and attract the youth to follow their example. But still the migration went on and is still going on. Then it was that another cry arose—"We must give the farmer recreation." This called for community work. Farmers' institutes came into existence and lecture courses were planned. We are now living in this period of effort. But statistics show no great improvement in the migration that must be stopped.

By experience I knew that the first place a farmer made for after he had done his trading in town was the picture show. He cared little about being bored with lengthy addresses on agricultural subjects or literature on the same, especially from men whom he well knew were less informed on his needs than he was. What he wanted was amusement, the kind that any other red blooded individual hankered after. The "movies" seemed to especially suit him.

Here is where I possessed the idea of conducting a regular bona fide picture show in our capacious centralized school auditorium. I reasoned it would supply the relaxation the farmer must have and at the same time it would net the school an independent income for furthering this community work.

I bought out a picture house that had failed—machine, screen and booth—and installed the same in our school auditorium, which seats five hundred people. Please remember that this is out in the country. The pupils are hauled to this school by wagons that pick them up each morning and return them home at night. The building is lighted by a 125-volt 60 amp. D. C. dynamo in the basement, and it is from this outfit that we draw our current for our pictures.

Our first show was put on Friday, May 31, 1917, and consisted of the following pictures from Paramount (Cincinnati Branch): "Cinderella," Burton Holmes travel and a Bray cartoon. Since then we have put on a show every Friday night and sometimes twice a week. The project was a huge financial success from the start. This may be seen from the fact that since the above date (about 6 months) we have been able to add a second machine to our booth and a player-piano of the best sort to our auditorium, besides many other lesser advances. We now have three other schools imitating our example in this county.

Have we succeeded in our original intention? Time is too short to report that, but I do know that a farm recently changed hands here at $300 per acre that a year ago would not have brought half that sum, because the purchaser wanted to live here where he said the community was alive. Do you get that word alive and its full significance? That is the country has been dead or perhaps sleeping. The "movies" are a form of entertainment that can reach out where the "legitimate" stage could never go. And it is going to regenerate our rural districts.

We use pictures from all the large film houses, Paramount, Vitagraph, Triangle, Fox, Metro, Mutual, etc. These concerns have been very considerate and have assisted us wonderfully in the work. We have demanded and obtained nothing but clean entertaining features, comedies and educational reels. I think that at first they smiled at our efforts, but when they found we always paid our charges in advance, and never were delinquent, they came to the conclusion that our business was just as good as any one's, and it had a purpose besides lining someone's already large purse.

Inasmuch as to date we have only attempted one program per week we have been unable to go under regular contracts, but have used open service bookings entirely. And I may say that Paramount has obtained most of our business because they showed the greatest disposition to please. Then, too, they have less of the "vampire" junk on their release sheets, which I know does not bring us patrons.

Unfortunately as yet we are not able to rent the big first run shows, but we do not need them. We do not want cast off junk, however, for remember the farmer of today is not the farmer of the cartoons—he can tell what is up-to-date. I may also remark that imbued with this idea we have worked for and obtained almost perfect projection and have outdistanced our more professional brother along this line. People now come from long distances to see the "Mingo Pictures," as they call them. We have gone at this part of our work scientifically, with the preciseness of laboratory work in optics and light.

I trust this move will grow, as it is bound to do, and may the picture makers, from the pretty actress down realize that they are helping to fight old H. C. L.

Pathe to Analyze Equine Movements

"The Horse in Action," Released February 10, Will Be a Single Reel and in Color.

ON February 10 Pathe will release a one-reel picture in color, "The Horse in Action," which is of more than ordinary importance. Most persons will remember the several "analysis of motion" pictures which Pathe has issued in the past and recall their extraordinary beauty and interest. "The Horse in Action" shows running and pumping horses as seen by the "ultra rapid" camera, a Pathe invention. The various scenes are in the nature of a revelation.

Ordinary motion pictures are, of course, taken with a camera recording sixteen pictures a second and are projected at the same speed. With the Pathe ultra rapid camera the pictures are taken at the rate of 120 to the second, or even more. These pictures are projected at the ordinary rate with the consequence that animate objects in the film move so slowly that the eye can easily follow every phase of the muscular action.

The effects to be noticed in the case of the horses in "The Horse in Action" are extraordinary. In the first place the horses selected for these camera studies were remarkably beautiful animals with sleek shining coats. As they go over the hurdles or gallop along the track every muscular movement is clearly visible. As they jump they seem to float in the air like thistledown. Every phase of their actions makes splendid material for the artist and the sculptor. When one sees these pictures he is conscious that he never has seen in art true interpretation of motion. The fine lifelike coloring adds greatly to the beauty of the film.

MAE MARSH DOLL BRINGS $231.

Mae Marsh's doll, dressed by her in the character she plays in Goldwyn's "Cinderella Man," did much toward swelling the receipts of Hero Land, New York's great war bazaar. The report just made public by John Moffett states that the doll netted $231.50, the proceeds of chances.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

SCORE one for Mrs. Ayer, who gave us the first run here of "The Man Without a Country," which I hope every fan will see for its lessons all through, starting in with the present war situation with a pacifist, leading up to the reading by him of Edward Everett Hale's masterpiece which gives the play its title. I have not seen finer acting in a long time than that of H. E. Herbert in a double role—that of John Alton, the lover and erstwhile pacifist, and later as Nolan himself. There was a fine atmosphere and good directing greatly to the credit of Ernest Warde and to Thanhouser for producing this "Jewel" of a picture. Then, too, we had the late Florence La Badie as the young heroine, and the veteran actor J. H. Gilmour. Lloyd Lonergan deserves a vote of thanks for his work in making the scenario. The club scenes were unusually good and I for one did not find an "out" about any of it. For some reason this picture did not have any advance mention here, and was put on for only six performances. Right across the way from Mrs. Ayer's theater is the church where Hale preached.

One day last week I saw six pictures with several short reels sandwiched between. The first was a private showing at the Globe of "Raffles," with Lionel Barrymore, and it is some picture, as good as the play which ran so long with Kyrle Bellew. "Barry" has relinquished his mustache, looks much younger and, as a dear young thing said audibly, "is handsomer, ain't he?" There is good support in this, plenty of suspense and punch. From there I went to Tremont Temple to see "Our Navy" in colors, preceded by three short subjects of rare beauty. Hugo Sherwin, the manager, had 600 Boy Scouts in the balconies as guests, and how they did applaud. Things that got me strong were the pictures of Washington from the Stuart painting in its colors, and of John Paul Jones made from the painting at Annapolis done by Miss Cecilia Beaux, of Philadelphia.

Then I went to the Park, where Manager Soriero had a cordial welcome. Saw "Blue Jeans" with little Dana. Fine picture, strong in detail, differing little from the play. Why such awful pictures of the players on the titles—all open-mouthed and vacant? This should be remedied to avoid the laughs they cause.

"Between Men," a strong Triangle with W. S. Hart and House Peters, an old picture, but good for reissue. Here we get Hart in a dress suit in one scene, and he made a hit with the house. That evening I saw another Hart picture, "The Silent Man," an Artcraft—and the memory of it will live long owing to the hideous snake of the boa-constrictor type, repulsive and unnecessary.

We have had Rose Tapley here for a week making a lot of new friends wherever she has appeared. Clubwomen were glad to welcome her. The Film Club gave her a reception at the Westminster, when many notable women and players in town were bidden to meet her and hear her forceful words. She dwelt at length on the Chapin pictures, portraying the life of Lincoln. There was music and tea, and in the receiving line was Lotta, who owns the Park theater, now given over to high class pictures. Miss Marion H. Brazier arranged the details, aided by the members of her board of directors.

Congratulations to Vitagraph in securing Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey for the coming picture of "Over the Top," from the book of which he is author. We have met him here and feel that his name will carry weight for the box office, coupled with the expected work of the company producing it.

So we are to get "Prunella," with Marguerite Clark in the role she created for the speaking play, a fantastic little thing which filled several theatres three seasons ago. There are two other bits of news to interest us over here—the fact that our own Julian Eltinge is soon to occupy the estate in Los Angeles to be his future home. This speaks well for his talents and business acumen. Then the only Caruso is going into the picture game to the extent of erecting a theater to bear his name in Waterbury, Conn.

It is refreshing to know that "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" will have two of the original cast—Forbes Robertson and Mollie Pearson. We are banking on Herbert Brenon's presentation. I note that Al Hickman, Nance O'Neil's better half, is in the cast.

Some A1 pictures here of late well worthy more space were "The Sudden Gentleman," especially adapted to William Desmond; "The Marriage Speculation," rightly named Blue Ribbon, featuring the venerable Charles Kent and Mildred Manning; "Reaching for the Moon," and Fairbanks' latest, "The Modern Musketeer," went strong; "Please Help Emily," a clever comedy for Ann Murdock, capitally supported; "The Devil Stone," thought by many in a capacity house to be Farrar's best picture; "The American Maid," fine vehicle for Edna Goodrich, as was her "Daughter of Maryland," another Mutual offering worth while.

"Over There" ought to be seen everywhere for its lessons and by all for the wonderful war scenes—best yet, directed by a Canadian officer straight from the trenches. Charles Richman, as usual, made a strong part stand out well. Was glad to see Gertrude Berkeley as the mother, recalling her great work in "War Brides" with Nazimova. The accompanying music was a treat also. Charles Ray again delighted us in the Paramount picture, "His Mother's Boy," directed by Thomas Ince—nuf sed. The Exeter gives us strong virile pictures minus slapstick and sex stuff, and is rightly patronized by intelligent playgoers.

Why does not some scenario writer get busy on "Clarice" and get after William Gillette, Marie Doro and Lucille LaVerne together, as they created the roles. This is the only play I can recall named for a colored mammie, and will you ever forget Miss LaVerne's Clarice? It has splendid material for the screen, and the three mentioned have already proved their worth on stage and screen. Lionel Barrymore opens here in "The Copperhead"; Lillian Lawrence is here with Willie Collier in "Nothing But the Truth," while her young daughter is appearing in three picture plays. Julian Eltinge is doing a stunt at Keith's; Margaret Wycherly, who has been seen in the World picture, "The Fight," is making a hit in "The Thirteenth Chair"; then we have Sam Hardy in "The Riviera Girl."

So Effie Shannon has capitulated and I feel sure she will screen well in "Her Boy" along with Niles Welch. Maxine Elliot comes next week in "Lord and Lady Algy," after her try at the picture game.

George Loane Tucker deserves a crown for his titles in "The Cinderella Man," a charming little play featuring Mae Marsh in one of her very best pictures. Another delightful one was "The Seven Swans" for Marguerite Clark, played to full houses here with kiddies galore. "Her Silent Sacrifice" was well done by Alice Brady and a capable company including Robert Paton Gibbs, the man who created the role of Gecko in "Trilby" for the speaking play. He was some villain in this picture taken from "The Red House."

"His Own People" was liked and we had not seen Harry Morey for some time. This melodrama will go strong with the men and those having Irish blood in their veins. We are anticipating "Ruggles of Red Gap" with Taylor Holmes and Lawrence D'Orsay—he of monocle fame on the stage.

Well I was disappointed in "The Secret of the Storm Country," directed well by Charles Miller and acted splendidly by Norma Talmadge and a good company. The lighting was poor in too many spots and the plot snatchy. I was surprised at some errors in the reviews. One critic I swear by (and others swear at, when he calls a spade by its right name) spoke of the guardian of Tess as a doctor when he was a lawyer, the one who had her father released from prison. Again he calls the rescued child the daughter of Frederick Graves, who had none—for it is clearly shown that she was the child of his brother-in-law impersonated by J. Herbert Frank. Here we had Ethel Grey Terry, daughter of Lillian Lawrence, and a native of the Hub, in this I believe her first Select picture. There were some strong scenes like the narrow old Puritan fathers ousting the heroine from their church, instead of trying to obey the ten commandments and practice the golden rule. Picture will go with such a cast.

"The Honeymoon" was a delicious comedy drama, full of "pep" and a little preachment on jealousy. Select has a seller in this or should have, as Constance Talmadge and Earle Fox are excellent.

How It Is Done at the Strand

A Discussion of Methods Which Have Actually Been Worked Out Successfully.

By Harold Edel, Managing Director.

IN commenting upon the musical program of the Strand recently, a well-known film man who had just returned from a tour of the country, paid a handsome tribute to the overture presented by our musicians. In this connection he said that many of even the better-class theaters in the big cities do not seem to fully appreciate the important part that the overture plays in the presentation of a screen performance. It has always been the policy at the Strand orchestra to put forth its very best efforts both in the presentation and the selection of the opening number.

The overture in the motion picture theater should not be considered in the same light as that in the theater of the spoken stage. The difference is quite obvious. For instance, in the musical comedy or vaudeville theater, the overture acts as an incidental to the show itself. Many people who attend such theaters never arrive until the overture is over and never seem to miss it. Where the overture is such an important factor in the show as at the Strand, however, the entire audience should be in the house before this number is commenced. It is just for this reason that the Strand, as mentioned in a previous article, very often preludes the overture with another number, giving the audience an opportunity to be in its seats by the time the overture is started.

In the case where a motion picture theater has an orchestra, whether it's five or fifty pieces, the most should be gotten out of these musicians. Thus, we at the Strand, make it a policy to present this number in a manner that will make it stand up for itself as an item on the program. Special light effects are studied out, solo numbers are interspersed with the spot light on the soloist, and in some cases the efforts of special artists are introduced during the course of the overture. Recently, for instance, in part of the overture, a zither solo was rendered with surprising result. The fact that the appearance of a zither in an orchestra is unusual and the charming manner in which this solo blended with the entire piece offered "something different," in short, a pleasing surprise. That this solo had much to do with the unusual applause accorded the orchestra upon completion of the overture, seemed evident.

Another item of interest is the surprisingly effective results that can be obtained with lighting effects upon a drop. Drop curtains are by no means inexpensive, and to discard a curtain that has been used several weeks, would mean considerable to the expense sheet. A certain lake drop has been used at the Strand time and again. Yet, recently one of our patrons remarked at the variety of lake drops we presented. Different lightings each week on the same drop is the answer. This is by no means a particularly easy task, if the best results are to be obtained. Each week the lightings of the drops used at the Strand are given special study. By experimenting with different color lights one can readily see what an extended variety of views can be obtained from the same drop. No two weeks is the lighting on a given drop the same and by using lights that offer particular contrast to those used the previous week, the desired effect is immediately apparent.

To return once again to the accomplishments of the orchestra. Recently I visited a fair-sized theater in New York where during the screening of a zoological picture of high educational value, the full orchestra played an accompanying number of perfectly selected music. Yet later in the show, when the news pictures with marching soldiers appeared, the musicians were resting while the organ poured forth a loud accompaniment. The orchestra cannot play for the whole show, of course, but care should be devoted to selecting the parts of the program where it will be the least missed. Scenics, zoological and other similar educational pictures are ideal spots on the bill for the orchestra to rest. The soft music of the organ, with occasional effects obtainable from such an instrument, are not only advisable but, in many cases, most effective. A news picture on the other hand, with its marching soldiers, explosions and presentation of national celebrities should have the best support of the entire orchestra. To many exhibitors these remarks may appear obvious, and yet we find such instances where managers either neglect this particular phase of the program or do not understand the importance of devoting time and pains in the presentation of a film entertainment and then wonder why the man across the street is standing them up in front.

Proper Titles

By Edward M. Roskam.

THE titles were so short I couldn't read them." "They should have advertised that picture as a two-reel drama with three reels of explanations."

The above remarks heard in two theaters are the text of my argument. These are two evils that the manufacturer or the director must eliminate in order to hold the attention of an audience whether it be the New York Strand or the Haverstraw Opera House.

Nine-tenths of every audience is intelligent, but the eye must transfer the thought of the title to the mind. If this title is not long enough to read how can the mind grasp the real meaning of the words.

The producers must also realize that youth and age form part of every audience and an untrained mind or weak eyes cannot grasp or read a title as fast as the director, who had evidently cut his titles short so as to be able to cut his picture down to five or six reels.

In direct contrast to this mistake is the use of long explanatory titles throughout a picture, which nine times out of ten advances the action of the story to such an extent that the scene is really not necessary or contains no dramatic thrill or suspense as the audience is expecting the exact thing that the title informs them would happen.

The only time explanatory titles should be used is for fore-words, introductions, change of location, lapse of time or to cover jumps in order to keep perfect the action or continuity of the story.

Spoken titles should always be used to cover comedy or dramatic situations. When inserted properly they hold grip or amuse you, but never for one instant take you away from the action of the picture.

Spoken titles never tire an audience, while a production laden with explanatory titles, drags perceptibly, no matter how cleverly the titles are written.

In my experience as a film cutter, spoken titles have often helped me put over a badly acted or directed scene: By simply cutting out the bad direction, acting or slow parts and inserting a spoken title to cover the jump, I have saved and improved many a picture.

I will never forget one picture I cut. The leading man had adenoids. Every time he opened his mouth he looked as though he was going to sneeze. By cutting away his open face and using spoken titles to cover the situations I eliminated all the unsatisfactory parts and really improved the fellow's acting.

In another case, a woman had very wide lips, which were made up so badly that each time she was supposed to be sad or cry, it looked as if she were laughing. Spoken titles saved this production, for every time she started to make a face I either cut to another character in the scene or used a spoken title in place of the film I eliminated.

The art of using spoken titles is to know what to say and where to insert the title.

Three feet of film to each line on hand-painted title cards and four feet of film to each line on printed title cards is the proper way to judge the length of explanatory, spoken or descriptive titles. On letters or newspaper inserts the number of seconds it takes you to carefully read the copy is the amount of footage that should be used on the inserts.

LIGHTLESS NIGHTS MANDATORY IN ONTARIO.

Merchants and exhibitors of Central Ontario have been ordered to "douse the glim." Starting January 15, illuminated advertising and ornamental signs were put out of action because of the demand for juice for war industrial purposes. In addition, civic street illumination was greatly curtailed from that date and gloom pervades the city. This development became necessary on the order of Sir Henry Drayton, power controller for the Dominion, and Sir Adam Beck, chairman of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario. It is mandatory.

TWENTY PER CENT. ADMISSION TAX.

The fat is in the fire out in Manitoba. According to advices received in Toronto, the Provincial Government of Manitoba proposes to enact legislation at the coming session of the Legislature to impose a taxation of 20 per cent. on the value of admission tickets to all houses of amusement. This is an exceedingly stiff tax, and the Winnipeg exhibitors are reported to be all at sea. In one newspaper interview an exhibitor declared that the Government would be making far more out of the theater business than the theaters themselves could.

Education and Culture Command Success

To Get the Best Results the Picturemaker Must Strive to Be Immune from the Necessities of Censorship.

IF it were possible to trace all failures in the development of moving pictures it would without doubt prove that the stopping place is where the educative faculties are most necessary. There is a place on the heights up which the moving picture man must climb where he finds the twin sisters, Education and Culture, awaiting him, with the information that he cannot go further without their companionship. If he chooses to refuse and press forward without them he soon discovers that the law of the country through which he is traveling will not allow him to go alone, and compels him to be accompanied by an ogre named Censor, who, throughout the entire journey will prove a very disagreeable companion; thus he pays dearly for his ignorance, finding very soon that Censor cannot travel with Culture.

Climbing still higher the moving picture man finds that his next stopping place is the entrance to Success. In this exalted region those accompanied by Censor cannot travel, though they force their way in, the inhabitants of the land will not consort with them, and ultimately they are crowded into the adjoining town of Failure, where the streets are almost impassable with the large number of inhabitants bemoaning their sad fate. It is not too late, however, and many of these people get out upon the road again and take care the next time that when they come to the region of the twin sisters they secure their companionship, deciding that with them in the school of experience they can now enter the city of Success, remain there, and become recognized citizens of standing.

In the City of Success.

The class of moving pictures seen in the town of Success very quickly give you the reason why the town bears its name; also as to what efforts are put forth to assure that the name shall become a permanent one, and its reputation world-wide and untainted. In the first place one notices an entire absence of anything that can be ascribed to the presence of that persistent enemy Vulgarity, neither he or any of his cohorts are allowed about. If he appears he is soon detected and driven out of town.

In the Theaters.

The programs in the theaters in the town of Success soon impress you with the reason why the town is so named. The choice of subjects, their manner of presentation, the evident desires to please, entertain and instruct in refined and attractive ways are all self evident; the audiences and the entertainments have grown together, they understand each other and each bear the stamp of the experience obtained in that school in the way already indicated. Beginning with the Topical pictures these bear the stamp of not having been selected at random. Patriotic events still retain their hold. Finley's latest Nature pictures are splendid. It is always safe to include these with the Ditmars pictures for good effects. There are also the "Bruce Scenic Features" in which is included some human element whereby the "Joy of Out-Door Sports" give added value to the scene. Pure Scenics are no longer shown by the reel but by the subject; artistic taste is shown in the selection of the gem parts and we enjoy moving pictures of the World's Art Gallery.

A new addition of Travel pictures most acceptable at this history making time are those selected by the Kalem Co. from their great picture "From the Manger to the Cross." These consist of "Scenes in Palestine" reasonably abbreviated so that their concise presentation makes them additionally acceptable and intensely interesting.

In comedies the Mr. and Mrs. Drew pictures are always good. Two of their latest subjects, "His First Love" and "Their Mutual Motor," maintain the actors' best reputation for clean as well as exhilarating mirth.

In the larger features there is great choice. Here, however, we always only mention the latest ones as they appear. "His Mother's Boy" (Paramount), in which Charles Ray excels, is an excellent story and subject. We only wish it might have been so lengthened to allow a better finish. As a good picture for young people it would have been better if Matthew-Denton had been allowed to return home with joy to his mother rather than he should end his career before the public in a love scene; it would have been more to the value of the idea of what one expects from a Mother's Boy. The picture is, however, good and will be everywhere welcome. Should it ever be recast we hope the idea expressed above may be carried out.

For adults rather than for the young in contrast to the above subject, is "The Rose of the World," reviewed elsewhere, but mentioned here because it was seen in connection with the outline which the writer is endeavoring to show as to the make-up of the programs used in successful exhibitions; let us have a care, however, even in Success town, that love making is neither too long, too violent, nor too passionate; it detracts from the true idea of the class of picture which the educated people of the town require.

Another notable improvement found here, and which must be noticed, lies in the higher type of titles and sub-titles. These are evidently being re-written by more thoughtful, more explicit and more incisive writers, saving an excess of time and space which had begun to grow wearisome to the readers.

Interesting Educationals

Three Scenic Subjects, Two Industrials and One Zoological Subject.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"The Trail to the Sky" (Educational-Bruce).

ONE of the most beautiful of the recent Bruce scenics is "The Trail to the Sky." The photographer has kept his camera busy from that point behind the hotel in Mount Rainier park where the trail commences its rise toward the sky line. Mount Rainier towering snow-capped into the clouds is always the predominant feature of this remarkably beautiful picture. Nisqually glacier is shown close up and wonderfully clear pools of water reflecting the blue of the sky. Portions of the trail which rise 1,500 feet in two miles are shown zigzagging up the mountain in a series of switchbacks. Among other interesting scenes is an exhibition slide of the guide and his horse down a steep snow slope.

"Picturesque Brittany" (Pathe).

A half-reel subject, in colors, picturing life in Brittany, one of the most picturesque of French provinces. Castles, churches, pastoral scenes and glimpses of the rugged coast are shown. Numerous rock groups, some of which are named, make an interesting feature. On the same reel with this is a half-reel called "Bonnets of Brittany," which shows women, children and native girls wearing lace headgear made by hand. The native types are excellent and the entire reel is full of charming appeal.

"A Maine Snow Storm" (Paramount-Bray).

The beauties which can be created during a snow storm in a country of trees and underbrush can be seen in the series of views photographed in the mighty forests of Maine by the Pictograph cameraman. In the 104th issue will be found scenes that illustrate the wondrous beauties that Jack Frost is able to create.

"Shrimps for Milady's Salad" (Universal).

The manner in which shrimps are gathered on the North Carolina coast and prepared for canning is shown in the 57th release of the Screen Magazine. We see the fleet of trawlers ready for the "haul," the bailing out of the trawl net which yields crabs, flounders and other varieties of fish as well as the shrimp. We learn in the picture that larger shrimps weigh over two pounds. In the canning process they are first thoroughly cleaned then blanched in hot water for three minutes, when they are culled and placed in brine previous to placing them in the cans. A well-illustrated subject.

"Women in the World of Work" (Paramount-Bray).

The second of the series deals interestingly with the breeding of Persian cats. Miss Susanne Bell is the woman who has posed for the picture with her cats, the majority of which are beautiful white ones produced by a cross breed. This picture will interest particularly women and will be found in the 105th issue of Pictograph.

"Life in the Insect World" (Educational).

The insects shown in this particular picture are those with whom nature has dealt most kindly in the way of providing them a means of protection within themselves. In the picture are shown various kinds of insects such as the Ceylonese walking leaf insect, and a caterpillar armed with protective poisonous hairs. Then there is the tent of the caterpillar which is made partially of an acrid juice, and there are various insects that protect themselves by imitating other insects or animals. An interesting release.

New Series of Educationals

Micro-Cinema Films About to Be Released Through Large Distributing Agency.

OF unusual interest wherever motion pictures of the better class are shown is the announcement that, beginning in the immediate future, there will be released through one of the oldest and most important film distributing agencies in the United States, a series of the remarkable film products of the Micro-Cinema Laboratory, in split and full-reel lengths. Pictures from these laboratories are not new to New Yorkers, inasmuch as they have been attracting attention in the theaters for some months past.

The Micro-Cinema films are the work of members of many of the important societies for scientific research throughout the world, including globe-trotters and explorers. For years these men have been engaged in perfecting methods scientifically suited to the presentation in motion pictures of subjects of unusual interest heretofore unapproachable. Accurate scientific studies presented in motion pictures made by them have been used by leading universities and educational societies, thereby giving the Micro-Cinema Laboratory an exceptional standing among the producers of educational films.

The new series of pictures about to be released will be made up of "scientific educationals" and "scenic educationals." The plan of the "scientific educationals" will be to popularize recognized scientific truths—to explain in interesting motion pictures the little, or even the big scientific truths about which the average layman knows something, but not enough to satisfy himself. The "scenic educationals" are pictures that add to one's store of knowledge and at the same time please with the beautiful surroundings which have been chosen as a setting for the lesson.

Under the new plan of distribution Micro-Cinema films will be easily available to all.

In a future issue there will be found in the Motion Picture Educator a review of a number of subjects which are illustrative of the educational plan for which they were devised. Further information regarding their avenue of distribution will also be forthcoming.

"The Hound of the Hills"

Remarkable Scenic Production Released by the Educational Films Corporation of America First of Its Kind to Be Featured with Electric Display Sign.

AT the Rivoli during the week of January 13 an unusual honor was accorded one of the most delightful pictures of its kind that has ever been made, "The Hound of the Hills." In an electric display sign outside the theater the picture was heralded on the merits of the beautiful sentiment expressed in its makeup. And we believe that all who saw this picture were of one mind—it is a gem among gems.

"The Hound of the Hills" is the story of a dog who grew too big for his kennel and took to the hills is search of the joys of the open road. "His friends were the brooks and the trees, and soon the days of the crowded kennel were forgotten." Here a beautiful lake attracted him and he puppyishly waded in. And again the waterfall fascinated him, and soon he grew to love the great silence of the high places.

He had his troubles, too, for the squirrels roosted so high that he was unable to reach them. And while a chipmunk chirruped at him from one side a squirrel broke silence from another; and the ptarmigan and the grouse avoided him quite as cleverly. Finally several inspiring scenes showing the great Dane silhouetted against the sky are introduced by the following subtitle: "On the ragged edge of the world I roam and the home of the wolf will be my home."

Robert Bruce Back on the Job

This Time He Will Film the Mountains in Winter and Perform Other Interesting Tricks.

AFTER a sojourn of several weeks in New York Robert C. Bruce has started back west for another season of bombardment on the beauties of Nature. Would that we might divulge some of the secrets of this year's trip. Suffice it for the present to say that the month of February will be spent in the vicinity of and on Mount Baker, when he will place on film the winter charms of the mountain regions. This, we believe, has not been done before. March and a part of April will be spent in looking up locations for subjects for which he seeks appropriate and interpretive settings. By so doing he hopes to save much time; and while he does not expect to make as large a number of pictures as usual, he aspires to replace quantity with quality. And we pause and wonder if it is really possible to add a further charm to Bruce pictures than that which they already possess. Thus far they have been totally different from those made by others of Nature's photographers. They have been something more than merely scenic pictures; they have been in most instances interpretations of beautiful thoughts. Mr. Bruce has, in other words, cajoled Nature into lending her charms in the symbolizing of certain ideas. Many times his pictures have been as poems tuned to the harmonies of Nature.

We will await his safe return at the end of the year more or less anxiously, anticipating many beautiful things as a result of his several months' sojourn in the west and middle west.

"The Making of an American Officer"

Educational Films Corporation of America Releases Interesting and Valuable Series of Views Photographed at Plattsburg.

ONE of the best series of pictures illustrative of the methods being followed in preparing our men for the front is in the possession of the Educational Film Corporation of America, and is being released by them. These pictures were photographed at Plattsburg and open with the 5.30 A. M. call showing the men responding cheerfully armed with towels and other toilet articles. Then we see them performing domestic duties such as dish-washing previous to the taking up of the graver tasks of the day. A closeup of Lieutenant Henri Poire, one of the well-tried Frenchmen who have been sent to America to teach the methods of warfare being practiced in the present war is interesting. We also see the boys surveying and staking the trench line, and making barbed-wire entanglements, and there is the lesson in the use of t. n. t., and the artillery preparing for a hike. One of the most interesting features of the picture is the gopher squad, showing how they tunnel underground and emerge from well camouflaged trap doors in the very surface of the earth.

The picture is full of interesting features and will be appreciated by present-day audiences.

Items of Interest.

In the 36th release of Universal Current Events Jack Cohn has succeeded in assembling an unusually interesting program of war pictures. Among them are pictures of what are commonly known as "suicide squads." These are machine gun squads, and in this release of Current Events Pershing's machine gun battalions are shown in France receiving instructions in the handling of the intricate mechanism from French Alpine Chasseurs known as "Blue Devils." Other scenes in this issue show the use of Alaskan Huskies in the Vosges Mountains. These latter views are unusually attractive.

No. 6 of Pathe's Argus pictorial is devoted largely to scientic matters. The first pictures show the way glass models of flowers and small sea creatures are made for the Museum of Natural History. The closeup views of the sea horse are pleasing. Cohesion and adhesion makes the second subject, showing the way various liquids act under certain circumstances. The final subject shows microscopic views of the trumpet-shaped stentor, which is found in a drop of water.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Merged.

PARAMOUNT Progress and Artcraft Advance have been merged into the Progress-Advance, a sheet literally bigger and better than ever. It is of a larger size than the old forms, permitting the employment of a better display, and it retains all of the features of the twins while eliminating much duplication of material. Both sheets talked to the same list of exhibitors in behalf of what is practically the same concern. To condense into a single issue is both a wise and helpful move. The exhibitor is more apt to give one issue his undivided attention, and if he does he will find much therein that is helpful to him in the pursuit of patronage. The best line of the initial number is found in a heading that reads: "Paramount Short Subjects. Features in all but length." Only the man who himself believes that is going to make money with the shorts. Too many exhibitors almost "sneak" them into the program with an apologetic air. The display seems fairly to say, "We're sorry to hand you this stuff, but we have to use it, you know." Don't take that attitude. There are many people to whom these subjects are more of an attraction than the filmed fiction. They go to see Burton Holmes and not Marguerite Clark. It may be difficult to make some exhibitors realize this, but the fact remains that there are persons of the more intelligent class to whom Burton Holmes is far better known than Miss Pickford or Douglas Fairbanks. Go at their preference intelligently. Get out a special form letter or booklet. Make people understand that they really are important and presently they will become important even to those who at present regard them as something little better than the old illustrated song that was the pioneer "filler."

Handling a Feature.

Sydney Pollock, the sixteen-year-old press representative of the Strand, North Tarrytown, N. Y., sends in the details of his handling of The Man Without a Country. It's as good a campaign as any older man might plan. First of all he used the screen for "Coming Soon." A week before the playing date he interviewed the principals of all the schools, telling them about the picturization of the book. All of the schools permitted the distribution of this ticket:

North Tarrytown STRAND THEATRE

SCHOOL TICKET

THIS TICKET AND 10 CENTS

Will Admit One Child, Tues., DEC. 4, to see

"THE MAN WITHOUT A COUNTRY"

At Matinee Only. Matinee 3.45 P. M.

It will be noticed that the reduced price ticket is good only for the matinee and the matinee (the time being stated on the ticket) is after school hours. In return for this courtesy, though not made a part of the bargain, this invitation was issued to the teachers and Board of Education:

The Management of the North Tarrytown Strand Theatre
cordially invites to attend the performance on Tuesday, December 4 with compliments of Edward Pollock

The ticket was also given the editors of the local papers and some of the leading citizens, the name and date being filled in. A rubber dating stamp should have been used for the lower line. Heralds, dodgers and special advertising in the papers completed the drive. Possibly there is no library in North Tarrytown, but we think that it would have paid to take the advertising down to the Tarrytown library, for this is a story that any library will be glad to announce. Most librarians are glad to give advertising space to the picturized novel if they are reasonably certain that the film runs true with the book. But, as a publicity man, young Mr. Pollock seems to be wide awake and all there. He has learned the trick of writing phrases and he remembers and applies what he reads in this department.

Demonstrate.

The "phonograph" copy for increasing prices is good, but why not demonstrate it? Get a phonograph and some cheap vocal records and some star records. Probably you can borrow these from the local phonograph dealer. Get, for example: Home to Our Mountains, from Il Trovatore, sung by Caruso and Homer, and the cheaper record of the same selection. Play the seventy-five cent record first and then the good one. Anyone can perceive the difference. Get two or three other examples along the same lines. Then tell why you have to pay more for some films than others because the better players ask more money. You can make almost a function out of the stunt, and certainly you can get a small town talking. Of course, it is not wise to try to raise prices until after they have become accustomed to the war tax, but this will probably be sooner than you realize.

Studying McCormick.

One great mistake large exhibitors make is supposing that any picture will enhance the value of an advertising space. This is not true, save perhaps to the limited extent that the cut opens up the space and makes it more conspicuous. But the same end may often be better accomplished through the use of white space—and white space requires no payment for engraving. It is better to use the white space than to employ a cut that tells nothing, or practically nothing. The cut, just as surely as the text, must create a desire in the patron to see the matter pictured. It may be merely a portrait cut of the star, or one in character. Most generally it is, because the releasing companies supply most of these cuts and, naturally, are more interested in booming the star, who appears in many attractions, than in booming a single release in which that star appears. Between a portrait cut supplied free and a suitable scene cut that has to be made locally, we should prefer the latter, even though it does cost more, if it carries an additional punch. But the scene must tell something. It must make the reader want to see the film from which it is taken. It must create such a desire of sufficient intensity to lead the prospect to get his hat and his wife or his best girl and go down and pay out his money to satisfy his curiosity.

Recently S. Barret McCormick, of the Circle, Indianapolis, used the Italian Battlefront pictures. His work in this connection is so interesting that we are reproducing a number of cuts of his advertisements. Some of these suffer considerably in the reduction in size, but they will give an idea of his campaign, though these examples show less than half of the many styles of drawings he had made for this subject. The first display shows advertisements for The Battle of Goriza. That on the right gives the picture of the sinking of a submarine. The cut is six inches wide by two and a quarter inches deep. It is notched to the left to let in a couple of lines of type. The entire advertisement is two sevens. The caption runs in two lines of full face and announces "The pursuit, shelling and actual sinking of a submarine as shown in these pictures." Below is the comment of a patron on the impressiveness of the performance, the title, the title of the dramatic feature, the prices and the familiar reverse cut of the house name. The cut to the right is but two sevens. It shows the capture of 200 Austrian soldiers by an Italian lieutenant and four men. Both of these are war scenes. They attract interest. In the space Mr. McCormick does not try to tell all about the picture. In each instance he speaks of but one incident. He is content to get interest for that single episode and to hint that he has several thousand feet of material of a similar nature. He knows that in the limited space—and in large spaces for that matter—it is better to gain real interest in one point than to confuse the reader with diversified appeal. Ths is a trick that some advertisers never learn, but it is the first essential of amusement advertising. A department store is a different proposition. The greater the number of bargains, the greater the attraction, as a rule.

The second example is three three-and-a-halfs. It uses the same cut as the above three sevens, and is worked along the same lines. The same caption is used, but the bank about the patron's opinion is dropped for want of space and the admission prices are dropped. The cut and the caption largely form the advertisement, and are sufficient to convince. The additional matter in the large space merely drives home the argument.

In the third example, the longer advertisement is a three nines and the one on the right is but 7¾ inches deep. Both use the same cut. They ran the same Sunday in different papers, but the same copy was not employed. Most persons take more than a single Sunday paper. Here the appeal is varied though the same cut is used.

The same picture has been seen in the news sections of the daily papers. It attracts the same attention now. It will be noticed, if you will examine the reproduction closely, that the drawn picture and the border have nothing in common, a fact also shown by the greater drop in the advertisement on the left. Had the border been made a part of the design two expenses would have been incurred, and perhaps a third. There would have been more to pay for the design, the cut would have cost more and perhaps the offices might have charged more to set within the mortised cut. Certainly it would have been more difficult to get the matter in nicely. As it was, the cut was notched to let the type in, and it was all a matter of straight composition and justification, after which the stock twelve point solid border was set around it. The result is a better advertisement because it can be better set, and a greater freedom in spacing is permitted, since the cut might be made the basis of an eight or a twelve-inch advertisement. Stock rule border does not make up as neatly as a drawn design, for the bits of rule may not match evenly and will probably show a white line where the pieces come together, but the defect is more than repaid from other angles.

The next examples are three columns wide and 10½ inches deep. That on the right is composed of two cuts, though supposed to be part of one drawing, the guns at the bottom of the cut being used against the aircraft. This double cut gives the effect of a full design while the cost is smaller and the advertisement can be made as deep as is desired. The cut on the right may also be extended at will, but here, dropping down the side of the cliff on the right of the space makes rather a costly cut, but it serves well to hold the mass together since only a six-point border is used. Here, in both advertisements, a hint of the other features of the film is given, under the Italian arms on the right and just above the big gun at the left. In the latter bank the orchestra and the picture are treated in the same paragraph, the orchestra being placed above the picture in importance, a slight error in values.

In the next reproduction, the cut on the left is twenty and the other eighteen inches. To get a better effect the lower part of the left-hand advertisement has been dropped. On the right, in single-column measure, is given what is practically a table of contents of the film. The same design is used here as employed in two examples already shown, but being intended for a five instead of a three-column reproduction, more detail is shown and three airplanes and a Zeppelin are thrown in for good measure. The lower design emphasizes the chief catchline of "Italy's armies on Land, Sea and in the Air." Both displays give greater space to the dramatic feature. Miss Burke, in "Arms and the Girl," worked in nicely with the military release, and "Magda" could have been better connected had emphasis been laid upon the fact that the play deals with German life and problems. Here Mr. Barret seems to have overlooked a chance. "Magda," though a classic of the drama owning no particular country, is essentially a play of Germany and deals with conditions from a peculiarly German point of view. This is a point we have not seen raised in any press work for the play, and yet it can be used to gain a fresh appeal if cleverly handled. The left-hand cut, it will be seen, repeats in essence another design, but is handled to work in the space allotted. In all of these designs the artist has done his work with unusual intelligence.

The last examples are each six elevens. That on the right contrasts modern methods of warfare with the Siege of Troy. This is a happy though, for it not only gives a new angle to the thought, but it permits the showing of a cut that is doubly valuable in that it not only tells the film, but rouses curiosity. At first glance one wonders at the wooden horse in connection with the modern battle scene and reads to find out what it means. Both cuts make effective use of dark skies for backgrounds. This is a feature of most of the drawing. The dark background is best where there must be much detail in the foreground. It is not quite as striking at first glance as the masses of black against a white ground, but the detail holds the attention once it is gained. Turn your glance back to the last illustration and compare the three drawings used there. Had the drawing at the bottom of the right-hand advertisement risen to the top of the page, there would have resulted a bleak and unpleasing sky. As it is, the type matter overcomes this blank. And notice that in every one of these illustrations the title of the war picture overshadows the title of the drama. Miss Burke and Miss Young have undoubted drawing powers, but these are primarily advertisements for the Italian pictures, and Mr. McCormick is far too shrewd to let the drama overshadow or even equal the chief attraction. Playing up the stars would get no more business from the admirers of the players, but to make the drama more important undoubtedly would have detracted from the war films in the eyes of those who are more interested in these than in the players.

We have touched only upon the chief features of these advertisements. We might fill another page with comment, but the chief thing is the study of the advertisements themselves. There are some minor imperfections, but there must exist in all work necessarily done under pressure, and these are so few that we regret that we cannot give all of these displays in such detail that every line might be read, for they are models in their line, and not the least valuable feature is the fact that they are treated with dignity and even loftiness of thought, avoiding the cheap sensationalism that will not appeal to those most likely to be interested in pictures of the war. This is food for thinkers and they do not appreciate the "greatest ever" style of announcement. Read what you can of the text. It will repay you.

Write Your Own Passes.

The Harlem Strand, New York City, has a new idea in the way of getting out mailing lists. A recent issue carried with it a pass form printed up:

They use a weekly program on green stock, rather carelessly set and with undated days. Merely the titles are announced, with no descriptive matter, though special are sometimes enclosed, and the pass was accompanied by a Towne Gossip style of circular advertising, the first part of Who Was Number One? the pass also serving as a cut rate to get the crowd in for that serial.

J. W. Allender, of the Liberty, Spokane, Wash., sends in a copy of the Saturday paper to show how he does it when he gets started. He had five sixteens (80 inches) for Fairbanks' Wild and Wooly against 52 inches for six other theaters. It was a well-drawn ad, but people are getting a bit tired of looking down the muzzles of six-guns presented by Fairbanks or Bill Hart. Let's get something new! And in emulation of Ruffner Mr Allender gets

The Bara Book.

The Fox Company's book on the Bara Cleopatra is handsome without being over-ornate. The cover is in orange and purple, with black the inside pages are ornamented with orange, and every page carries one or more scenes from the play. It carries no ready-made press stuff, but all of the material can be worked over the local advertiser, and the book is merely supplemental to other service. It belongs to that class of books that exhibitors preserve for future reading, and its greatest value will be to take down to show the photoplay editor. It's bound to get him interested in the play and win from him a few extra paragraphs.

Initials Only.

T. N. F. is the name of Ben Title's house at East 16th street and Newkirk avenue, Brooklyn, but it looks like a house with a real name. They use a weekly program, blue ink on white paper, the pages 4 by 7½ inches, with all the real information on the two inside pages, where it can be had at a glance. This includes location, prices and times of showing, and each attraction gets from an inch to an inch and a half of space, with the title clearly displayed and a well written paragraph for each. There is a special matinee Saturday afternoons for the kiddies, and as there is a fashionable private school just across the avenue they probably make evening business from this special offering. There are no other matinees during the week. Indeed, one nearby house does not even offer a Saturday matinee.

Was Right Here.

Lately we advertised for Tom North and he answered "here" from right around the corner. He is with the Pathe Exchange, giving particular attention at the moment to the booming of the Kaplan Russian pictures. With North and William Lord Wright both on the staff, the Pathe Exchange could get out a mighty good revival of "Pals," with Wright doing a column of the clip stuff that used to be so widely copied. Mr. North is busy right now with special showings of the Russian films in various important centers and if you have not yet had your private view you will get one presently and possibly a chance to meet Mr North as well, and personally we would rather have a chance to chat with so well posted a man than to see the whole set of Russian subjects, good as the latter are.

"Reel Stuff."

"Reel Suff," the house organ of the Film Supply Company, Portland, Oregon, has an editorial in a recent issue that tells all about how to make money in a few words. The article runs:

IT SOUNDS FOOLISH—
but it's true, in the motion picture game particularly:
THE MORE MONEY YOU SPEND: THE MORE YOU MAKE.
There s a big provision connected with the epigram, however, which is the only thing that keeps it from being foolish.
You can't spend all the money at one end, and get away with it for long.
Advertising is at one end, and you can't do without it.
Quality of pictures is at the other end, and you can't do without it.
A theater may get along for a while, concentrating on one end or the other, but if you will notice carefully, the theater that has the long waiting line before it all evening, every evening, is—
—the theater that bears down heavy on BOTH ENDS.
A combination like that, makes it as true as gospel:
THE MORE MONEY YOU SPEND: THE MORE YOU MAKE.

Of course there are limits, but within reason good plays and good advertising make for larger profits and nothing else will.

Lives Up to It.

The Star theater, Bellingham, Wash., has begun the publication of a house organ, and in his salutation J. Lewis Arnold writes that he wants to get into more intimate relation with his patrons and believes that this house program will serve the purpose. It should, if Mr. Arnold adheres to the style in which he has done his first issue. "The Photogram" is a five by eight four-pager, cream stock printed in brown. The front carries a picture of a current star with a reader for the play in which she is to appear. The first issue also carries the greeting here. On the second page are two small trade advertisements and house information. The latter is unusually explicit. He tells when the house opens and closes, when the last night show begins, gives the street number and the nearest intersecting street, and tells the prices and the war tax. He tells how often the program is changed, and on what days; runs the Adamson fire notice and an offer to send the program at the rate of one cent a copy. The third page gives the program, with day and date and a reader for each change. This is not the usual advertising rant, with extravagant statements and misstatements, but an easy chat about the subjects that will interest and at the same time be regarded as the truth. The back page carries another trade advertisement and the underline. The printer has done his share of the work as well as Mr. Arnold has done his and the result is a neat and attractive issue that will make real business. The advertisements should pay the cost, or most of the cost of the program, but the program would pay for itself without this help. But unless the program is sent only to those depositing postage, we think that this feature will be resented and may hurt business. If Mrs. Brown puts down ten cents for ten issues and finds that Mrs. Smith gets her copy free, you can safely count Mrs. Brown out of the list of patrons. You can't blame her. Her money is as good as the Smith coin.

Regular Pennies.

The Theater Louisiana has arranged to have its penny coupon books, originally planned to meet the shortage of war tax pennies, fill a larger demand. The coupons are good at the other house, the candy store and the news stand, making a real contribution toward solving the shortage in copper coinage. Here is a hint for others. If penny coupons are good at stores, it will be easier to sell twenty-five-cent books. It may even make a demand that will lead to business at the theater, as well.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

Boobs Barred.

SOMEONE writes that while we say that the market is opening up they do not see that any companies are asking for scripts. Probably the correspondent will not see any such requests. The market is opening up, but editors are deathly afraid that the boobs will find it out and flood the market, and requests for stories are generally prefaced with the further request that the demand be kept secret. The mass of "usual" stories was the primary cause of the staff writer and the closed door. Between the mass of impossible stuff and the wails of the boob writers manufacturers decided it would be cheaper to throw them all out. It was done. The staff man is getting stale, and the market is opening, but under cover. It will be a year, perhaps, before the mass of stuff is invited for the sake of discovering some new men, and once these are discovered the market will probably close again. The old P. A. L. had the right idea, but went at it in the wrong way when they suggested that the seal of the league would act as an identification. Just what the right way is we are free to confess we do not know, but if some method could be discovered right now of separating the sheep from the goats more markets would open up, but in most studios they are holding off, dreading the avalanche of long stored up stock and the letters that follow in complaint at slow handling.

Three Line Comedies.

Most of the comedy producers are fighting shy of the single incident comedies these days. They want stories with two and three lines of action, all related and all working to a common end. As one of the production managers put it, an author may see a line of comedy action that the director cannot see. If he has but the single line, and the director fails to realize the author's ideas, then the story fails, but if there are two or three lines of story of nearly equal value it is possible to work up in the cutting room the line of action that the director has been most successful with and to use the other threads as related action, giving three chances as against one for a good play. It's harder to write, but it does make for safety first—or second or third, as the case may be.

Be Isolated.

Most persons have heard of the painless dentist who explained that he used the line because his brutalities did not hurt him any. Authors should cultivate the same spirit to some degree. They should be able to judge their work without personal bias. They should gain an effect in a certain way because they know that a certain effect will give a certain result, and not because it makes them feel glad or sad. If you let yourself be swayed by your own emotions, you'll write to please yourself, but may not please others. You must know in a disinterested way that this is comedy and that dramatic. This does not mean that you must employ only the conventional devices, but from your knowledge of the conventional you must know how other effects will probably work. Make it a business and know your business. Then you'll do good work, but if you sit down and play tag with your own emotions, you'll be too busy at that to do a good job.

A Copyright Question.

"Since I cannot copyright without printing," begins a late letter, "how can I protect a little one-act play to be produced at a school entertainment, which later on I hope to make into a photoplay?" The answer is by entering the play with the Copyright Office. It is not required that a stage play be printed before copyright. Copyright is to be had upon publication, and the acting of a play is its publication in sufficient form. A book must be printed in many copies to benefit the public, and so be entitled to publication, but the play may be acted before thousands from the typewritten manuscript, and so the manuscript form is held to be sufficient.

Eyes That See Not.

It does no good to study photoplay—or anything else, for that matter—if one is not able to comprehend what he is studying. Without proper mental grasp the mechanical absorption of theory counts for nothing, and yet a surprisingly large number of those who complain of lack of success show that it is wholly due to a lack of understanding that they fail to succeed. One man, who seems to have been studying for some time, writes about the synopsis brain polisher. He cannot understand the paragraph, and assumes that because he is told to use only such parts of the story of Uncle Tom's Cabin as he desires to have used in his story, it follows that he is directed to write a wholly new story. He does not realize that to give Uncle Tom's Cabin with all the detail of the book will result in an overlong and not interesting play. He does not seem to know that no stage version ever gives all of the book story. He jumps at a conclusion because he is unable to think deep enough to reason out facts. Hundreds of writers seek to make slavish application of the rules of technique. They are told in a general way to do this or not to do that. The rule becomes inflexible. So far as they can see they will not use the forbidden devices. They do not realize that the rules of technique are but matters of general advice, to be broken when the situation in the story rises superior to the rule. They work by rule, but they do not first digest the rule to arrive at its spirit. They follow blindly to the letter. They cannot succeed until their mental development reaches a point where they can learn to make a liberal interpretation of the rules. It is better to assimilate a single fact than to memorize a dozen rules without knowing what they mean.

Spare the Spies.

It's largely a waste of time to write a story in which a German spy tries to steal the plans of some wonderful war invention. Between the plans for aeroplanes, rapid fire guns, submarine destroyers, and the formula for a new explosive the editorial reader gets the idea that no spy can hope to get his money from the Wilhelmstrasse unless he steals at least two plans and one formula each month. Why not copper the bet and have the hero steal something from a spy just for a change? The editor might be so surprised that he'll take it, but stolen plans, like lost wills and secret formulae are old, old friends, a bit decrepit, but still able to get about.

Better Stories.

Four letters in the past two weeks have suggested that the writer is a great admirer of this player or that, but regrets to see him or her using such poor material, and asking if it would not be possible to get in touch with the actor with a view to supplying this deficit. It cannot be done that way. In the first place, the player thinks that the play does not matter so long as it has his winning personality to carry it. In the second place, it must be good if he plays it. In the third place, it is not probable that the newcomer could supply better material than the old and tried staff writer. In any case a letter to a star that starts off to tell how poor the plays are will be about as welcome as a Prussian in the French trenches. The thing to do is to start with players and companies open to conviction and make a name, and then offer to place that name at the service of the star. Don't begin by telling the star that he or she could possibly be poor in any play. It is suicidal.

Getting the Swing.

Ever notice that sometimes when you try to walk through a moving street car or train you have little or no trouble, while at other times you seem to bump every seat and passenger between you and the door? In the latter case you have not caught the rhythm of the train and are walking counter to its impulses. Get into the swing of the vehicle and you have no difficulty. It is the same way with writing plots. If you get into the swing of your work, then the plot runs smoothly and fluently, and the result is good, but if you do not catch its rhythm you are "out of step" with your idea and the result is not apt to be good. At such times it is better to stop work than to try to force yourself to do poor work. It is better still, however, to train yourself to catch the cadence of your plot. You'll notice that car conductors and train hands have no trouble on their feet. That is because they are so familiar with the movement that they instinctively adjust their steps to the movement of the train. Familiarity with plot work will do the same for you. You will come to the point where you can get into the spirit and swing of any plot with little or no conscious effort. It is all a matter of perseverance.

Mathematics.

If you write ten scripts in ten days and sell none, your profit is nothing. If you write one script in ten days and sell it, you show a profit.

Technique of the Photoplay

By

EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A book replete with practical pointers on the preparation of stories for the screen, answering the hundred and one questions which immediately present themselves when the first script is attempted. A tested handbook for the constant writer of picture plots. "Straight-from-the-shoulder" information from an author with a wealth of real "dollars-and-cents" experience.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

A New Carbon.

> Curve 1071 shows exact difference in illumination measured in horizontal candle power. Summarizing these tests, it appears that for Speer Alterno carbons the jack-knife setting is as steady as the parallel setting, and that the illumination is 57 per cent. better for the jack-knife at 50 amperes, and 38.5 better for the jack-knife at 80 amperes. The number of settings and adjustments is approximately the same in each case.

Right in the beginning let me say that your drawing does NOT show a jack-knife set, but only a modified form thereof. You have a Handbook. If you will be kind enough to examine figure 124, page 297, you will find the jack-knife set illustrated at B, whereas the set you recommend, if your drawing illustrates your recommendation, is shown at A, concerning which I say, page 298: "Today the best men, men securing the best results and holding the best positions, almost invariably use practically exactly the same set both for a. c. and d. c., or else use a very modified jack-knife set by setting the lower carbon so that it angles out very moderately with relation to the rack-bars, angling the top carbon to meet it, as in A, figure 124."

The trouble lies in difficulty, not to say impossibility of maintaining correct crater position with the jack-knife set. Look at "C," figure 124 of the Handbook. It shows correct crater position. The crater position shown in your drawing are wrong, inefficient and bad. In the parallel setting there is no advancement of the lower carbon, with result that the light is all thrown either directly up or down. The jack-knife set is the same. At the side I have myself drawn a detail illustrating the difficulty of securing and maintaining correct crater position with the jack-knife setting, even in modified form. The dotted line shows correct crater position. Current ALWAYS SEEKS PATH OF LEAST RESISTANCE. There is less distance from point. A to point at upper part of or center of crater, hence tendency is to flatten the crater. This is also to some extent true with the parallel set, and is overcome by advancement of lower carbon. But as you angle the carbons you rapidly increase this difficulty and very soon the point is reached where it is utterly impossible to maintain the crater in position steadily, at least with ordinary carbons. If the Alterno can overcome this tendency to unsteadiness, well and good. I have always conceded a higher c. p. with the jack-knife set because of better crater position combined with less lower tip interference, but the trouble has been impossibility of maintaining crater position with that set. The true jack-knife set is one in which both carbons angle sharply forward from the perpendicular. Until the advent of this department it was very largely used.

Readers will please understand that this argument has nothing whatever to do with the excellence of the Alterno carbon as such. It is a difference of opinion as to a particular setting of the carbons. It is possible the Speer Carbon Company may be correct, insofar as applies to the MODIFIED jack-knife set shown in the drawing. In fact their statement that with this carbon a longer arc may be and is used makes it seem quite possible. But the matter is too serious a one to take any chances. I would, therefore, advise operators to very carefully test both sets, taking into careful consideration constancy of screen results. If the illumination of the modified jack-knife is better one moment than the parallel, but the light density fluctuates, then my contention is right. If it is better and is also continuously better, then I am in error. Will operators kindly report to this department on this proposition.

Trouble.

F. J. Campbell, Fairlee, Vermont, is in trouble, which same he describes thusly:

> Must ask your help. We have a 1916 Simplex and a Powers 6-A, nearly new. Using a 6½ and 7½ condenser on the Powers, with 20 inches between condenser and film; arc 3½ inches from arc lens; a 3¾ inch E. F. projection lens. I am able to get a very clear screen with 60 cycle, 110 volt current through a Compensarc, set at 60 ampere notch. Gundlach-Manhattan projection lens, with 1⅝ inch opening, condensers spaced not more than 1/32nd of an inch. But with the Simplex, using same lens, same focal length condensers and same Compensarc, I cannot get anywhere near the same result. Have moved lamphouse back and forth to every possible position, from 10 inches center of condenser to film, to 32 inches. Have moved lamp back and forth, spaced condensers different distances, but just cannot clear up the screen field. Either there is a big spot in the center or, if I take that out, then the entire outer edge is discolored, varying from brown to red. Have last Handbook and Hawkens, but still am at sea on this matter. If you can give assistance, I shall be very grateful. Also, can I use two Compensarcs, each 110 volt and 60 amperes capacity, using them at different notches, as, for instance, one at 60 and one at 40? Also, how much of the power of the lower one could I use without blowing a 60 ampere fuse on the primary side?

Hum, well, Neighbor Campbell, you have succeeded in handing me a bundle alright. As I understand the matter, you have tried the Power's objective on the Simplex, but have not tried the Power's condenser lenses therewith. Your trouble seems to be in the condenser. Set your Power's so that you can get a clear screen. Having done this, take ALL the lenses out of the Power's and place them in the Simplex, spacing the condensers the same, with same distance from condenser to film, be sure your lamp has same angle and you will get the same result on the screen, barring possible difference in flicker, which has nothing to do with the matter under discussion. If you don't, then there is something radically wrong with your Simplex lamp, and you must test it for grounds—see Handbook, page 255—or for stoppage of current flow somewhere. There is, and can be, no possible difference between the Power's and Simplex machines, viewed merely as machines, which would affect the screen the way you describe, hence, by switching lenses you should be able to, by process of elimination, locate the trouble. Personally, I think there is something wrong with the Simplex condensers—not the focal length they are supposed to be. But I can imagine some such effect as you describe by reason of a very bad ground.

Certainly you can connect the compensarcs as you suggest, also you may use one at its full capacity and the other at less, though I would prefer to use both at 40, rather than one at 50 and the other at 40 Ninety amperes will be none too much for some films, but it will be hard to handle until you get used to it; also, it will be very noisy if you use ordinary carbons. Better use the new Alterno (Speer) or the new National. You will need ¾ carbons for 80 or 90 amperes a. c. Cannot tell you accurately how many amperes you can use at the arc without blowing 60 ampere fuse on primary, because that will depend somewhat upon efficiency of compensarc. Think, however, you will be safe if you do not exceed 90 amperes at arc. Ninety amperes with a 50 volt arc would be 4,500 watts, which, divided by line voltage, calls for less than 45 amperes on the primary. But there is the loss in the compensarc and the power factor to deal with, but certainly you will be safe at 90. You simply connect the primaries of both compensarcs to the line in the usual way, and then connect the secondaries together and join to the lamp in the usual way. For instance: you run the lines from compensarc to lamp in usual manner, then you connect the secondary leads of the second compensarc to the secondary leads from the first, at any convenient point between compensarc and machine table switch.

I think you will find this will enable you to locate your optical trouble, and that all will be well. If not, comeback and I'll go deeper into the matter.

Many Thanks.

From all over the country came a flood of Christmas greeting cards for the editor. Here is a sample from a Hamilton, Ontario, operator: "I cannot tell how much I appreciate the work you are doing for the operator. I wish you a merry Christmas and a prosperous New Year."

To the senders of these remembrances I return my grateful thinks. The letters and cards gave me much pleasure in that they told me I was remembered in kindness by those to whom I have tried to be a true friend. Each one cost its sender a trifle in pennies and in effort and gave to me pleasure which could not be measured in dollars and cents. Again I repeat: thank you all for your kindly remembrance.

From New Zealand.

From Lesley W. Fowler, Everybody's Theatre, Hastings, New Zealand, comes the following communication, though we would not have known whence it came from but for the name New Zealand or the post office stamp; also under the printed word "Hastings" is another in writing, viz.: Hawkes Bay. Whether the latter is a suburb of the former we cannot say:

Am a reader of the Moving Picture World and note that you welcome letters from operators on this side of the world. I wrote some three years ago and again in August, 1916, the last letter containing a photograph of this theatre, which same was opened June, 1916, but to date dead silence has been the only result. The letters were, perhaps, not worth while, or maybe you did not receive them (most certainly the latter.—Ed.). This is a town of 8.500, with a suburban population numbeing 4,000. There are two picture theaters in operation, with two more just closed up. One is the "Everybody's," seating 1,000, privately operated, and one, the "Municipal Theater," run by the borough council. I am operator of the first named, using Power's Six A, motor driven projectors. I have had five years on the crank and the motor surely does save a lot of toil. Use 65 amperes d. c., from 60 volt supply. Prefer an 80 volt supply myself, as the 60 volt means close feeding of the carbons in order to get good tip on negative. Carbons are 25 mm. (don't figure in inches here) positive and 18 mm. negative. Makes are National (United States) and Etna (Swiss). Condensers are menicus bi-convex, 4½ inch (diameter.—Ed.). Machines are hard to procure in Australia and New Zealand, Good prices being had for any old second hands. Just the other day I sold an Imperial Pathe for £32. It was purchased five years ago for £40. The Simplex is becoming a very popular projector, but is not procurable. I am well satisfied with the Power's. Admission prices generally are 1/ and sixpence. There are no three penny seats in New Zealand now. (I understand "I/ and six pence" to mean one shilling and six pence.—Ed.) Admission tax of one penny on shilling tickets went into effect November first. Until Fox and Paramount came to this country it was difficult to get films, for the Picture Supplies (branch of Australian Films, Ltd.) practically controlled New Zealand and new theaters could not open. However, with the two named and the Mutual in the field things are better for the exhibitor. Great things are hoped from Paramount, if they don't turn it up (I take "turn it up" to correspond to our "pass it up."—Ed.). In this town our films have been on circuit about two months and have been through a Bio about 80 times. They are a good bit scratched. We change programmes twice a week, each programme 7,500 feet. Average film hire from £12 to £15 per week. In the big cities (50,000 population) a programme changed once a week costs £30. City shows are continuous, running 11 A. M. to 10 P. M. Here we only show 8 till 10.30 P. M. Business is dull now. All our young men have gone to the war and soon the married ones are to follow. Little New Zealand is still as determined as ever to see it out to the last man and the last shilling.

I pick up good ideas from the Projection Department, for instance: a movable jockey pulley to tighten motor belt. Best wishes for the Christmas season.

The value of a pound sterling is about $4.86½ cents, I believe. This would make weekly city change cost pretty close to $150. Your account of conditions is interesting; also it might possibly be beneficial to you, for, if a five-year-old, second-hand machine costing £40 when new, sells for within five pounds of its original cost, it may spur our machine manufacturers to renewed activity in trying to fill what seems to be a very real want. I have received letters from New Zealand several times, and have published several of them. Whether yours was among the number or no I cannot say, but very likely it was. Interesting accounts of affairs as applied to operating in other countries are always welcome and usually have precedence over other matter, because of their general interest in all countries, including the United States and Canada. But it must be remembered that mail is not only slow now, but also very uncertain, hence, if communications from far-off lands do not appear, just charge it to "lost in transit." The spirit of your country as regards the war is well known. We here are but just getting our "feet wet" in that proposition. Two years from now I have faith to firmly believe these United States will astonish the world, and teach Germany a lasting and very bitter lesson. But the United States is a huge body and it takes huge bodies a long time to get properly in motion. But when we finely do get going, you just take a long squint at the cloud of dust hovering over Germany. We are in the war. We didn't want to get into it, but literally had to. Now we're in we are out to learn friend German that stepping too many times on Uncle Samuel's toes is something more than a dangerous pastime. The German monkeyed just once too often with our slow-running buzz saw. We've speeded said saw up now, and he's going to lose several fingers and get badly bunged up besides. The foregoing is not intended as either blow or brag, but merely a statement of what I firmly think you will find to be plain matter of fact.

Come again, my Brother of Far-Off Lands across the seas. On behalf of more than 30,000 United States and Canadian operators I extend to you the hand of fellowship and wish to and for you all a prosperous year.

Cannot See His Argument.

Ralph Martin, Los Angeles, arises to remark:

Page 1632, December 15 issue, you give the result of experiment with two shutter designs, A and B, and marvel at the difference in speed necessary to eliminate flicker. I have, however, worked out the problem and there is really not so much to be wondered at. Perhaps the solution may supply knowledge of calculations of this kind which will have value in working out similar problems in the future.

Let us consider the conditions as set forth in before-named article: Shutter A requires 84 r. p. m and shutter B 112 r. p. m. of the crank shaft, respectively, to eliminate flicker. Hence A requires 1.4 and B 1.8 revolutions of the crank shaft per second, and, since each shutter makes 16 revolutions to one of the crank shaft, A makes 22.4 and B 28.8 per second respectively. It, therefore, follows that A makes one revolution in 1 ÷ 22.4 of a second and B makes one revolution in 1 ÷ 28.8 of a second, or nearly 1% of the full circle of the shutter. Now the difference in percentage of light passed by the two shutters, also based upon the full circle, is 1.44%, which checks with 1% by only a difference of .44%, which is a very close agreement, considering that the different arrangement of blades may amount to something. There is, therefore, really nothing unreasonable or unexpected in the results obtained by experiment with the two shutters, since the percentage of difference in time and percentage in difference in light agre so closely. The case of the four-bladed shutter, in same article, when treated in like manner shows a difference of 4% in time, compared to 7% in light, which also is very close. The method I have set forth for calculating such matters seems to point to a definite law of equal proportion existing between necessary speed and blade width, within certain limits.

Maybe I'm wrong, brother Martin, but I can't see it at all. It is not the total blade width which alone governs flicker, but the proportion of blade width to light space AND the method of its distribution. It is very easy to make a shutter which will give fifty-fifty of light and darkness, yet produce a tremendous flicker. Take the same blades and re-distribute them in different circumferential relation to each other and there will be no flicker at all at the same speed, although the percentage of light and darkness has not been altered in the least. That was what surprised me. Shutter B had what seemed to be a very poor circumferential arrangement of blades. They were poorly proportioned as to each other and poorly arranged, yet they gave improved results. Your calculations are interesting, but in this case they fail, I think, to supply the answer.

Guide to Kinematography.

Messrs. E. T. Heron & Company, London, England, have recently placed on the market a 275-page Guide to Kinematography, by Colin N. Bennett, who wears quite a collection of letters, such as F. C. S., F. R. P. S., after his name. It is added that Colin N. compiled the book "at the suggestion and guidance of E. T. Heron."

Viewed as a "guide to kinematography," the book leaves considerable to be desired. I, myself, found it would take at least one thousand pages, each page containing fully as much as a page of the book in question, to cover projection and things allied thereto in any even halfway complete manner. The very least I could get off with was in excess of 700 pages, yet Friend Bennett proposes to cover the entire industry in 275 pages, just about half of which are devoted to projectors and operating. Sorry, Brother Bennett, but it just simply can't be done.

I am glad to see one thing, however, viz.: Friend Bennett calls the operators' domain an "Operating Room," at least, in the main heading—page 175. But in most subjects he merely tells, in the simplest possible manner, how a thing is done. There is no attempt to tell how to improve in its doing. For instance, regardless of the fact that millions of dollars' damage is done each year by unnecessary rapid rewinding, I do not see a word in condemnation of this subject. There is not a word as to necessary size of observation port, notwithstanding the hugely importance of this item to good projection.

Viewed merely as an interesting work for the amateur to read, and satisfy his curiosity as to how various things are done, the book will serve. Viewed as a work of instruction for operators, or for anyone else in the industry, the book might almost as well have remained unwritten. To criticise thus sharply is not a pleasure, but to my way of thinking, the putting out of books under a misleading title ("Guide to Kinematography" is decidedly misleading, since it could not possibly serve as a guide, unless, on the principle that the blind may lead the blind) is decidedly wrong. And Mr. E. T. Heron is too well posted a man not to know that the book in question is lacking in nearly every essential detail.

Porto Rican Operators on Strike.

Recently a Porto Rican operator called upon us, he being one of the rapidly growing list of Cine Mundial projection department fans (the editor of this department is also the editor of that one), and from him I secured quite some considerable interesting data. The operators of Porto Rico are on strike. They have been getting from 8 to 12 dollars per week, the latter sum being top notch wages, paid only in the larger cities and only to top notch men. They are now striking for from $15 to $20.00. Not knowing local conditions, I cannot say what proportion 8 to 10 dollars bears to wages paid in the U. S. It may equal our own, in purchasing power for all I know. But most likely it is far from doing that. My own conjecture is that it is an entirely inadequate wage. Be that as it may, however, the Porto Rico men have committed serious blunder in attempting to pretty nearly double their wages, all in one jump. They will most likely fail. Had they undertaken to get a reasonable percentage of increase they might have succeeded, but attempting to swallow a whole apple at one gulp is pretty likely to end in more or less painful failure. Cut up your apple and swallow it, a bite at a time. That way is slower, but more successful; oh, very much more successful.

Power's projectors are mostly used, with a few Simplex. Condition of film is good. Current is all d. c. (continuous they call it) and mostly 240 volts.

Interesting Letter.

William Lorence, New York City, whose handwriting is excellent to muss up paper with, but not to read, sends in the following interesting letter, accompanied with several "exhibits." He says:

> Regarding article "Har-r-umph, Um, Jesso, Jesso," page 1015, November 17th issue, although I am a non-chemical mortal of the lowest order, yet I would bet a dollar to a doughnut you are in error in your conclusion that the manufacturer is the goat. I say it is the fault of the firm which developed the film and rushed the process unduly, or maybe it was a negligent employee. Eastman's letter tells you plainly that the developer or tinter was at fault (Well, Old Man, there seems to be a misunderstanding. I used the term "manufacturer" as meaning the producer—the outfit which shoots the scene, develops the negative, prints the positive and tints it, if it is tinted. Who did you think I meant?—Ed.)
> With regard to enclosures, the exchange slip shows that the Universal New York exchange is beginning to get on the job, each reel received has a similar slip attached. (Slip referred to is a blank reading "This reel was examined by No. —— and is reported to be in good condition. If you find it otherwise please return this slip and report nature of trouble on lines below. We desire to rent only film in A-1 condition." Universal Film Exchange of New York, S. Zierler, Supervisor.—Ed.). The piece of film with hole in shows that the Standard projector prevents the sprocket holes from burning (How could you burn a hole?—Ed.) when a fire occurs, so that one can proceed without having to make a splice then and there.
> The piece of film with Allenbaugh's advertisement explains itself. Please tell Allenbaugh to cut out the habit of sticking these slips on the films, as they are a first-class nuisance. Found eight of them in a five-reeler. Don't seem to be at all particular where they stick 'em. Paste them at end, at beginning or in middle of reel. It is up to you to hand them a summons and call them to account. Regarding the other film sample I'll bet another dollar to another doughnut you can't tell which side the emulsion is on without actual physical examination. So long, Rich, for the present and watch your step with that go-devil.

The good brother adds a P. S. concerning a certain league official who has been taking liberties with my name in speeches. Asks why I don't go after him and show him up. Because, friend Lorence, the party in question is rapidly showing himself up. Why, therefore, should I bother about the matter? He has not injured me in the least degree. In fact, injury to me personally is to him a matter of secondary consideration. It is the Moving Picture World he seeks (vainly) to injure, through me. The Universal inspection slip is excellent. And now that the Universal New York exchange has done this it is up to operators served by that exchange to co-operate heartily, not in a luke-warm, half-hearted, don't-give-a-dam way. Let the exchange know that if it is willing to do its part you will do yours. As to the Allenbaugh (Film Renovating Company) stickers, if they are affixed as you say then it is an outrage which should not be tolerated. Yours is, however, the first complaint I have had as to this matter. The fire certainly was held to the aperture all right in the sample submitted. Two and one-half pictures burned away, but the film track left perfect on both sides. Yes, the sample fooled me all right as to emulsion. Would have sworn it was on the side it was not on. Very odd.

The First Time.

Barney Ludesher, Madison, South Dakota, hands in the following:

> This is the first time I have written your department, although I have been operating something like ten years (shame upon you, friend Ludesher.—Ed), but believe me I never miss reading it; also have full set of your handbooks, and all I can say is they are fine.
> Noticed an article from Tucson, Arizona, December 1st issue, concerning change-over sign. Name of writer was Brumberg. Wonder if it is same man I worked with when I played "Birth of a Nation" last season. If it is I want to say he is a high-class man. He had a good outfit and it was in most excellent condition; in fact, all the Tucson men deliver high-class screen results.
> As to the change-over sign, when I run a multiple reel release I put the first two reels together and take the sub-title, beginning reel three, off, attaching it to what is then reel one. If reel three has no beginning title I wind it into the first reel and so on until I find a reel with a beginning sub-title. In other words, I always use a sub-title at the end of every reel. I find this to be a good plan; also it involves very little extra work. By the way, were you once a fireman on the C. B. & Q. from LaCrosse to Savannah? My home is in Dubuque, Local 103.

Um, waddayagointdo if there is no beginning sub-title for four reels, huh? Your plan, like all plans which require each operator to fix up his own change-over sign, is a makeshift. The sign should be incorporated in the negative film itself. But your plan is better than some and infinitely better than punching the film. Yes, guess it is the same Brumberg. I agree with you in your estimate of him and of the Tucson men. Was there last spring myself. No, I never worked on the division you name. Was on River Division of the C. M. & St. P., from Minneapolis to LaCrosse, in 1885 or 1886. Was in Dubuque last summer. The men there are, if they will forgive the plain statement of fact, just a little bit sleepy. A little injection of pep would improve matters in your home city. Don't stay in your own dooryard so long next time, friend Ludesher.

Sixty-five Foot Picture.

P. L. Akins, formerly Local Union 110, Chicago, now of whatever the following mess of abbreviations stand for, Co C 323 Fld Sig Bn, Camp Funston, insults us with a postcard on one side of which is a camp scene, in the foreground of which are two large pans filled to overflowing with what seems to be perfectly good loaf sugar. G-r-r-r-r, man! Whatcha mean by such doings? And here in New York all the sweetness we get is what we manage to steal from the lips of the—. I hope the first lump Akins bites gives him the toothache! On the other side he says: "How about a good light on a picture sixty-five feet wide? I saw one—did you ever?" Yes, Brother Akins, I did. In fact, I've seen a good light—I may say an excellent light, on a picture fully six hundred feet wide. The light was such that every little detail showed plainly. There was no travel ghost and the light was well distributed. The definition also was excellent. It was the panorama of the Battle of Nashville, at Nashville, Tennessee. However, we will listen to further details and will admit we never even saw a 65-foot moving picture, well illuminated or otherwise. Come over with further details, please.

Wants Advice As Regards Shutter.

Edward Hitchcock, Plainesville, Ohio, says:

> Would like your opinion as to following shutter: Make main blade just wide enough to cover lens while film is moving. Make openings on either side of main blade 60°. Make each interrupter blade 60° and the opening opposite main blade as many degrees less than 60 as the main blade is over 60. Am using a shutter made after this plan, and it seems to give good results.

Don't quite "get you," Brother Hitchcock. Seems to me that if you make the main blade as suggested, and make two openings and two blades, each 60°, you will have automatically fixed the width of the remaining opening. How will you alter its width without altering one or more of your other fixed measurements? I can't see it.

Projector Wanted.

Who has a Power's Six in good condition which they will part with in return for one hundred dollars cash? I know where the coin lies waiting. Where is the machine? Don't want any wreck, but a machine in good condition. Address the editor. Prefer that it be located in the west, but that is not essential. Also and moreover this editor could himself use a small home projector in fair condition and cheap for cash. He has personal slides and a reel of personal film; also he has friends to whom he would like to display the aforesaid slides and reel occasionally. Name cash price and send description.

What It Was.

Quite some several replies to the "Can You Answer This, Mr. Operator" query, December 29 issue, were received, but none were entirely correct. In fact, I was myself not entirely right in my guess. I thought it was a. c., with both craters in partial focus at the screen and no lenses at all in the objective—just plain glass.

It really was, so the examiners tell me, reversed objective lenses.. He might have had either a. c. or d. c. at the arc; the examiners did not remember which it was. The two circles prove conclusively that a. c. was in use, with a wrong carbon set, and wrong adjustment of his condenser system as well.

Captain Sears Speaks Before Cinema Camera Club.

At a meeting of the Cinema Camera Club held Thursday, January 3, in the club rooms in the Times Building a large audience listened to an interesting talk by Captain J. B. Sears, of the photographic division of the United States Army. Captain Sears was accompanied by Lieutenants DeBerri and Albert Kaufman. Lieut. Kaufman was formerly manager of the Famous Players studio, and well known to most of the members of the club. He introduced Captain Sears to the club with a few appropriate remarks, after which Captain Sears spoke on the work of the photographic division. He said that in February, which saw the beginning of our huge National Army, there was no such department in existence, and that not until July 19 of the last year was the department organized.

As there will be a photographic unit with each division of the army it may be readily seen that a great number of men will be necessary for this work, all of whom must be recruited and trained in the shortest possible time. Drafted men who have photographic experience may be transferred to the photographic division by making proper application to their commanding officers.

Schools of instruction are being placed in operation at various bases throughout the country where men transferred from the draft or men who enlist in the photographic division may be trained for the special work which they have to do.

He referred to the primitive yet monumental work of Brady, the celebrated photographer of the Civil War, who drove about with a horse and wagon containing his photographic paraphernalia with which he took what is practically the only pictorial history of the Civil War. Under modern conditions all of this has been changed, and the photographic department is one of the most important in the army; in fact, the camera has become the eye through which the army watches the movements of the enemy.

There are two divisions of the photographic department of the Signal Corps, the land and the air. In the air division it is expected that more still work will be done than with motion picture cameras on account of the vibration of the aeroplanes, for the still work of the photographic aerial observers will be extensive and of the highest importance. In the land divisions will be the units of motorlorry dark rooms where the prints required by the strategic officers will be finished right behind the firing line. As the movements of the army practically depend upon the results of the photographs made by the aeronautic observers, and finished in these field dark rooms the work must be of the highest quality and yet turned out with almost incredible dispatch. The slightest imperfection in a print might mean a mistake which would cost many lives.

In addition to the pictures for purely military purposes a tremendous number of photographs and motion pictures will be made for publicity purposes and for army records. On account of the leakage of military secrets few cameramen outside of the army are allowed anywhere near the battle lines, and nearly all of the motion pictures of army activity in the fighting sectors and the news photographs reproduced in the magazines and newspapers will be the work of the photographic division of the Signal Corps.

Captain Sears is organizing a school at Columbia University called the United States Signal Corps School of Military Cinematography, which will have a capacity for quartering and training 100 men at one time to fill positions both for overseas and for work on this side. He asked the club members to volunteer to help instruct students at the new school, as the urgent need for men makes the number of instructors available somewhat limited. He also called upon members whose circumstances permitted them to volunteer to enlist in the division, and assured them that great chances for a quick promotion were open to the men who could make good in this division.

Film Development in the Tropics.

(By J. I. Crabtree, of the Eastman Kodak Research Laboratory.)

Film may be successfully developed under tropical conditions (up to 95° F.) by means of most developers, with the addition of 10 per cent. sodium sulphite and some potassium bromide in order to prevent fog, but much better with a special developer compounded with paraminophenol hydrochloride. Although it has been recommended to develop film in the tropics by hardening the same either before or after development by the addition of a hardener such as a formalin it is only possible to secure the best results by using a developer free from such additional agents. The formula for the developer is as follows:

	Avoirdupois
Paraminophenol Hydrochloride	360 grs.
Sodium Sulphite (E. K. Co.)	6 oz.
Sodium Carbonate (E. K. Co.)	6 oz.
Water to	1 gallon

Rinse for only one or two seconds before placing in the fixing bath, otherwise the film is apt to soften in the rinse water.

The time of development with Eastman film at 95° F. for normal contrast is one and a half minutes, though the time of development may be doubled by the addition of 100 grams of sodium sulfate (crystal) per liter of developer.

At temperatures up to 75° F. the regular acid fixing bath should be used, but at temperatures up to 85° F. the following chrome alum bath is necessary.

	Avoirdupois
Hypo	1 lb. 12 oz.
Sodium Sulphite (E. K. Co.)	5½ oz.
Potassium Chrome Alum	11 oz.
Acetic Acid (glacial)	160 minims
Water to	1 gallon

Dissolve the sulphite and chrome alum together and add to the Hypo solution, finally adding acetic acid.

At temperatures up to 95° F. the following formalin bath should be employed:

	Avoirdupois
Hypo	2 lbs. 2 oz.
Sodium Sulphite (E. K. Co.)	7 oz.
Formalin (formaldehyde 40%)	17 oz.
Water to	1 gallon

First dissolve the hypo, then the sulphite, and finally add the formalin.

In order to eliminate the odor of the formalin the bath should be enclosed in a covered tank if possible. The above baths keep well at the temperatures stated, so that the special chrome alum bath is very suitable, while in special cases such as expeditionary work, when very high temperatures may prevail, the formalin bath will give perfect results.

Still picture negatives may be successfully treated in a tray in the same way as film, though so far it has not been possible to devise a method for using the Kodak film or film pack tanks at the temperatures named.

Although no difficulty is to be expected when developing gaslight and bromide papers at high temperatures the use of a stop bath of 3 per cent. acetic acid, and twice the usual amount of liquid hardener in the fixing bath is recommended.

Exposures with Telephoto Lenses.

Frank V. Chambers calls attention to the advice given in Photography and Focus to ascertain the exposure by means of a meter, and then to give twice that, and says that while this may be sound enough when applied to the subjects and methods generally in use by amateurs, it will not do when working with telephoto lenses for landscape purposes. When the nearest shadow is perhaps fifty or a hundred yards from the camera, which is not at all uncommon in such a case, it is very much lighter than it is when close at hand, and the meter exposure, instead of being on the short side, is apt to be the other way. Experience is the best guide in such cases, and one soon gets to know almost instinctively what allowance to make for the lightening of the deepest shadows by distance. It varies not only with the distance but with the condition of the atmosphere at the time, as is only what we might expect, since it is essentially an atmospheric phenomenon. The allowance may be less when an orthochromatic plate and a color screen are used than when they are not; but, in any case, the exposure that is given should not exceed what the meter indicates; while if the distances included are great and there is any haze, this may well be cut down to one-half or even to one-quarter.

Kinks for Cameramen.

J. Frank Martin, of 981 Union Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa., has sent us a little booklet written by him under the title given above. While it contains only twenty-four pages, every page is full of meat and the following subjects are treated in a condensed but able manner: Lenses, camera attachments, trick work and double exposure, correct exposure, exposure tables, light effects, silhouettes, composition, make-up and illumination.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON.

Proper Presentation of Pictures Musically.

Fitting the Feature.

ENUNCIATION—Resolved that if directing brains, a large library, and fine orchestra create good music, a picture can be properly presented by the use of same.

HYPOTHESIS—Let the picture be viewed.

SOLUTION—With paper before you, a stop-watch at hand, you see the picture screened. Your first cue for music will be "At Screening." Note the hour you begin viewing. Set the stop-watch. The characters are introduced and the play begins. Your first selection should be left blank. As the scenes change you note cues and the time for each. Memoranda are made according to your individual methods and you will probably make a note of the kind of scene, and indicate the tempo of the music necessary. Possibly a definite selection comes to your mind, and you put it down for the time being. Thus you proceed throughout the entire picture, arranging the changes of music, tentatively fitting the theme and classifying each scene according to its predominant thought. You time each change. Catch the hour when your picture is finished and you know the aggregate time of screening. You already have the time of each scene. If the picture has been projected faster than the usual speed used by the exhibitor, you can add a few seconds to each scene by a little mathematical calculation. This gives the exact length of the musical numbers required for your setting. The mechanical work has been done.

A cue is a signal, sign or symbol denoting the time to begin. Cues should be carefully selected. Titles make the best cues, and long sub-titles are especially effective. They give the orchestra an opportunity of changing without running into the coming scene.

Where the cue is a description of action, care should be taken that the action selected should be well defined and should occur only as an isolated instance. For example we see D—"Mary at well." If Mary goes frequently to the well the cue becomes worthless for practical purposes. Sometimes pictures have similar sub-titles, repeated, such as T—"A week later," and a little further along in the footage the same title appears. The title usually itself indicates a change of music. Time has passed and the situations are changed, necessitating a change in the music. If the music be changed at both titles, all will be well, but otherwise the cue should be written T—"A week later" (first time). For example: Recently a picture was given its initial performance in a hall where an organ supplied the music. The organist received a cue-sheet and was warned regarding the cue "T.—Glory, Glory Hallelujah." It appeared twice; once at the beginning of a scene, where a colored gentleman was hammering it out on a dismal piano, and again at the end of the scene as he stopped playing. The organist missed the first cue entirely, and while the folks gathered around the piano, were singing and beating time to the Battle Hymn of the Republic, he guessed it was a fox-trot and guessed wrong. When the cue appeared the second time, he started "Glory, Glory Hallelujah" and only got to the end of the fourth bar when the scene changed, calling for a slow moderato selection. This made the picture seem ridiculous, almost a burlesque, in fact. Inserts of letters, telegrams, diaries or newspapers are seldom used as cues. These are good so long as there is no duplication of the insert. Let there be no ambiguity in the cues.

The habit of some compilers of cue-sheets to indicate the first two words of a sentence, in a title used as a cue, should be vigorously decried. When a leader must play, direct, and read his cue-sheet, at one and the same time, every effort should be made to make things easy for him. If he inadvertently misses those two little words, the cue is gone and he is lost. Cues should be definite, plain, and clearly comprehensible.

With the cues firmly established, it becomes necessary to study the action following each and determine its bearing on the picture as a whole. The scene of the script may be laid in New York, but in order to show the "bad husband" we see him in a dance hall in a Western city. This may be regarded as a musical parenthesis having no direct bearing on the plot and the setting should be unostentatiously atmospheric. On the other hand this same picture may begin by depicting the peaceful life of the deserted wife, and the happy-go-lucky hero, and their fondness for each other. An Allegretto theme will do nicely here. We then see the hero's father as he returns from a good day's hunt in the Maine Woods. He, too, is happy. It is an exterior and rural scene. Although the dominant emotion is the same it would be wise to change the music to a pastoral motif. The first scenes showed the heroine and hero in interiors. The difference in the musical accompaniment must not be overlooked.

Music portraying happiness will fit in both cases, but for the interior scenes a quality of peace should pervade the composition, while for exterior and pastoral "locations," that light and airy, free-as-the-wind style would be more suitable. Although the dominant emotion is the thing to fit, yet, by analysis of the situations surrounding it, one can enhance the setting materially.

After having determined upon the suitable selections necessary to fit each scene, you can then use the pruning hook. With the climax of your picture firmly fixed in your mind you should go over your setting carefully, piece by piece, and determine whether each is working towards the climax in its proper proportion. Is there a gradual grading upwards? Is the setting, as a whole, smooth? Do the numbers follow in key sequence? Is the music selected for the climax, big enough to fit the situation? Is the theme properly placed?

Your setting is complete with the exception of your first number, the overture to the picture. You should now be fairly familiar with your subject. You have grasped the main thought and know what it's about. Select your first number to fit that thought. You have found the solution of a musical setting, well-timed, atmospheric, supporting the action and one that fits the feature.

Music at the Rialto.

During the week of Jan. 20-27, the Rialto Orchestra, of forty-five men, presented its usual good musical program. Since the opening of the new Rivoli theater, the orchestra does not live up to its previous high-water mark of excellency, owing to the heavy draft of its best men to the other house. It still continues to rank far above the average.

A selection from "The Queen of Sheba," by Goldmark, opened the show, with Hugo Riesenfeld conducting. When Mr. Riesenfeld wields the baton we are always sure of a musicianly and scholarly rendition. A mixed chorus was introduced in the finale, for some reason best known to the management. It may have been for the tableau effect, for the girls were pretty and costumed in the oriental garb. They sang, but no words were audible, since the score calls for forte music and the orchestra completely drowned the voices which were very puny. The overture, itself, was beautifully played.

The next number was regretable. The old and always reliable song, "Asleep in the Deep," by Petrie, was essayed by one Emanuel List (basso Profundo), former occupation and pedigree unknown to us. Mr. List persistently left the key and was persuaded to return only by sheer force of his accompaniment. The last note—a low D—was sung completely off pitch, and the long-suffering orchestra, in their merciful endeavor to spare him further humiliation, only pretented to play the closing chord. The best part of the solo was the lighting effect. To signify the revolving tower beam of the lighthouse he sang in alternate darkness and "Side Spot." This is new and in keeping with the genius of Mr. Rothapfel, who never fails to spring some suitable surprise.

The fitting of the scenic deserves special mention. A part of "Siegfried," by Wagner, was used to portray the snowy mountains, and it was perfect in its pastoral effect. Much credit is due Mr. Riesenfeld for picking an effective number that exactly covered the picture in time length. The feature, being light, received a good setting, but we thought that instead of using a shoddy "hurry," one of the works of the old masters would have been more suitable for the magnitude of the orchestra. The Rialto orchestra has the instrumentation for capably rendering the best things and should be the first exponent of better music for the pictures.

Gaston Dubois, solo cellist, played "Neapolitan Dance," by Casella. Although a little nervous at the start, he developed wonderful technique and showed a richness of tone that was most pleasing. A cut in this number, to shorten it, would prove effective.

well and snappily rendered, sticking strictly to the traditions and

The Prelude to Act IV, from "Carmen," closed the program. It was depicting the Spanish atmosphere throughout.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

THE BIRTH OF DEMOCRACY—(Franco-American). THEME for the Heroine—Andante. Suggest "Les Phoenicians" (from Herodiade) —Massenet.

This is a French story throughout, dealing with the stirring days of 1792. It is dramatic with many big scenes. "William Tell," overture; "Faust," No. 2, Gounod-Tavan; "Athalia Overture," Mendelssohn or "Prelude" (from Werther)—Massenet are possible big numbers. "The Marseillaise," and a few light French numbers will be needed. A Peasant dance, a Misterioso and an Agitato can be used. Cue sheet can be obtained from The Merit Film Exchange.

MADAM SPY (Universal). THEME for the Heroine—Allegretto. Suggest "Garden of Love"—Ascher, or "Serenade"—Pierne.

The music must be light, as there is considerable comedy in this picture. A few dramatic numbers for the fourth and fifth reels and a couple of military marches for scenes at Annapolis are needed. Open and close with the theme. Cue sheets can be obtained at the Universal Exchange.

OUR MUTUAL MOTOR—(Metro-Drew). No THEME.

One-reel comedy. Use light opera stuff. No cue sheet available.

WOMAN AND WIFE (Select). THEME for the Heroine—Andante. Suggest "Mother"—Romberg, "Dream of the Flowers"—Cohen, or "A Little Song"—Erdody.

This is "Jane Eyre" picturized. Old English atmosphere. Simplicity should be the keynote of your music. In the last reel use dramatic stuff. Be careful about the proper placing of your theme. Cue sheets can be obtained from Select Exchange.

Three Society Notes from Chicago

They're Authentic, We're Sure, Otherwise Terry Ramsaye Wouldn't Have Indorsed Them with His John Hancock.

THE fact that Mary Miles Minter has a purple pup which is very fond of kraut will travel farther in print than a solemn discussion of the 'mission of the pictures' and a good fighting argument is better publicity than prosperity interviews," remarked Mrs. Elizabeth Sears, publicity director of the American Film Company, Inc. This was the keynote of her address before the Advertising Woman's Club of Chicago at the monthly meeting, held January 15.

Terry Ramsaye, of the Mutual Film Corporation, the sole male guest, faced the gathering of knitting women and made a number of publicity confessions, including the origin of John R. Freuler's movement for the coinage of a fifteen-cent piece, the Charlie Chaplin non-skid tire, and the Edna Goodrich earring watch with the chimes.

Betty Shannon, known to Broadway as "the girl press agent," previously press representative of a number of New York picture concerns, was among those present, in a green "tam," which was said to be the feature of the evening.

H. Winik Suggests a Moses

Thinks Business in a Bad Way and Needs Someone to Lead It Out.

H. WINIK, who returned here from England a few months ago, is today considered by the men who know, one of the most powerful and magnetic personalities in the industry. He is financially interested in a great number of enterprises throughout the world, and is responsible for the Western Import Company, which has purchased the World Rights to Mabel Normand in "Mickey." He has established a film agency in every foreign country, which controls the most successful film productions in the market, including the Triangle for the entire world outside of the United States, and the new First National Exhibitors' Circuit pictures for England. He has never been known to pick a failure and every one of his ventures show a profit on the right side of the ledger.

H. Winik.

First and foremost, Mr. Winik is independent. He believes in attacking a problem from all sides. He is one, among many men, whose method of reasoning is both inductive and deductive concerning any subject that engages his attention. He believes in using common sense—"snap judgment" has no play in his category. He digs down to the root of every problem confronting him. He loves brevity.

His foresight is illustrated in the following little anecdote from a page in his career: Two years ago he went to Europe and established nine renting offices in England, handling Triangle and other productions. Four months later, after establishing a good business there, he received a cable from New York, asking him to take the next boat and come here, for there was a big merger pending. His answer was an inquiry for further particulars and the proposition. He did not receive a reply to his inquiry, but surmised the whys and wherefores. The Triangle Company was releasing two big features and two comedies each week, so Mr. Winik, instead of releasing these two dramas and two comedies per week, released only one, and prepared to protect his foreign business and customers for two years thereafter, and the consequence is that his program is made up until March, 1919, consisting of the following stars: Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Dorothy Dalton, Bessie Barriscale, Lillian Gish, Dorothy Gish, Robert Harron, Charles Ray, Frank Keenan, Norma Talmadge, Louise Glaum, Bessie Love, Mae Marsh and several others.

The scheme devised by the group of gentlemen on this side of the water, now controlling these stars, has failed in the European countries. The market is independent, business is in a healthy condition and Mr. Winik's foresight has secured for him the lasting friendship and support of every exhibitor in Europe.

In an interview, Mr. Winik said: "I have had the most amusing time of my life within the last three months, watching the film industry in this country. When a shoe pinches someone, they know exactly where it hurts them, but there seems to be a continuous howling in this business, and no one knows what it is about. Most of the leaders don't give a rap what happens tomorrow, as long as a good stud poker game, without a limit, can be played today. That is why the entire industry is in such a terrible mess.

"I believe the greatest tonic in the world right now would be just a little plain every-day common sense. Centuries ago the whole world was in an awful mess, like the film business is today, and it took a man like Moses to turn the trick."

Universal Reduces Distributing Expenses

Henceforth Jewel and Bluebird Products and Special Productions Will Be Handled by Universal Exchanges.

IN timely keeping with present-day demands an arrangement was concluded last week by which Jewel features, Bluebird photoplays and Special Productions will henceforth be distributed through Universal film exchanges in this city. The stockholders of the three concerns mentioned got together and arrived at the wise conclusion that each of the allied interests will be able to secure maximum efficiency at minimum cost by having the combined product handled by a single staff and distributed through the same system of exchanges. This plan reduces expenses all around, throughout every working department, without impairing the service rendered by each.

The plan went into effect Monday, January 21, at the Chicago office, and it is the intention to establish the same system in all the Universal exchanges, for the products mentioned, just as soon as arrangements can be perfected.

C. R. Plough, formerly manager of the Chicago Bluebird exchange, will henceforth be in charge of the service branch of the combined business, and I. L. Lesserman, formerly manager of the Universal exchange, will become general sales manager, having charge of the Jewel, Bluebird, Butterfly and Special products; indeed, of the entire Universal output.

Titan Pictures Corporation in Trouble

American Military Relief Association, with Same Chief, Has License Revoked by State Council of Defense.

THE president of the Titan Pictures Corporation, this city, Frederick Clark Russell, has gained unenviable publicity during the past two weeks in connection with a series of comedies which he has been producing for some time past under the auspices of the American Military Relief Association.

These picture comedies had for stars famous comedians who have played at the leading dramatic houses in Chicago for some time past, and who had offered their services gratis on being informed that a large share of the proceeds from these picture c medies would be devoted to buying tobacco, cigarettes and other little comforts for our soldiers and sailors.

Raymond Hitchcock appeared in the first comedy over six months ago, but it did not turn out well in the making, and was never shown in public. Ernest Truex, Charles Grapewin, Lawrence Wheat, Josephine Harriman, Ivy Sawyer and Joseph Santley are others who patriotically offered their services, the two last named being the leading people in the "Oh, Boy" company, which is just closing a six months' run in Chicago.

Last week (at the time of writing) the people interested in these comedies were startled by announcements in the daily press that the State Council of Defense had revoked the license of the American Military Relief Association because of the failure of its avowed purpose. The members of the State Council of Defense had discovered that Frederick Russell Clark was not only president of the Titan concern, but that he was also president of the Military Relief Association.

This association had been originally founded by army officers in the city, who believed that money for their purpose could be more readily obtained through moving pictures than by any other means. A company was formed by these officers, and the State Council of Defense granted a license. The work of making pictures, however, was beyond these men, and when they were called to the front Mr. Clark was given charge of the relief fund. At this time he became president of the Military Relief Association, and it is understood that as president of the Titan concern he had promised to turn over to the association $600 for every picture produced under its auspices.

The State Council of Defense claimed that no money had yet been turned over, and therefore revoked the license of the Military Relief Association. On the other hand, Mr. Clark doggedly affirms that he will turn over $600 to the Red Cross or some other war relief fund as the result of the recent exhibition in several Chicago picture houses of the "Garden of Allie" comedy. It is to be understood that this picture is the only one which has been given public showing thus far.

Trouble assails Mr. Clark from another angle. It has been shown that the Titan concern was originally capitalized at $100,000 and that this capitalization had recently been increased to $1,000,000; also that investors, impressed by the avowed patriotic purpose of the concern and of the big profits promised, had purchased about $18,000 of the stock.

Mr. Clark and David H. Weiss, a broker, were summoned to a meeting in the Federal Building last week by post-office inspectors, who closely questioned them to what extent patriotic pleas had been employed to sell stock. Assistant Post-Office Inspector Stuart also directed an investigation to ascertain if the mails had been misused in disposing of stock through "flag flapping" advertisements.

Joseph Santley, of the "Oh, Boy" company, has announced that he will not permit the release of the comedy in which he has played the leading role until Mr. Clark has satisfied him with explanations.

Film Companies Cheer Jackies at Training Station.

To Chicago film exchanges is due a word of commendation for their hearty and very liberal support, for several months past, of the cinema entertainment department of the Naval Training Station, Great Lakes, Illinois. This department, of which Dr. John B. Kaufman is the head, is conducted solely for the amusement and instruction of the men in training. The station is equipped with every modern device for the projection of pictures, and programs are selected and exhibited Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings each week.

Among the pictures contributed thus far, without rental charge, are Metro's "The Slacker" and "Draft 258," Goldwyn's "Polly of the Circus" and several other subjects from the offices of George Kleine, Pathe, Mutual Film Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, Triangle Film Corporation, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, World Film Corporation and others. The Fox office is now supplying the Station with one subject each week.

On Friday evening, January 25, through the courtesy of F. M. Brockwell, Chicago manager for Paramount-Artcraft, and Ralph O. Proctor, Chicago manager for Pathe, a program consisting of Douglas Fairbanks in "Reaching for the Moon" and the latest Pathe News Weekly was given to a large and appreciative gathering of Jackies. It is hardly necessary to say that the officers in charge feel very grateful for the help and co-operation given them by the various film companies in Chicago, up to date.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Mrs. Frederick Michael of Chicago, an untiring worker for the past four years in the interests of clean pictures, through the medium of the better films committee of the Illinois Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Association, has sent out the following announcement to her friends and co-workers: "I find that with the great response comes an urgent call for a general clearing house for suitable films for schools, churches, community centers and cantonments. While the recommendations of good films are closely followed, it is often a difficult matter to procure the films through the different exchanges. The principal of a school or supervisor of a social center cannot make a pilgrimage of all the exchanges in order to make up a five or seven reel program, nor are the exchanges willing to devote the time to the making up of an inexpensive program. My hope for years has been that some one with 'vision' would make it possible to 'clear' through one exchange, and it is with the greatest pleasure that I announce that I now am associated with the Atlas Educational Film Company, whose standard is of the highest type and which will co-operate with me in this new work." Those who wish to communicate with Mrs. Michael should address the Better Films Clearing House, 63 East Adams street, Chicago.

Aaron J. Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, has returned from his recent trip to New York and has given out that the First National Exhibitors' Circuit will not amalgamate with any other firm or company. It will remain as formerly and run its own exchanges. During his stay in New York Mr. Jones purchased sixteen important features for the Central Film Company. Seven of these are Norma Talmadge pictures by Triangle and nine are Frank Keenan pictures, also of Triangle make. These will be released in Illinois and Indiana by the Central Film Company. While Mr. Jones was in New York a wire was received from Charles Chaplin at the First National Exhibitors' Circuit headquarters, stating that he would wire the title of his first comedy for that organization within a week; also that he expected to complete the picture within the customary six weeks. This will give the National Exhibitors' Circuit its first Chaplin release about March 1.

Arthur Schoenstadt, of Schoenstadt & Sons, this city, owners of a circuit of picture theaters here, is now in New York, where he will spend two weeks. Mr. Schoenstadt is making the trip for the purpose of studying conditions in the East regarding both service and patronage. During his stay he will be on the look-out for any new pictures appropriate for the opening of the Atlantic, the new Schoenstadt picture theater at 26th street and Crawford avenue, this city, which will be opened soon. This theater will seat 2,000 persons. Before leaving for New York Mr. Schoenstadt filed application for service in the aviation corps.

C. H. Macgowan, assistant to Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, spent several days in Chicago last week conferring with the managers of various Universal exchanges. The express purpose of his visit was to arrange the amalgamation of the Universal-Jewel-Bluebird exchanges. Joe Brandt, general sales manager for Universal, also visited Chicago last week. He is now making a tour of Universal exchanges throughout the country, during which he will install new sales systems. Mr. Brandt left this city for Indianapolis Saturday night, January 19.

Film men who have headquarters in the Consumers' Building were obliged to work without heat in that big edifice all day Monday, January 21. Lights, however, were permitted for that day, but were prohibited on the following Tuesday. I understand that in no other building were such restrictive measures enforced. It was given out at first that the Consumers' Building would be closed altogether on Monday, which would have wrought tremendous havoc with the distribution of films in this city and in the surrounding country.

The first showing of "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," Mary MacLane's starring picture vehicle, by Essanay, was given at Orchestra Hall Thursday evening, January 24, under the auspices of the Lake Shore Drive surgical dressings unit, to which organization Essanay donated the picture for the occasion. Prices of 25, 50, 75 cents and $1 were charged.

The Wholesome Films Corporation, this city, has announced the removal of its offices on Saturday, January 19, from 207 South Wabash avenue to 17 North Wabash avenue, fourth floor, where larger quarters have been secured to accommodate an increased working force. According to M. J. Weisfeldt, president, the company has a plan under way to open a branch office in the near future in New York City. Mr. Weisfeldt will leave Chicago for New York Saturday, January 26, and will remain there the week of January 28.

Private presentation of several of "The Son of Democracy" pictures (Famous Players-Lasky Corporation) was given at the Ziegfeld theater Thursday morning, January 24. The announcement of this private showing was written in mimeograph, in order to meet fuel conservation, as the office of the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., explains.

Mary Miles Minter henceforth will have two directors in the vehicles provided for her by the American. Edward Sloman will collaborate with Henry King, who in the past has been directing the Minter pictures. Miss Minter's new feature, "Extra! Extra!" the story of which was written by Will Richey, is now being completed under the new arrangement. Mr. Sloman, who directed the series of twelve pictures starring William Russell for the American last year, has just signed a new contract with that company. While William Russell is deciding what he will do during the coming season, Mr. Sloman will collaborate with Henry King in completing the American plans for exploiting Miss Minter in the very best stories procurable.

Miss Colleen Moore was signed by the Selig Polyscope Company recently and will work under the direction of Colin Campbell in the Los Angeles studio. Miss Moore worked for an extended period under the direction of D. W. Griffith and is noted for her realistic depiction of child roles. A number of stories specially suited to her ability, in which she will be starred, are now being selected by Selig. I have seen Miss Moore's wonderful work in the title role of "Little Orphant Annie," and have no doubt that she will become a great, popular favorite in this character.

Harry Beaumont, Selig director in Chicago, started work on a picture Monday, January 28, the title of which will be announced later. The story from which the photoplay has been adapted appeared recently in a prominent magazine. Hazel Daly will play the leading woman's role.

"The German Curse of Russia" (Pathe) is turning them away at every presentation at the Pastime theater, 69 West Madison street, this city. The admission is 20 cents. As the Pastime seats only 440 people, the extraordinary popularity of this photoplay is likely to continue away into the future. The run is indefinite.

Miss Margaret Ryan, who has presided at the telephone switchboard in the general offices of the Selig Polyscope Company, this city, for nine years past, resigned the position January 26, to take a business college course. Margaret has been such a pleasing landmark near the entrance of the Selig offices for so long a period that she will be sadly missed by many thousands of people in the trade, throughout this country and the world at large. Politeness itself, and always anxious to render efficient service, Miss Margaret will be long remembered by a host of visitors, who will pleasantly conjure back her winning smile and manner. I, for one, thank her sincerely for the valuable assistance she has so often rendered in work connected with the Selig firm.

The change made by the government in permitting exhibitors to run Mondays and to close Tuesdays for the ten-day period was very beneficial to the trade in this city. Many exhibitors assert that the business done on Monday was equal to the usual business done on the first three days of the week in the past.

Exhibitors Change Booking Conditions

Majority of Local Exhibitors Fail to Renew Program Contracts in Favor of Open Market.

THE beginning of the new year has brought quite a shake-up in the ranks of the local exhibitors, most of whose program contracts expired at that time. It is worthy of noting that the majority of the Los Angeles exhibitors are not renewing their contracts with the exchanges that have supplied them in the past, they having apparently concluded that booking in the open market will prove more profitable to themselves and their patrons through more diversified entertainment.

For instance, Manager Fred Miller, of Miller's theater, is this week showing "Uneasy Money," the Essanay production; all of the Clune theaters are following their old policy of picking the best from the various programs; Manager Tally is naturally going to show all of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit's features throughout the year, as he is a member of that organization; the Superba theater, in which Carl Laemmle is a large stockholder, is one of the few of the first-run houses that will stick to the output of one organization, in this case the Universal; the Garrick, which is leased by Harry Caulfield, is specializing on Fatty Arbuckle comedies and westerns, taking the pick of the latter from the various programs.

Manager Charles Gates, of the Symphony theater, who has been showing Metro films for the last year, is now showing for the second week the states right feature, "Who's Your Neighbor?" by Willard Mack; J. A. Quinn, of Quinn's Rialto theater, is alternating Goldwyns every other week with open market bookings; the new Kinema theater, under the management of the Kehrleins, is at present featuring the Artcraft productions, and it is understood that Sid Grauman's new theater will also use the service of that same organization; Manager Edward Holland, of the Sennett theater, is featuring the Mack Sennett comedies, with five-reel productions of both independent and program producers.

This new alignment of booking conditions has yet to show any marked difference, either for the improvement or falling off of the patronage of the houses which have made the change. The change is no doubt caused by the desire on the part of the managers to feature the theater more prominently than the producing organization to the end that when a manager announces that he can personally guarantee a production to be one worth seeing that this guarantee announcement on the part of his theater will be strong enough to increase the box office receipts for the week in which the picture is shown.

Plan Modified Censorship for Los Angeles.

That no film censor will be appointed at this time under the recently adopted ordinance has been indicated at the city hall. This indication followed a conference between Mayor Woodman and a number of leading film producers, exhibitors and exchanges.

Mayor Woodman declared he had no intention of allowing the film industry to be harassed by undue censorship, but that he did intend that the films shown in Los Angeles shall be decent and clean and moral. He said City Prosecutor Widney would consider the matter of a compromise with the film people and at another conference later on an amicable arrangement may be reached by which the present ordinance may be repealed and a modification ordinance adopted in its stead.

The film representatives indicated their willingness to approve an ordinance which would shoulder the onus of scrutinizing the films upon the city prosecutor's office and to abide by the decision of that office in case an objectionable film were barred from exhibition. The present ordinance provides for a film commissioner-censor at $175 a month, and would place a license tax of 25 cents a reel upon each film for examination by the censor. This rule, the film men said, would virtually place an annual tax of $16,000 upon the film industry needlessly.

The film men at the conference with the mayor were led by Frank A. Garbutt, Frank A. McDonald, J. A. Quinn, T. L. Tally and R. H. Reynolds.

Fairbanks Stages Benefit Rodeo.

Douglas Fairbanks appeared in Los Angeles recently before the largest audience of his career. The event was a rodeo for the benefit of the Red Cross, which was conceived by himself and put over with the aid of many local film notables.

Reminiscent of the early sixties were the various stunts which ranged from a stage coach hold-up to the shooting of glass balls by Douglas Fairbanks. Bands from the Submarine Base, the Naval Reserve and the California Coast Artillery alternately played popular airs, which added greatly to the afternoon enjoyment.

Twenty thousand people were attracted to the park, and the financial returns, which were over $15,000, gave ample reward for the hard work of Fairbanks, Dustin Farnum, Winifred Kingston, Art Acord and the other participants in the many thrilling stunts enacted in the arena.

The only thing tending to mar the enjoyment of the day were the rumors, circulated no doubt by those of pro-German inclinations, to the effect that all of the money taken in would not be turned over to the Red Cross. This we wish to refute. Every cent of the money went to the coffers of the charity. Mr. Fairbanks personally paid every penny of the expense connected with the giving of the rodeo, which amounted to three or four thousand dollars.

The day will go down in the annals of Los Angeles film history as the greatest evidence of the patriotism of the people who make their living through the art of make-believe.

Date of Release of "Super Strategy" Announced.

The date of release of the ten-reel feature film, "Super Strategy," which has covered a production period of six months, is now announced for April 7. The first prints will be shipped from the Hollywood Studios January 26 to the New York offices of the Mena Film Company, and the advertising campaign will be begun February 15, under the direction of Robert Hollister. No announcement has been made as yet by the Mena Company as to the method of distribution.

"Super Strategy" will be awaited with much expectation by the trade, as this company in its initial feature production has spared no expense on a story which promises much in the telling. Howard Gaye directed the piece, and every player in it has been chosen by the Mena Company with the utmost care as to suitability of type. Among the elaborate sets are reproductions of streets of Jerusalem, towns of the Holy Land, Nero's palace, well-known historic places in Rome and numerous other sets. The entire film is to be colored to blend with the scenes. Fifty 30 by 40 hand-colored scenes of the play will be distributed with each print, as well as enlarged portraits of the characters of the picture. A musical score, written by the best known composers for the story, will add much to the effect of its screen interpretation.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Douglas McLean, formerly with the Morosco Stock Company of Los Angeles, will be leading man for Dorothy Gish in a new war drama now being rehearsed at the D. W. Griffith studios. George Fawcett, character actor, will also be in Miss Gish's support. The drama will be under the direction of Chester Withey, who has again joined his former chief's organization. Mr. Withey will be assisted by William Keefe.

S. E. V. Taylor, who has been successfully associated with motion pictures for many years as scenario writer and as an individual producer with a studio in Brooklyn, is writing scenarios for D. W. Griffith. Because of nervous trouble, Mr. Taylor was forced to withdraw from motion picture activity for several months, and is still unable to assume arduous duties.

Tom Mix is shortly to begin production on a new feature of Western life at the Fox Western studios. The director for this play has not as yet been decided upon by the executive heads of the local studio.

"A Rough Diamond," in which Paddy McQuire, headed by a big cast of well-known funmakers, is having its finishing touches adjusted by Director Harry Edwards. Many of the important scenes were "shot" at one of the largest and most exclusive jewelry shops of the West.

Henry Lehrman, the maker of the Sunshine Comedies for the William Fox program, has completed his play that deals with high life in the midst of a fashionable hotel that part of the time is suffering from submerging. Lehrman directed this production and regards it as the best work that he has ever turned out.

Herman Raymaker, Triangle-Keystone director, is one of the many at the Culver City studio who is expecting to leave on a moment's notice for American Lake and the "olive drab." Raymaker has received his classification card from his exemption board and his mark is A-1. Dick Donaldson, assistant to Director Jack Conway, is another who has received a similar classification.

Word has been received by Triangle Director Jack Dillon from Olive Thomas that her mother has just undergone a critical operation at her home in Pittsburgh. Miss Thomas is expected to return to the Triangle studios as soon as her mother's condition will permit.

Fay Tincher has completed her second two-reel comedy, and it is conceded to be a "knockout." Al Santell directed and Robert Phela cranked some fine photography. Director Santell, Miss Fay and Tom Gibson, the scenario man, are now at work preparing the third story.

Mrs. William V. Mong, wife of the well-known Triangle character actor, has been removed from a Los Angeles hospital to her home at 1600 Golden Gate avenue, Hollywood, after undergoing a serious operation. Mong reports that his wife's condition is greatly improved.

"The coal famine in the East will bring hundreds more of motion picture folk to California," said Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, who returned to Los Angeles from New York recently. "Our Fort Lee studios have been closed because of shortage of coal, and even in New York we are having difficulties keeping up our work. Within the next few weeks Wallace Reid, Elsie Ferguson and Billie Burke will all come to Los Angeles."

J. Grubb Alexander and Frey Myton, of the Paralta staff of authors, are now engaged with the film version of Thomas Dixon's book, "The One Woman." This picture will be produced at the Paralta studios by the Mastercraft Company, under the new arrangement between the two film corporations for the use of the big Paralta plant. The Paralta play, upon which Miss Bessie Barriscale is now engaged, "The Wave," working title, was written by Messrs. Myton and Alexander, and a big Selexart feature recently shipped East was also the product of their pens. It was "Aristocracy."

Charles Clary has reported for duty at the Fox studios following recovery from a long siege of pneumonia. Aside from losing thirty pounds, the actor suffered no ill effects.

W. A. S. Douglas, president and general manager of the Diando Film Company, which is making Marie Osborne pictures, has departed for New York.

Louise Lovely, the original Bluebird star, has terminated her two years' contract with Universal, and will leave town for a few weeks' much needed rest before making any new affiliation.

W. H. Clune has completed arrangements with the New York office of William Fox for the exhibition, beginning January 28, of the sumptous screen production, "Cleopatra," starring Theda Bara.

The trial of Robert Goldstein, charged with violation of the Espionage Act in the production of the moving picture entitled "The Spirit of '76," will be called before Judge Bledsoe during the week of March 12.

Announcement has been made that Fred Niblo, a star of the legitimate stage, has become engaged to Enid Bennett, one of the Thomas H. Ince galaxy of stars. The date for the wedding has not as yet been set.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are filming a one-reel comedy, "Boosting Business," at Universal City. "The boys" are playing the leading roles themselves, with Edith Roberts as their principal support.

Buck Massie, celebrated international showman, has settled down for a while in Los Angeles, this time as manager of Clune's Auditorium theater, which has the largest seating capacity of any of the show houses in the city. Mr. Massie has been manager of the London Olympia theater, Klaw & Erlanger house in New Orleans, and many of the leading theaters throughout the United States. He has also won considerable renown as a circus general representative, in which work he was engaged before entering the motion picture field.

With Dorothy Phillips in the title role, Director Allen J. Holubar has started work on a five-reel production which he is filming under the working title of "The Mortgaged Wife." Holubar prepared the screen version from the story written by Frank H. Clark. Miss Phillips' supporting cast includes William Stowell, who plays opposite; Edwin August, Al Roscoe and Sam De Grasse.

Doris Lee, who played opposite Charles Ray in Thomas H. Ince's productions of "His Mother's Boy" and "The Hired Man," is once more leading woman with Ray.

Franklyn Farnum is playing the featured role in "The Molly-Coddle," a five-reel Bluebird comedy, being produced by Director Lynn F. Reynolds. Juanita Hansen is playing opposite Farnum, who also is supported by Lon Chaney, Fred Montague, Katherine Griffith and Edward Cecil. John McDermott wrote the story, the scenario of which was prepared by Eugene B. Lewis and Waldemar Young.

In Dorothy Dalton's newest Ince screen product, "Tyrant Fear," now being made for Paramount, Thurston Hall and William Conklin have the chief supporting roles. The story is by R. Cecil Smith.

Mae Murray is the featured player in "Forgive Me," a five-reel Bluebird drama, which is under production by Director Robert Leonard, who wrote the story. Miss Murray is supported by Arthur Shirley, Philo McCollough, Claire DuBrey, Helen Wright and George Chesebro.

For the first time since he commenced to make motion pictures, Thomas H. Ince will send one of his stars, Enid Bennett, to New York, to make several photoplays for Paramount that call for metropolitan scenes of the sort that cannot easily be duplicated with the scenery that ordinarily is available at a moving picture studio. Miss Bennett and company will have the benefit of Jerome Storm's direction in Gotham, and it is likely Mr. Ince will make a transcontinental journey to supervise some of the scenes.

Director Stuart Paton is rapidly progressing with the filming of Blair Hall's magazine story, "The Other Thing," which he is producing at the Bluebird studios with Carmel Myers in the featured role. Harvey Gates prepared the screen version.

The new Florence theater, soon to be opened in Pasadena under the management of D. B. Schumann, is installing a two-manual and piano-manual pipe organ built by the Seeburg-Smith factories at Chicago. This firm is practically a newcomer on the coast and especially in the South, although it is very well known in the East and throughout the Middle West. C. R. Dibble Company of Los Angeles made the sale, and is superintending the construction.

Paramount and Artcraft Absorbed

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Takes Over Full Ownership of Two Distributing Organizations.

THE Paramount Pictures Corporation and the Artcraft Pictures Corporation are no longer legally in existence. The two big distributing organizations have been taken over by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Hereafter the familiar name of Paramount and of its younger brother Artcraft will be used solely to indicate a brand of pictures, not the name of a business organization. The pictures that heretofore have been Paramount subjects will continue to be Paramount; and the same rule will apply to Artcraft.

Up to within a few days the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has controlled 51 per cent. of Paramount and Artcraft exchanges. Now it owns 100 per cent. as the result of the merger or absorption. The change in control involves no change in the management of the Famous Players-Lasky. Adolph Zukor continues as president, Jesse L. Lasky as vice-president, Arthur S. Friend as treasurer, Elek J. Ludvigh as secretary, and Cecil B. De Mille as director general.

The former Paramount and Artcraft executives will continue to be associated with Mr. Zukor in the management of the Famous Players-Lasky. It is assumed their ability and experience will be employed in the distributing end of the business as in the past.

Metro Men Form Screen Classics, Inc.

Together with Newcomers They Are Preparing to Go After Large Business.

Verifying its announcement that "Metro intends to go after the leadership of the motion picture field on the merit of its productions," the Metro group has organized and within the week will incorporate a new company, to be known as Screen Classics, Inc., which will acquire, produce and present big feature productions which will be distributed through the Metro Pictures Corporation.

Screen Classics, Inc., will be composed of some of the men prominently identified with the present Metro organization, together with others who have associated with them for the larger activities of the new company. The stock of Screen Classics, Inc., will not be offered to the public.

The concern will handle all of the big special productions up to the point of distribution, and will control all of the super-pictures which Metro already has demonstrated its ability to produce. The big run picture requires time and care in manufacture and a hand-picked organization which will devote its exclusive attention to these greater works.

When Signals Were Not Signals

What a Puzzled Motorist Discovered When He Drove Alongside the Car of Levy and Goldberg.

THE professional humorist on a Louisville newspaper recently poked a bit of fun at Fred Levy and Lee Goldberg, of the Big Features Rights Corporation, through the columns of his journal. Friends of the two men have been busy sending them copies of the clipping, accompanied by a remark or two. This was the story:

"A motorist following a big car yesterday was dazed by the many conflicting traffic signals given by its occupants. First a hand would point west, apparently signaling the man behind to look out for a turn to the right, and then a hand would shoot out to the east, warning the car at the rear of a turn to the left. When hands were pointed in all directions at once the driver of the rear car decided to take a chance, speed up and see what was wrong in the lead car. Nothing was wrong. Fred Levy and Lee Goldberg were talking over the affairs of the Big Features Rights Corporation."

The story was illustrated, and has been the subject of a lot of good-natured banter.

Metro Engages Art Supervisor

O'Kane Conwell Will Try to Combine the Harmonious and the Practical in All Settings.

METRO pictures will henceforth strive to lead in correct stage settings, if the plans and ideals of Maxwell Karger, supervisor and general manager of the Metro studio, 3 West Sixty-first street, are realized. Mr. Karger has engaged as art supervisor O'Kane Conwell, a pupil of MacMonnies, and in her early girlhood also a pupil of James McNeil Whistler. Mrs. Conwell will cooperate with E. J. Shulter, technical director, and Ray Smallwood, chief of the camera and photographic departments. This working arrangement has already been in effect for some time.

Harmony and the practical will be combined in Metro settings. Before the camera is brought to the scene every detail will be correct in regard to the period, place and purse of the supposed owner of the house in the screen story being photographed. The first consideration will be a "livable" room. Mrs. Conwell's own experience in interior decoration is sufficient guarantee of the correctness of details. Another item insisted upon will be that the color harmonies be correct and beautiful, even though the colors themselves cannot be caught by the camera. "People have too long depended on the neutrality of the camera to pull together violent effects," says Mrs. Conwell. "It wasn't fair, and it never really deceived anybody. A room that is correct and beautiful will look correct and beautiful. If it is the opposite—it will look the opposite. Beauty is practical."

Mrs. Conwell believes it is possible to display just as much taste in the furnishing of the home of a family of moderate means as in one of great wealth. "Line and color can be had for a song," says this expert. "I foresee that Metro pictures will be of immense help in developing the taste of the nation."

BE CAREFUL HOW YOU USE THE FLAG.

We are in receipt of a letter from an exhibitor, setting forth a complaint that he was prohibited by the postmaster of his city from using the American flag with the title of a picture on it: "For the Freedom of the World." This exhibitor has requested the World to give him and other exhibitors in his territory some enlightenment on the subject. In response we will state that this exhibitor, or any others who use the American flag as he did, is guilty of a violation f the law. The American flag must not be used with any form of advertisement on it; in fact, any lettering or printed matter of any kind whatever. This applies to any kind of picture or slide showing the American flag. It cannot be used as a cover for a table used for commercial or any other purposes. If any exhibitor wishes to use the American flag in the lobby or in his theater for decorative or patriotic reason without any advertisement on it or covering it he is at liberty to do so. The American flag must be used with the same respect and consideration we would give any sacred or religious emblem.

BARTHELL HEADS NEW PENNSYLVANIA CIRCUIT.

At a meeting of Western Pennsylvania exhibitors Sunday, January 19, in Pittsburgh, about fifty were present, a number of out-of-town men being represented by proxy. The first temporary organization for an exhibitors' circuit was formed.

The organization will be known as the Tri-State Exhibitors' Circuit and will work in conjunction with other circuits, taking in exhibitors of Western Pennsylvania, Eastern Ohio and West Virginia.

This circuit is not affiliated with any organization; therefore all bona fide exhibitors may become members. Much enthusiasm is being displayed and it is realized that permanent good can and will be accomplished for its members.

A. J. Barthell, former president of the Exhibitors' League of Western Pennsylvania, is busily engaged arranging details and will present his final report at the next meeting. Exhibitors in this territory who are interested in the circuit should make application to Mr. Barthell, at 804 Penn avenue, third floor, Pittsburgh.

Louis R. Greenfield Happy, Anyway

Was About to Be Married When a Terrible Experience Came on Him—Wedding Celebrated Three Days Later.

LOUIS R. GREENFIELD, of the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit, which conducts the New Mission, New Fillmore and Progress theaters at San Francisco, and one of the most popular exhibitors in the Pacific Coast Metropolis, was married at the Fairmont hotel on January 17 to Miss Edna Greenberg, of that city, the ceremony being performed by Rabbi Martin A. Meyer. Among the film folks present were Mr. and Mrs. William J. Citron, of Fox Film; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Allen and Herman Wobber, of Progressive; Mr. and Mrs. Louis Reichert, of Metro, and Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Cohen, of the George Kleine system.

Louis R. Greenfield.

On the evening of January 14, Mr. Greenfield was the center of a program of entertainment of which he had no previous knowledge, the arrangements for the event having been carried on in secret by a committee consisting of William Jennings Citron, Louis Reichert, J. W. Allen and Meyer J. Cohen. The enthusiasm shown at this entertainment illustrated in a fitting manner the popularity of "Looey," as Mr. Greenfield is affectionately known, as well as the new spirit which prevails in local film circles.

Enticed downtown by an urgent call from the Paramount office, "Looey" was seized by two burly policemen, handcuffed and rushed into Photoplayer hall, where he found a court already in session. J. W. Allen, of Paramount, occupied the chair as presiding judge, while E. O. Child, of Pathe, and Newton Levi, of Mutual, were associate judges, all attired in robe and wig. Louis Reichert and Fred Voigt, the heavyweights in the business, both of Metro, were the bailiffs, while Edward Baron, of the American Photoplayer, was the court clerk. E. Bruce Johnson, of the Turner & Dahnken circuit, was the prosecuting attorney, while Mr. Hicks, manager of the Select exchange, held down the thankless job of attorney for the defense. Both were dressed in the fashion that prevailed when Daniel Webster made legal history.

Charged with Inconsiderate Booking.

The complaint against the prisoner was sworn to by Meyer J. Cohen, and indicated that Rouis Rassmussen Greenfield had attempted to book a wife without the formality of consulting his associates in the film business. The witnesses included some of the leading men in the exchange and theatrical field, and some of the evidence was of a most astounding nature, with ramifications that reached into producing and distributing channels, and even into Russia.

Prosecutor Johnson dwelt upon the enormity of the crime, while Attorney Hicks made an impassioned plea for mercy, painting the film trust in blackest colors and asserting that not being content with foisting inferior pictures upon the prisoner and dictating the prices he should charge for admission at his house, it was seeking to interfere with his choice of a wife. His eloquence apparently had the case won and the prisoner was about to be released when a mysterious veiled female witness appeared and told of having been courted in Russia by the defendant, producing photographic evidence in the form of slides which was introduced in court. Mr. Hicks then arose, threw up the sponge, and a verdict was rendered that Mr. Greenfield be "found guilty and sentenced to proceed with the entire party to Tait's cafe to purchase a dinner to be eaten at his sole and undivided expense."

The party then adjourned to the cafe, where a splendid repast was enjoyed, the menu containing such mysterious delicacies as a serial with trimmings; a strong comedy, which was none other than cream of onion soup; a deep sea drama, with sparkling finish, the latter being a nectar for which California is famous; Italian battle film, in which spaghetti played a prominent part; a four-part mystery, and a cold climax. Meyer J. Cohen was master of ceremonies and introduced the various speakers, announced the numerous vaudeville acts, and, on behalf of the film men, presented Mr. Greenfield and his bride-to-be with a beautiful silver service.

Those who attended the gathering were William Jennings Citron, Ben Simpson, Louis Reichert, E. J. Jensen, Joseph Levin, A. J. Werner, Edward Baron, A. L. Abrams, M. J. Cohen, Newton Levi, H. H. Hicks, R. B. Quive, E. O. Child, Howard Sheehan, Louis Lurie, G. C. Blumenthal, Fred Voigt, Fred Wescher, C. I. Luntz, E. H. Watson, F. Wolson, J. W. Allen, Herman Wobber, Harry Schmidt, C. H. Leathurby, E. B. Johnson, H. W. Korper, Marion H. Kohn, R. F. Cohen, Robert Abraham, Frank Hefferman, J. H. Goldberg, H. J. Gosliner, L. Hyman, I. Oppenheimer, Thomas Nunan, T. A. Church, Curren D. Swint, A. Goldberg, Al Williams, T. F. McCullough, Sam Lovrich, W. E. Knotts, Samuel Levin, James Beatty, E. C. Gainsborg, Floyd St. John, E. M. Asher, Joseph Huff, Bert Levey, A. F. Herman, J. A. Partington, Sam Rosencrantz, Harold I. Wilson, Glenn Hurst and W. S. Webster.

Banquet to Louis R. Greenfield, January 14, 1918.

Tom Moore, Washington's Energetic Exhibitor

Organizer of Moore's Theater Corporation and Builder of Many Palatial Picture Theaters in the Nation's Capital City.

FOR many years the name of Tom Moore has been prominent in motion picture affairs in Washington, D. C. He began as an exchange manager and was an example of his kind. Then he took to managing picture theaters, and the record of his success has been one of the remarkable achievements of this remarkable business. But having won a measure of success that would have satisfied most men, Moore was not satisfied to stand still. Instead he keeps going right along piling one success on top of the other until he has become a national figure and a force to be reckoned with.

Tom Moore.

First, Mr. Moore's activities embrace an immediate extension of his string of theaters. Moore's Theater Corporation a $2,000,000 organization, of which Tom Moore is president and director general, already operates the Strand, Garden and Plaza Theaters, the first two constituting the largest first-run, open booking opportunity in the Capital.

In addition to these houses there is in course of construction the new Rialto Theater, which is being rushed to completion under a contractor's guarantee of occupancy in April, with a heavy penalty clause in event of failure to finish the imposing structure by that time.

This month ground will be broken for a new F Street house, giving the Moore Corporation at least four first-run theaters in the heart of the business section of the city.

Allied with this chain of houses is the Moore Circuit, controlling neighborhood picture theaters in every desirable section of the Capital City. It will at once be perceived that the Moore houses offer the widest outlet for first-run pictures in the city of Washington.

Reverting briefly to the Rialto Theater, it is worthy of note that this house is to be one of the finest in the United States. The seating capacity will be considerably over 3,000, with 2,200 unobstructed, clear-view seats on the first floor. The facade of the theater will be of marble-trimmed white stone; the foyer of marble with paneled side walls of royal blue silk velour—the predominant tone of the color scheme carried throughout the picture palace. Between the foyer and the main auditorium will be a foyer ballroom in marble and silk with doors going into the theater proper on two sides.

In addition to super-pictures, the Rialto will house an orchestra of twenty-seven solo artists and one of the largest pipe organs ever installed.

Upon one point Mr. Moore is adamant—the price of admission to this palatial amusement place at top scale will not be permitted to exceed twenty-five cents. It is his view that the time has come for the public, the real basis of the picture industry, to receive some dividend on the amount it has spent in support of films during the last dozen years.

The proposed F street house will, if anything, surpass—although the possibility of such a thing seem incredible—the Rialto in the high degree of artistic quality which it will reveal. The new Moore theaters will mark a new era in theater construction and beautification—not by the profligate use of pigments and tinsel, but by genuinely artistic realization of the decorative possibilities of marble, velvet and silk, employed always with an eye to richness of effect and dignity.

When all of the Moore theaters are in operation, a fixed policy of one change a week at the Rialto, two at the F street house, two at the Strand and three at the Garden will be rigidly adhered to, thus affording a weekly market for eight first-run features of the first rank. As previously indicated, there will follow then the sixteen houses comprising the Moore Circuit, but not under Moore's Theaters Corporation ownership.

Considerable trepidation was felt and more or less freely expressed by film manufacturers upon the organization of the Moore Circuit, the fear seeming to prevail that the centralization of booking power was aimed to destroy the manufacturer's profits and slash prices for film rental to a starvation level. Nothing could be more remote from the truth.

The policy inaugurated by Tom Moore in the conduct of the circuit is the broadest and fairest ever put in operation in the history of the picture industry. It was devised to eliminate warfare and cutthroat policies, not to engender them.

The members of the Moore Circuit are subjected to no percentage charge or commission of any kind by the central booking office—neither are they put in the position of having to tolerate piratical price-fixing by unscrupulous film marketers whose principal aim in some instances seems to be to charge "all the traffic can bear," plus about 25% for luck. There is no luck in that system—a fact that is becoming apparent to the keen-minded and foresighted in the industry.

The Moore Circuit merely enters the market as a unit and insists upon the consideration that any wholesale operator in any commercial line has a right to expect. Any manufacturer—and, in justice, they have been few—who cannot deal equitably with all of the members of the circuit finds himself deprived of the privilege of dealing questionably with any individual member. Furthermore, no individual member is asked to book all of the features offered, or any of them if he prefers not. Full initiative is left to the member. The circuit's good offices, succinctly, are merely bent toward the accomplishment of the greatest good for the greatest number.

Mr. Moore does not seek profit in the circuit idea. He graduated from the exchange branch of the film industry years ago and could not now be cajoled into resuming operations along that line, but he is, nevertheless, a bad boy for any man, or group of men, to practice chicanery upon.

His decisions are reached quickly, are usually correct and are invariably followed by prompt and vigorous action. Unmolested, he is a prince of good fellows. He drives handsome motor cars, shoots an unbeatable game of pool, swings a wicked club in golf, dances like Vernon Castle and retains the rich voice and inordinate fondness for music that placed him among the stage's foremost vocalists a decade ago. Above all, he is a home man, devoted to a charming wife.

And he knows films, film values and public taste better than any other man in Washington—in addition to which, he packs a punch in either hand and one in his fountain pen.

LINCOLN JOINS CABANNE.

E. K. Lincoln left New York for Hollywood, Cal., January 25, where he will be featured in a timely seven-reel production under the direction of W. Christy Cabanne. This film feature will introduce Mr. Cabanne as author and producer as well as director. Since appearing as star in the Mutual-Jimmy Dale serial, "The Grey Seal," Mr. Lincoln has been starred in "The Freedom of the World," produced by Ira M. Lowry and released by Goldwyn. He has also just completed a regular Goldwyn feature, in which he played opposite Mae Marsh in "The Beloved Traitor."

PEGGY HYLAND BEGINS WORK FOR FOX.

Peggy Hyland is in New Orleans, where she has begun work on her first picture for William Fox. O. A. C. Lund will direct.

Lasky Chiefs Working on Color Process

Messrs. De Mille and Wyckoff Say Rapid Strides Have Been Made in Working Out Inventions.

ALTHOUGH no disclosures are made as to the processes which are in use to employ colors in film productions, Cecil B. De Mille, director-general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Alvin Wyckoff, director of photography, are willing to admit that rapid strides have been accomplished in the employment of their new inventions, examples of the use of which are to be seen in current De Mille-Artcraft productions. Further use of the newly invented color process is to be made, according to a statement by Mr. De Mille.

As explained by Mr. De Mille and Mr. Wyckoff, who have been working together for several years to perfect the invention, this process does not give glaring and noticeable colors to the films, but softens and subdues the coloring of scenes to an almost pastelle effect. The process, by the way, noticed particularly in certain scenes in "The Woman God Forgot" and "The Devil Stone," by no means necessitates hand coloring of certain scenes in which colors are used.

The flames surrounding Geraldine Farrar in "Joan the Woman," the light of the sacrificial altars in the Aztec spectacle, the weird coloring of the remarkable and sinister jewel which gives the title to "The Devil Stone"—these are all accomplished by the new invention.

"We have been working slowly and cautiously on this process for the past two years," said Mr. De Mille, "and have studied color photography in all its branches. We have come to the conclusion that color photography, in the sense of absolutely faithful reproduction of natural colors, or any method of coloring where the tints used are of the glaring variety, can never be used universally in motion pictures, for the eye of the spectator would be put to too great a strain, and the variety of the colors would distract the attention from the story values. It would be as though a person looked out of a car window at a highly colored panorama of action and scenery during a two or three hour journey. One cannot look out over fields of brightly colored flowers continuously for even an hour without terrific eye strain.

"Our invention makes use of color at intervals throughout a picture, and we have been experimenting with this idea in mind. The moment the spectator says, 'Oh, look how green the grass is' or 'How blue the sea,' the value of the color is gone; it has proved too greatly distracting. The color effects we get and those we are working for resemble somewhat the shades and color tones used in Du Lac's famous illustrations. These blend and harmonize, but are not too obvious."

Mr. De Mille and Mr. Wyckoff state that they expect to make greater and greater use of the invention, according to the success of their experiments, and Mr. De Mille even admits that in the near future he may make a picture drama colored throughout by the process. The new De Mille-Artcraft special, "The Whispering Chorus," will offer several new departures along these lines, it is announced.

Tucker to be Goldwyn's Supervising Chief

Successful Director Will Have Charge of All of Company's Productions in Future.

GEORGE LOANE TUCKER, one of the ablest directors and producers in the motion picture industry, has become managing director of production for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and will have oversight and supervision of all the company's releases.

This announcement by Goldwyn will be good news, indeed, to exhibitors everywhere because of their confidence in Mr. Tucker and the success they have had in the past when playing Mr. Tucker's own productions.

From the earliest days of Goldwyn Mr. Tucker has taken a vital interest in the company because he felt then and now that it presented a great opportunity for screen achievement and because he was in entire harmony with the Goldwyn policy.

That Mr. Tucker should step into this important post is of great value to Goldwyn for many reasons, not merely because he is an able and brilliant director, but because he is a great judge of story values for the screen as well as a master of continuity—one of the most difficult and exacting details of the picture art. The assumption of these increased duties by Mr. Tucker fortunately will not win him exemption from personally producing pictures, for he will continue to make a definite number of releases for Goldwyn in its annual scheduled output. But in addition he is to give his careful and patient attention to all other Goldwyn productions, and this will unquestionably greatly increase the Goldwyn average of excellence.

Already Mr. Tucker has produced two popular pictures for Goldwyn—Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," and Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million." His past achievements have equipped him for his present work at the Goldwyn studios. When it is recalled that he produced the widely discussed and big money-maker "Traffic in Souls" before transferring his activities to England for a long period it will be seen that handling difficult subjects is nothing new to this director.

His capital director of Albert Chevalier in "The Middleman" has not been forgotten, nor have his other pictures—"Rupert of Hentzau," "Called Back"—and the W. W. Jacobs stories were all given to the screen by Mr. Tucker, to say nothing of the big patriotic spectacle produced for the British Government, "England Expects." Then came his memorable Hall Caine drama, "The Manx-Man," immediately succeeded by his connection with Goldwyn.

Hamilton Revelle in "Lest We Forget"

HAMILTON REVELLE, who plays opposite Rita Jolivet in Metro's tremendous patriotic spectacle, "Lest We Forget," is one of the most distinguished actors on the stage, being known not only in America, but throughout Europe. To Mr. Revelle was paid the honor of receiving from Chevalier Arturo Ambrosio the offer to star in twenty Ambrosio screen productions, to be made in Turin, Italy. This offer was the result of Mr. Revelle's success in the screen version of "Du Barry," which was made in Europe. The player accepted the Chevalier's offer, and had appeared in four of the proposed productions when war broke out, and he was obliged to return to America. Recently he has appeared with Mary Garden in the picturization of "Thais," and in another picture not yet released. He is soon to return to the speaking stage in an important revival.

Hamilton Revelle.

Mr. Revelle is already well known to Metro patrons, having been starred in "The Price of Malice," "An Enemy to Society" and "The Half Million Bribe." He has long been noted for his success in romantic roles.

Hamilton Revelle was born of English parents at Gibraltar, and he received his education in England. His first appearance on the stage was in an amateur performance of "The Lady of Lyons." Mr. Revelle's role of Harry Winslow in Metro's "Lest We Forget" is said to be one of the most brilliant characterizations he has ever undertaken.

NINETEEN FOX DIRECTORS NOW WORKING.

The recent addition of Edmund Lawrence to the staff of directors of the Fox Film Corporation brings the total number now in the employ of William Fox to nineteen. Two others—Edward J. Le Saint and Oscar A. C. Lund—have recently joined the Fox forces. Mr. Lawrence is directing Virginia Pearson in a new war play; Mr. Le Saint is working on the Pacific Coast, and Mr. Lund at present is in New Orleans taking scenes for Peggy Hyland's first Fox picture.

The others include J. Gordon Edwards, now in California; R. A. Walsh, Frank Lloyd, who has just completed a picture dealing with the divorce problem; Carl Harbaugh, Richard Stanton, C. M. and S. A. Franklin, Harry Millarde, Kenean Buel, Bertram Bracken and Henry Lehrman. Five directors are working under Mr. Lehrman's supervision on Sunshine Comedies. Those on the Pacific Coast, besides Mr. Edwards, are Mr. Lloyd, the Franklins, Mr. Lehrman, Mr. Le Saint and Mr. Bracken.

Associated Theaters Gives Figures

General Manager Hamlin Furnishes Forty-five Reports on Rentals in Four States

WHEN Thomas J. Hamlin, of Minneapolis, secretary and general manager of the Associated Theaters, Inc., of the Northwest, was in New York City recently, he gave a representative of the Moving Picture World some data about the association of which he is the executive, that is more than interesting.

"In the first place," Mr. Hamlin said, "we are trying to bring the association down to a concrete business basis. We have an intimate acquaintance with its managers or owners of the theaters, which now number 620 subscribed members, in the four states: Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, with more coming. In addition to these states we are arranging to embody six other states in the Northwest: Missouri, Iowa, Northern Michigan, Nebraska, Montana and Kansas. To show you how we keep in touch with the theaters and the conditions that govern them, I will let you look at forty-five legally certified reports from different towns in the four states I first mentioned. These reports are confidential and I do not want the names of the towns or managers mentioned. I have no objections to your publishing the character of the reports to show just what information we are receiving; reports that could not be obtained in any other way. At the same time, they show the only way of securing an exact knowledge of facts that will be invaluable to our members and the direct means of bringing the business of the industry down to safe basis as far as it concerns us. As you wrote in the World some time ago, in an article on a similar method of securing the right dope, it is surprising it has not been done before."

In publishing these reports we do not print the cost of every rental, but give the average price of the regular service and the highest price of the special service. In the report on the stars we give the three most popular stars:

In the interview Mr. Hamlin particularly pointed out another section of the reports giving the preference of the theatergoers for the different character of plays they like to see. This is a summary of the preference expressed in the forty-five towns and cities: Costume, 4; society, 35; western, 43; comedy, 44; war, 22; educational, 19; underworld, 10; sex, 8; from successful books, 39; from successful plays, 34.

"I am here in New York negotiating with certain producers and exchangemen to consummate our plans so we can begin to book our releases on January 31 and ship or distribute on February 18," said Mr. Hamlin. "You see if we can purchase our pictures outright, at the right price, we will do so, thereby securing the states' right to supply our members at equitable and more reasonable rentals. Every one of the members of the Associated Theaters is an equal shareholder, and it is to the advantage of all and up to me to act for their best interests, as I am amenable as manager to the will of the directors of the association. Of course you can judge from the size of the houses in the reports that the majority of our members are from the 'seventy per centers' or smaller theaters."

Secretary McAdoo Writes to Exhibitors

Bespeaks the Same Assistance for War Savings as Was Given Liberty Loan.

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and chairman of the Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, formed to co-operate with the Government in its war program, last week returned from Washington after a conference with the federal officials and announced new plans calling for the continued co-operation of exhibitors and the entire industry in the new drive for war funds.

W. G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, in a letter to exhibitors throughout the country, expressed high appreciation of the assistance the motion picture industry has given his department heretofore. The united front that it has presented when calls for voluntary service went forth has been a source of great inspiration to all who are directly charged with the conduct of the war, according to the secretary. In his new appeal to the industry Mr. McAdoo asks the aid of the exhibitor in making the war savings campaign a success.

"Secretary McAdoo has already started a campaign among exhibitors," said Mr. Zukor upon his return from Washington, "in connection with the new War Savings Stamps drive. Three slides, prepared by the Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, to co-operate with the Treasury Department, have been accepted, and are being distributed among exhibitors in all parts of the country.

"Not only is it a patriotic duty of every exhibitor to use these slides as frequently as possible, but the fact that he shows them will tend to further enhance his standing among his patrons, who will appreciate his efforts toward the realization of the goal for which we are fighting."

The activities of the committee from the National Association, now working hand in hand with the Government, has received many laudatory comments in Washington. In the last Liberty Loan drive 70,000 slides were prepared and sent out under the supervision of this committee, as well as 500,000 feet of film of patriotic appeal. The effectiveness of this co-operation in the motion picture theater was soon apparent, as expressed by Secretary McAdoo and other Government officials. The National Association committee to the Government consists of Adolph Zukor, Chairman; W. W. Irwin, J. E. Brulatour, Marcus Loew and George K. Spoor.

The letter which Secretary McAdoo has sent to exhibitors reads as follows:

Dear Sir:—Convinced by the splendid spirit of patriotic co-operation which you showed in the First and Second Liberty Loan campaigns that you are always eager to assist the Government in carrying out its war program, I desire to ask your aid in making the War Savings campaign a success.

Under separate cover three lantern slides prepared by your Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to co-operate with the Treasury Department are being sent you. If you will display these slides as frequently as possible on the screens of your theaters you will perform a distinct service in behalf of your country.

I cannot refrain at this time from expressing my high appreciation of the assistance that the Motion Picture Industry has given the Treasury Department heretofore. The united front that it has presented when calls for voluntary service went forth has been a source of great inspiration to all who are directly charged with the conduct of the war.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of January 27 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Flare-Up Sal," at the Rialto.

DOROTHY DALTON headed the program the week of January 27 at the Rialto in "Flare-Up," Sal," a Paramount picture of early days in California. Mary Lawton declaimed "Verdun" to the accompaniment of martial music, and there was the usual list of orchestral numbers and pictorial novelties.

"Flare-Up, Sal" is a dancer in a mining town saloon, whose fiery temper is her best protection. An outlaw who hears of her fame detains a minister who is on his way to the camp and assumes charge of the church himself. This unusual situation results in the reform of both the outlaw and the girl, but not until there has been excitement enough in the camp to keep it talking for months.

Emanuel List was the soloist.

"Dodging a Million" at the Strand.

At the Strand Theater Mabel Normand made her first appearance as a Goldwyn star in "Dodging a Million," a mystery drama, written by Edgar Selwyn and A. M. Kennedy. The picture is described as a novel play of love, thrills and laughter. It was written especially to fit the artistic capabilities of Mabel Normand. The well balanced cast includes Tom Moore, Armand Cortes, J. Herbert Frank, Shirley Aubert, Rita Dane, Norah Sprague, Joseph Smiley and Bruce Biddle. Billie Rhodes appeared in the comedy, "Their Little Kid." A scenic study in natural colors, showing Bruges, Belgium, before the war; another chapter of Ditmar's "Living Book of Nature," "In the Insect World," and the Strand Topical Review completed the screen part of the entertainment.

Rosa Lind and Anita Tagel and Herbert Waterous were the soloists.

"The Hired Man" at the Rivoli.

Charles Ray, in his new Paramount picture, "The Hired Man," was the feature at the Rivoli. The star was seen as a young farm-hand, with ambitions toward a college education. His only other ambition is to marry his employer's daughter. The series of amusing—and at times pathetic—experiences he undergoes before attaining both goals make up the story. There is a vivid fire scene by way of a thrill and many good bits of comedy at the county fair and the harvest festival in the picture. Doris Lee is the farmer's daughter. Charles French, Gilbert Gordon and others figure in the supporting cast. The photoplay was directed by Victor L. Schertzinger under the direction of Thomas H. Ince. The story is by Julien Josephson.

The bill was balanced by the Rivoli Animated Pictorial, an educational feature and the usual comedy.

Annie David, Helena Merrill and the Rivoli chorus contributed to the musical features.

"Tarzan of the Apes" at the Broadway.

National Film Corporation has taken over the Broadway Theater temporarily for a run of the big feature, "Tarzan of the Apes." Enid Markey and Elmo Lincoln are members of the cast.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street Theater on Monday and Wednesday Henry B. Walthall, in "His Robe of Honor," was the feature. Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday Olga Petrova, in "Daughter of Destiny," headed the picture program.

MUCH PUBLICITY FOR "TARZAN OF THE APES."

What from the preliminary arrangements looks like a most unusual Broadway showing is the premiere of the National Film Corporation's sensational film, "Tarzan of the Apes," which was billed to open at the Broadway Theater Sunday, January 26, at prices ranging from 25 cents to $2.

The most unusual advance campaign noted in New York in a long period was instituted early in the week under Harry Reichenbach's direction.

A huge banner, stretching from the Broadway Theater across to the Continental Hotel, nearly one hundred feet, was flashed Saturday morning, with "Tarzan of the Apes" in thirty-foot letters and easily seen twenty blocks in either direction.

Display advertisements in the large circulation papers, 600,000 throw-aways and house-to-house cards reached the homes in the greater city by Friday, while plaster of paris and papier maché plaques dotted important windows throughout the Longacre district; while eight hundred twenty-four-sheet posters and 20,000 smaller pieces of paper were placed on the billboards and snipe locations one week in advance.

ANITA STEWART'S MARRIAGE REVEALED IN COURT.

The Vitagraph vs. Anita Stewart case for breach of contract was argued before the Supreme Court, New York City, on Wednesday, January 23. The court ordered the attorneys of both sides to file briefs. Decision to be rendered within two weeks.

It was at these proceedings that the recent marriage of Miss Stewart and Rudolph Cameron, which event had not previously been announced, became a matter of record.

ROTHACKER IS RE-ELECTED PRESIDENT.

At the first annual meeting of the board of directors of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, Watterson R. Rothacker was re-elected president, David Beaton, Jr., was elected vice president, H. J. Aldous re-elected secretary and treasurer, J. G. Mammoser elected assistant treasurer and J. G. Hahn re-elected assistant secretary.

Arrow Sounds Clarion Note

W. E. Shallenberger and Robert W. Priest Divulge Energetic Plans for 1918.

EXTENSIVE preparations for future expansion signifying fearless optimism are announced by Arrow Film Corporation for the year 1918.

As reported last week a long term contract has been entered into between them and the Edward Warren Productions, whereby the latter is to produce a certain number of features for distribution through Arrow's State Rights department during the current year. The two Warren productions already completed, "Souls Redeemed" and "Weavers of Life" have been taken over. Only the biggest and most vital subjects are to be considered for future production. A large corps of experts will be employed to assist Mr. Warren in his productions with the aim of creating especial box office attractions.

It was not without a careful survey of possible future prospects that Arrow entered into its agreement with the Warrens for a series of big pictures. After a careful analysis to obtain the consensus of opinion of certain of the acknowledged figures in American industry and finance it was decided that history would repeat itself, and that the film industry in the United States would pass through the same economic crisis here that it did in Europe; and that the people far sighted enough to plan ahead and be ready to take advantage of the opportunity when it arrives will be the people to prosper. With this idea uppermost in mind plans covering the production a whole year in advance have been perfected, and with the already formidable list of big state rights features, including W. H. Clune's "The Eyes of the World" and "Ramona," Warren's two productions, "Souls Redeemed" and "Weavers of Life," and Mayfair's splendid production of "Persuasive Peggy," starring Peggy Hyland, as well as a long and interesting list of productions from abroad, Arrow purposes waging an intensive campaign in behalf of independent distributors.

SPECIAL STUNTS FOR "TARZAN."

When "Tarzan of the Apes" opened at the Broadway theater last Sunday, January 27, Harry Reichenbach, who is handling the publicity direction for the spectacle that William Parsons, head of the National Film Corporation of America, brought with him from the Hollywood studios, had some notable stunts in operation. It was hard to say which of the innovations attracted the most comment. For one thing there is a 100x60 foot banner stretched across Broadway from the theater to the Continental Hotel bearing the words, "Now Playing—Tarzan of the Apes—Broadway Theater—Twice Daily." This is only the second time in the history of modern New York that a banner has spanned Broadway, according to the National publicity director, for any other than a national or political purpose; he having also pulled the stroke the first time when "La Vie de la Boheme" was being presented at the New York theater. The banner for the Brady production was even larger, as the span was greater—120x40. Then, too, 500 pots of red-fire, each burning twenty minutes, sent a glare far into the skies. The real novelty, however, was a man sized ape that was dressed the part and served as ticket-taker. Eight apes darted around in cages in the lobby, and there were also many monks capering around in the jungle scenery that framed the picture on the stage.

THUS STATES M. H. HOFFMAN.

"The entire Foursquare organization, from George Backer and M. H. Hoffman down, is wading into things with the same constructiveness and the same confidence of the outcome which was shown when Foursquare took the lead in November by voluntarily assuming the payment of the war tax on all its positive prints," proudly proclaims M. H. Hoffman.

"Nor are the facts altered one iota when I state that the two biggest business weeks in Foursquare Pictures' history were December 23 and January 13. This achievement could never have been brought about unless every employee, as well as every officer, had not gone ahead with confidence and enthusiastic optimism to do things even in the face of outwardly discouraging conditions.

"Today every Foursquare employee is keyed up to a higher pitch than ever before. None is faint-hearted; there isn't room for such in the entire organization. Every executive and every subordinate has faith in himself, in Foursquare and its products."

WM. J. FLYNN EXPLAINS LUSITANIA PLOT.

The Lusitania medal, commemorating the sinking of this great liner, was made and distributed in Berlin, dated May 5, 1915, several days before this great tragedy of the sea took place. The vessel was originally scheduled to sail on Thursday, but as she was delayed in taking on cargo she did not leave New York till Saturday, May 1, 1915, and hence was two days late in arriving at the point off the coast of Ireland, where it had been planned to sink her. She was sunk on May 7, 1915.

The Imperial German naval staff had laid their plans so carefully to destroy this ship they felt absolutely certain of success, and so the issue of the medal in Berlin was not held back because of the delay in her sailing from New York, and it was distributed bearing its original date, May 5, 1915. The celebration of a certainty even in advance of its happening would be just as effective in inspiring the people with enthusiastic appreciation of Imperial Germany's war power, which was the evident intention of the medal.

Medal Struck Off in Advance by German Government to Commemorate the Sinking of the Lusitania.

The reproductions herewith were made from photographs of a medal now in the hands of William J. Flynn, recently retired Chief of the United States Secret Service, on whose story the new serial photodrama, "The Eagle's Eye," exposing the Imperial German Government's spy plots in America, is founded. The medal is shown in the first episode of this picture, which reveals the conspiracy of Imperial German spies in America to destroy the Lusitania.

WHAT SAWYER DID IN BOSTON.

On their return from Boston this week, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin reported the consummation of their sales scheme in the interests of "Mother." The two executives of General Enterprises reversed the usual procedure of disposing of the picture to New England buyers by first booking it in one of Boston's leading photoplay theaters in order that its drawing powers might be fully tested.

The six-part feature starring Elisabeth Risdon was played at the Tremont Temple, and following the first day's run immediately established itself as a box-office attraction. "Mother" was soon disposed of for the New England territory to the Boston Photoplay Company, represented by Edward Golden.

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin reported that "The Warrior" created a sensation during a week's run at the Boston theater. The management of the Boston theater contracted for another seven days booking for "The Warrior" on the strength of the showing made by the General Enterprises' feature. The firm is now preparing to distribute "The Crucible of Life," a seven-part melodrama of the war starring Grace Darmond and Jack Sherrill, and adapted from the famous stage success, "Fairfax." This picture will be presented in New York for the first time on February 10 at the Park theater in order to assure it the prestige of a Broadway run.

NOW ROSEMARY THEBY RETURNS.

In the next Billy West King-Bee comedy entitled "The Rogue," which is scheduled for release February 15, Ethel Burton, who was the leading lady in the first production of this famous company, returns to be made love to by the star. Another beauty seen in some of the earlier King-Bee comedies, Rosemary Theby by name, appears in the same picture.

SENNETT'S VALUATION OF "MICKEY."

In the production of "Mickey," Mack Sennett was personally on the job seven days a week. According to the statements of the Western Import Co. he superintended the planning of every scene and situation. He went over every bit of detail with his assistants, and made the final assembling of this production himself.

"However, the credit is not only due to myself," Mr. Sennett advises, "but to the fine co-operation of Miss Normand, her supporting cast, my assistants, and my camera men. I have a great deal of faith in the old stage saying: 'What you cut will never bore anybody.' For every foot of 'Mickey' that is shown on the screen thirty feet have been destroyed. This was deliberate on our part. My idea is to serve nothing but the kernel of the nut. Film fans are tired of vampires, tired of moving picture cannon and charging soldiers. It is too much like war, and there is too much real sorrow in the world just now to need any heart pangs that are made to order. 'Mickey' will be as refreshing as a breeze from the mountains on a hot summer day. There are no vampires and no battles in 'Mickey.' It is a moving, sweet, wholesome story of a little girl raised as a foster child of an old miner—sent to the city to be civilized, and she does not find her path exactly strewn with roses.

"There are wistful and pathetic situations, as well as humor, laid in with delicacy and a sure touch. Laughter and tears take their turn in the unfolding of the story; it has real, living characters, and is told without squash pies and battles. There are also thrills, sensationalism, and mystery, and as a character study, 'Mickey' is a real work of art, and the public will never forget this adorable little waif."

THEODORE WHARTON INVENTS IDEA.

The Whartons displayed a new feature in photography at the recent trade showing of "The Eagle's Eye" at the Strand theater in what they described as "the triple iris"—three diaphragms opening at once and disclosing three characters and then fading and showing a scene in which these characters appear in action.

Now the Whartons announce a new form of "close up" which will be made a feature of the photography of a later episode in their secret service serial. It is said that this new form of "close ups" will revolutionize the manner of making them and give them more power in expression, more dramatic strength and more purpose.

This photographic innovation was originated by "Ted" Wharton, who is closely guarding his method of working out the effect. He believes it a new idea of great value and until it has actually been presented in "The Eagle's Eye" only the head of the Wharton photographic department and himself will know how the effect is attained. Mr. Wharton also has another new photographic effect which will be shown in one of the final episodes of the Flynn expose.

"CRUCIBLE OF LIFE" TRADE SHOWING.

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin announce that their latest state rights offering, "The Crucible of Life," will be presented to the members of the trade press on Thursday evening, January 31, in the ball room of the Hotel Astor. It has been arranged to provide this presentation with a special musical embellishment through the presence of Private Frederick R. Rath, member of the 306th Infantry at Camp Upton, together with the famous Camp Upton Four, the regimental quartet composed of soldier boys. Following the screening of "The Crucible of Life" dinner will be served, and a program of entertainment offered under the personal direction of William J. McKenna, musical leader and composer. A genuine surprise has been promised by the executives of General Enterprises, Inc., to the guests who will be present at the showing and entertainment through the presence of an official high in Governmental and military circles. If possible, Grace Darmond and Jack Sherrill, co-stars in the new offering, will attend the ceremonies.

IT WILL TAKE A GOOD EYE.

Louis Burstein, president of the King-Bee Films Corp., who will present Billy West in a five-reel comedy entitled "Old King Sol," intends to have the handsomest girls that he can procure in this comedy de luxe which he will start making as soon as peace is declared.

He will leave his Hollywood studio, and will make a trip to every city from Los Angeles to New York, signing up one beauty from each city to appear in "Old King Sol."

This bevy of feminine perfection is to be advertised as the most beautiful collection of girls from all parts of the United States.

MRS. RUSSELL, AUTHORESS OF TITLE.

"The Light Within," the title which was successfully chosen in competition and approved by Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Picture Company organization, and the famous Polish star, herself, was erroneously ascribed as the work of Larry Trimble, who directed the production. To Mrs. L. Case Russell, author of the scenario, should go the credit of choosing this title.

THESE ARE THE MEN WHO HAVE MADE "KING-BEE"

Billy West.

Nat Spitzer.

Louis Burstein.

L. L. Hiller.

BILLY WEST.—We herewith present the four Clover Leaves on the stem of the King-Bee Film Corporation. These four gentlemen collectively are responsible for the great success of the King-Bee Films output. Billy West achieved screen popularity at a bound. He is still within the draft age and has been on the stage since boyhood. His energetic manner, his sense of humor and his ability to grasp things generally have made him a valuable asset to the success of this organization.

NAT H. SPITZER—To Nat H. Spitzer credit should be given for the wonderful sales of the Billy West comedies. From the day that Mr. Spitzer saw Billy West at a vaudeville theater he has never lost faith in the ability of this young comedian to create laughter. It was he who promoted the King-Bee Corporation and then went out and made a record trip, during which time he sold the output of the King-Bee comedies throughout the United States.

Mr. Spitzer has had considerable experience in the moving picture business, both as an exhibitor, producer and salesman. He has won the confidence of the state right buyers and they are willing to take his word on anything he wants to sell them.

LOUIS BURSTEIN.—Consistency is the keynote that has followed his success in the motion picture industry. Ever since his entry into the film game he has concentrated his energies on the production of comedies. He was one of the organizers of the New York Motion Picture Company and the Keystone Film Company. Mr. Burstein is president and general manager of this company and takes entire charge of the studio end of the King-Bee Film Corporation. He edits and cuts every comedy turned out and is considered an authority on such material. Mr. Burstein was a lawyer before going into the motion picture business.

L. L. HILLER.—Louis Hiller, senior member of the firm of Hiller & Wilk, is the treasurer of the King-Bee Films Corporation and is considered one of the most clever of film business men—conservative, yet at the same time enthusiastic. He has been a guiding spirit and has placed this organization on the solid footing that is nothing short of marvelous, when one considers that the King-Bee Films Corporation is not yet eight months old. Faith in what they do is the keynote to the success of King-Bee.

Harmony in the organization is the stimulant that makes each one do his individual best, and life around the King-Bee offices is one continual ray of sunshine. When any little storm clouds appear the boys all get together and in less time than it takes to tell the sun comes out and shines on them gloriously, harmoniously and enthusiastically. Their motto is "success breeds success" and "everything happens for the best."

FRANCE FILMS IN NEW QUARTERS.

Simultaneous with the inauguration of their sales campaign on "The Natural Law," featuring Margarita Courtot, France Films, Inc., have moved to the 20th floor of the Candler Building. Important amongst the additions to their staff is their sales manager, M. G. Watkins, whose coming to New York was recorded in our last issue.

Mr. Watkins is by residence a Chicagoan and is financially interested in several film organizations in that locality.

MANHEIMER ENLARGES AND MOVES.

The Film Exchange, E. S. Manheimer president and general manager, with offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, have found it necessary to look for larger quarters, owing to increased business. The eleventh floor of 126 W. 46th street offers the best facilities to Mr. Manheimer for carrying on his general exchang and exporting business, and he has decided to begin work at this address on or about February 1. The old telephone number will be retained.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

William Duncan Goes to Pathe

Former Vitagraph Actor-Director Immediately Will Begin Work on a Western Serial.

PATHE'S serial plans for 1918 are now practically completed, and by their magnitude indicate that serials will continue to be a larger feature of the Pathe program than ever before. In accordance with these plans, J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe exchange, has engaged William Duncan, who has become known as one of the best serial directors. Mr. Duncan will start at work almost immediately upon a Western serial in which he will not only play the lead, but direct.

Mr. Duncan has come to the fore through his excellent work in "The Fighting Trail," "The Chalice of Courage," and in many features. Pathe regards his acquisition as particularly fortunate, and believes that his ability united with the Pathe serial experience will express itself in work far better than any he has yet done. Mr. Duncan is already at work on a serial from the pen of Gilson Willets, author of "The Mystery of the Double Cross," the successful Pathe serial, and several Pathe feature in addition to many dramatic stories for other concerns.

William Duncan.

The first serial to be released by Pathe in 1918 will be the Pearl White serial, "The House of Hate," in which Miss White and Antonio Moreno will play the leads. The release date will be in the early spring. It will be produced by the Astra Film Corporation. It is interesting to note that practically all the names connected with the serial have been associated with the biggest Pearl White successes of the past. George Brackett Seitz is the director. The story is by Arthur B. Reeve and Charles A. Logue. Bertram Millhauser is writing the scenarios. The serial has been given an all-star cast, which includes Paul Clerget, Peggy Shanor, J. H. Gilmour, and other well known actors.

The serial in which Mr. Duncan will be starred, and which he will direct, has not yet been named, but it will be released in the late spring. Mr. Duncan is a Scotchman, having been born near Dundee. At school and college he was prominent as an athlete, and particularly excelled at boxing, wrestling, shot-putting, weight-lifting, and football. After being physical director and manager of Macfadden's physical culture school he later established a similar school of his own. He then played vaudeville engagements, first with Sandow, and then with his own company. His first real theatrical engagement was with the Forepaugh Stock Company in Philadelphia. After this he filled many other stock and road engagements, and finally toured the country with his own company. He has written several plays, including "The Fifth Generation," which was a pronounced success.

Mr. Duncan gained his first motion picture experience with the Selig Company first as actor and then as director, and in the latter capacity directed Myrtle Stedman, Lester Cuneo, Rex Roselli, and Tom Mix. His work as actor and director in Vitagraph's "The Fighting Trail" stamped him as being a man of marked ability in the serial field.

Mr. Duncan has all the attributes that go to make the ideal serial star, where physical fitness and prowess in addition to ability to act are requirements for success.

Another forthcoming Pathe serial, the cast of which has not yet been selected, will be based on the successful novel, "The Mystery of Lucien Delorme," by Guy de Taramond.

Other important announcements concerning Pathe serial plans will be made later. Those in a position to judge state unqualifiedly that Pathe serial plans for 1918 exceed in magnitude and importance those of any previous year, and that in production, casts, and stories the forthcoming Pathe serials will be in a class by themselves.

MAE MARSH PLAYS "POLAR BEAR" STUFF.

Mae Marsh dared death last week in a storm along the Massachusetts coast to be filmed in the final scenes of Goldwyn's "The Beloved Traitor." When the company reached Marblehead a 62-mile wind was sweeping the rocks and driving before it a stinging mixture of rain and snow.

The scenario of the Frank Packard story required that Miss Marsh wade into the surf to her waist and drag to shore the unconscious form of her uncle, a fisherman, played by Louis Grisel. Though a "double" was provided for the star, she scorned this subterfuge and boldly plunged into the sea with the thermometer fifteen degrees below the freezing point.

Bare-armed and bare-headed, Miss Marsh worked through the bitterest of the cold uncomplainingly and said afterward on the way to her hotel in Boston that she anticipated no ill effects from the exposure.

FARNUM GOES TO ADIRONDACKS.

Headed by William Farnum, the William Fox star, and Richard Stanton, who is directing his new de luxe production, "Rough and Ready," now in the making, a company of eighty-five players and technical men left New York City January 20 for the Adirondack mountains. The scenes of the photoplay, which will probably be released late in March as a Standard Picture, are laid for the most part in the icy wastes of the North. Mr. Fox says, in consequence, that Mr. Farnum will spend at least a fortnight and possibly three weeks in the snowclad region.

The principals in Mr. Farnum's supporting cast include Violet Palmer as leading woman, Alphonze Either, Jessie Arnold, David Higgins, Frank Newton, Mable Bardine, and Franklyn McGlynn. Mr. Stanton wrote the script in collaboration with Edward Sedgwick. Harry Forbes is photographing the subject.

MARGARITA FISCHER IN "JILTED JANET."

The American Film Company, Inc., has given a refreshing script to Margarita Fischer for "Jilted Janet." It has snappy comedy and unexpected situations, which are taken care of by the vivacious American player.

Helen Starr wrote the story, and Elizabeth Mahoney polished up the continuity, while Lloyd Ingraham has given a clever interpretation of a spirited girl who has lost her fiance because she has lost her fortune, and who keeps her head level under both losses and plugs right along into a better love and a better fortune. Jack Mower is Miss Fischer's leading man.

Choice of Two Standards for Exhibitors

Owing to Fuel Troubles Fox Places "Treasure Island" and "Troublemakers" in Special Column for Jan. 27.

EXHIBITORS under contract for Fox Special Features will have their choice the week of January 27 between two Standard Pictures. This is a direct result of the recent order of the fuel administrator providing for the closing of all industrial establishments during a five-day period.

One of the parts of the William Fox organization affected by the closing order was the film printing plant at Fort Lee, N. J. Due to the preceding coal shortage and inability to operate the plant steadily there had been an accumulation of work which was materially increased by the five-day shut down.

To meet this situation and provide a picture for the week of January 27, the Fox management has taken "Treasure Island" and "Troublemakers" from the Standard Pictures and placed them on the special features calendar, giving exhibitors their choice. Either production which is desired by those holding Fox Special Features contracts will be furnished for the last week of the month.

"Treasure Island" is based on Robert Louis Stevenson's novel of the same name, and is a story of a search for buried treasure. Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin are the stars. "Troublemakers" is a comedy-drama featuring Jane and Katherine Lee, and shows the "two little imps" engaging in all sorts of pranks at the expense of nearly every one in the quiet country town where the scenes are laid.

The remainder of the previously scheduled special features have been pushed along a week; the June Caprice picture, "The Heart of Romance," which was to have been released January 27, now being scheduled for February 3.

"Jack Spurlock—Prodigal," the George Walsh feature which Mr. Fox has widely advertised as being made especially for special features, and which is to be released only to those holding contracts, now will be available, barring future unexpected delays, on February 10, being moved up from February 3. Gladys Brockwell in "The Moral Law" will be the February 17 picture; Jewel Carmen in "The Girl With the Champagne Eyes," the picture for February 24, and "Six-Shooter Andy," featuring Tom Mix, will go over from February 24 to March 3.

GOLDWYN ANNOUNCES ANOTHER REX BEACH.

Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announces the completion of another great Rex Beach film drama, "Heart of the Sunset," made from the famous author's successful novel of that name. Unlike "The Auction Block," which was purchased from the Rex Beach Pictures Company and released as a regularly scheduled Goldwyn subject, "Heart of the Sunset" is to be distributed as a special Rex Beach production.

"Heart of the Sunset," the final scenes of which have just been completed in the Southwest, is declared by its producers to be in every way a worthy successor to "The Auction Block," a "clean-up" picture for exhibitors everywhere. After viewing it in its unassembled state, Rex Beach declares he believes it is a more powerful production than "The Barrier," his most successful film story of life in the elemental.

Anna Q. Nilsson is the featured feminine player. In the leading masculine role—the Rex Beach pictures have no stars so called—is Herbert Heyes.

The story is a two-fisted one such as Rex Beach loves to write of the free country of the borderland between Texas and Mexico at the time the revolutions threatened to involve that country in serious trouble with the United States. Based in part on historical facts it tells in the way Rex Beach always makes interesting the tale of the love of two creatures widely separated by station and environment.

The production has been more than three months in preparation chiefly at Eagle Pass and Corpus Christi, Tex., under the direction of Frank Powell, one of the most capable motion picture directors of the day.

EDNA GOODRICH LEADS MUTUAL FEB. 4.

Edna Goodrich, in an emotional play of "Bohemian" artistic life in Greenwich Village, the "Latin Quarter" of New York, is announced by Mutual for release February 4 under the title of "Who Loved Him Best?" The production was made under the direction of Dell Henderson, and is the sixth Goodrich picture made for Mutual.

Billie Rhodes, in a Strand comedy titled "Her Friend Brown," is released February 5. Billie's husband goes philandering with a former sweetheart, telling his wife he has a date to take dinner with his "Friend Brown." Billie, showing up at the cafe unexpectedly, and hubby not being in evidence, meets a "Mr. Brown" whom she believes to be friend husband's friend, but who in reality is a gay Lothario at large. When hubby arrives and sees Billie evidently flirting madly with a strange man he starts a roughhouse, and lands in jail. When he says "Good Morning, Judge," in the police court he discovers "Mr. Brown" and the judge to be identical, and is sentenced to spend the rest of his life constant to friend wife.

The Mutual Weekly, released February 4, keeps pace with current events. Scenes from the battlefront, effects of heatless day orders, and the results of the recent blizzard which swept the country are shown.

"THE THING WE LOVE" (Paramount).

Wallace Reid, who is at present scoring a countrywide success in "Rimrock Jones," will make his next screen appearance for Paramount in "The Thing We Love," with Kathlyn Williams, the talented beauty of the cinema. This story by Harvey Thew is said to sound a powerful patriotic note, offering a stirring production of particular timeliness. The scenario is founded upon the story by H. B. and M. G. Daniel.

It was with the production of this picture that Lou-Tellegen returned to the field of directing photoplays. In unfolding the story the producers thoughtfully touch upon the much debated question as to whether the men or the women most severely feel the burden of war. In filming this subject many difficulties were encountered. One of the most serious was obtaining permission to use one of the largest munition factories of Bridgeport, Conn., for "atmosphere" in a number of scenes. After much correspondence and untangling any amount of red tape a company of "not more than five" players was permitted to enter and "shoot" the scenes. The result, however, is said to have well warranted the trouble gone through by the producers to obtain these views showing pictures of a big, modern munition plant.

Scene from "The Thing We Love" (Paramount).

"The Thing We Love" offers a splendid supporting cast, including Tully Marshall, Mayme Kelso, Charles Ogle, and Billy Elmer.

PRETTY GIRLS FLOCK TO EDISON STUDIO.

All of New York's pretty girls, who have ambitions to appear in "the movies," flocked recently to the Edison studios, where it has been announced James Montgomery Flagg, creator of poster girls and men, magazine covers and illustrations, would select twelve types for his Edison series of motion picture comedies, "Girls You Know." Many were the heartaches when the selections were announced, but, needless to say, the girls chosen are New York's fairest.

Eleanor Masters looked like a steady patron of "the movies," so she became "The Screen Fan." Peggy Hopkins was engaged to be married, and looking forward to "the day," so she seemed like the logical one to play "The Bride." Hazel Adams screamed as she walked under a ladder in the studio, so Mr. Flagg similingly chose her as "The Superstitious Girl." And, although it might be just as well not to say anything about it—Mr. Flagg couldn't find a girl in the lot who exactly fitted his idea of what an artist's model should be, so he pressed into service the girl who has done most of the posing for his recent drawings. She is Mary Arthur, and while the picture in which she appears marks her screen debut she plays with finish and great charm.

ESSANAY STAR APPEARS IN SCENIC.

"A Romance of Rails and Power," the current release in the Essanay scenic series, furnishes a striking screen novelty, according to General Film. The Essanay star, Virginia Valli, takes part in the scenic, appearing in a story woven around the progress accomplished in electrifying the Eastern railroads. This provides a striking human interest touch for one of the greatest of industrial romances. The use of electric locomotive power by the railroads and many beautiful and novel scenes along the railroads are shown in connection with the attractive story.

There is a slight change in these General Film scenic releases, "Water Powers of Eastern Canada," being the release formerly listed as "The Bay of Fundy." After "A Romance of Rails and Power" will come "The Two Greatest Things in the World—the Grand Canyon of Arizona and Canyon de Chelly."

Fox Cuts "Les Miserables" to 8,400 Feet

Producer Says He Believes Exhibitors Will Agree with Him Subject Is Now at Rock Bottom.

WILLIAM FOX could not cut "Les Miserables" to eight reels. The William Farnum de luxe production therefore will go to exhibitors in nine short reels. Its total length, as the work stands completed, is substantially 8,400 feet, approximately 1,381 feet having been eliminated. This is about 400 feet short of the cuts which it had been proposed to make.

"Shortening this picture to bring it within the length requirements of exhibitors has been one of the most difficult and heartrending tasks ever imposed upon our organization," said Mr. Fox last week in the course of an interview. "Mr. Lloyd, the director, thought the limit had been reached when he turned the production over to us. The film then measured 13,000 feet. For the showing at the Lyric theater in New York City we managed to cut it to 9,781 feet, and our opinion then was that we could not possibly take out another inch.

"We realized, however, that further curtailment would be expected before the picture was released, and accordingly a very careful and exhaustive study of the possibilities was made during the whole of the time the production was being run in New York. We sought opinions from everyone. An abstract of these suggestions, with others coming to us from outside sources, was made, and, using this as a basis, I began work with our editorial department on actual eliminations. The best we could do, however, was to reduce the total length to 8,400 feet. I think when exhibitors see the picture they will agree with me that there is not a scene of it, not an incident that can be spared."

The production will be released February 10.

MARGARITA FISCHER IN "ANN'S FINISH."

Miss Margarita Fischer, starring in sparkling American Film Company, Inc., has completed a clever story in "The House Next Door," and is now at work in Los Angeles filming exterior scenes of a girl's private school for the production of "Ann's Finish," the fourth of a new line of comedy dramas written by Beatrice Van and adapted to the screen by Elizabeth Mahoney. Jack Mower plays opposite Miss Fischer, and the supporting cast consists of David Howard, John Gough, Robert Klein, Perry Banks and Adelaide Elliott.

STRONG STORY FOR "THE UNBELIEVER."

Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews, who wrote "The Three Things," upon which Edison's "The Unbeliever" is based, attained the summit of her artistic achievements in this message that goes straight from the heart of the creator to the heart of the audience. The subject is a startling seven-act production, featuring Marguerite Courtot and Raymond McKee, and directed by Alan Crosland. The United States Marine Corps Headquarters at Washington offered the producers the co-operation of the service in setting forth the war element and these scenes were sketched in and about the trenches at the marine cantonment at Quantico, Va.

Landicutt with reverent mastery. The fact that Mr. McKee, hero of numerous comedy-dramas, turns his ability for the first time to a straight dramatic power evinces his intrinsic merits. As the indomitable marine he feels the public pulse.

"The Unbeliever" will be presented at the Rivoli theater the week of Feb. 18, where it will be the feature of an elaborate patriotic programme celebrating Washington's birthday.

Emerson-Loos Team Already at Work

New Paramounut Combination Has Prepared Story for Fred Stone, Who Will Be Directed by Donald Crisp.

PRIOR to commencing activities on the John Emerson-Anita Loos productions, to be released by Paramount, this duo is now busily engaged on a number of scenarios for Paramount stars. Fred Stone's initial motion picture vehicle has just been completed by Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos. This story, not as yet titled, will present the popular stage star as he first appeared in professional life, namely, a circus performer. The picture will offer a melodramatic farce, introducing Mr. Stone to patrons of the screen with all the stunts which have made him famous in the theater.

It is announced by Paramount that Donald Crisp, who recently signed a long-term contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will direct the initial Stone film. Actual production will be commenced upon the conclusion of the star's present theatrical engagement at the Hollywood studios early next summer.

Work on the John Emerson-Anita Loos productions for Paramount will be started on May 1. New ideas, situations and stories which Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos have been accumulating, will be prepared in a novel manner for screen presentation, and the high standing of these two experts among exhibitors comes as a direct result of past achievements and readily indicates that big things may be anticipated under the new arrangement.

HERE'S THE CAST OF "LEST WE FORGET."

Rita Jolivet, the star of "Lest We Forget," Metro's screen spectacle of international war events, which opens at the Lyric theater Jan. 28, is supported by a cast of superior excellence in this timely production, which was written and directed by Leonce Perret.

Hamilton Revelle plays opposite the star, in the role of Harry Winslow. He is already known to Metro audiences, having been starred in "The Price of Malice," "An Enemy to Society" and "The Half Million Bribe." L. Rogers Lytton, well-known screen player, is seen as Baron von Bergen, a German master spy. This is a role similar to the one he played in the big spectacle "The Battle Cry of Peace." Kate Blancke plays Madame Heriot, the mother of Rita, who is portrayed by Rita Jolivet. Miss Blancke is a Metro favorite. Clifford Saum, who plays Fritz Muller, also assisted in the direction of this big picture.

Emil Roe, who is seen as the mayor of Rose-sur-Meuse, is well known on the West Coast, where he was a member of the Balboa and other motion picture stock companies. Henry Smith, a veteran player of the stage, is seen as General Joffre. Gaby Perrier plays a young mother role. Other members of the cast are Texas Cooper, H. P. St. Leger, Ernest Maupain, Edward Gerstle and George Slatteau. Hosts of extras were used in the mammoth ensemble scenes.

PATHE TO ISSUE LLOYD COMEDIES WEEKLY.

Owing to the changed conditions, due to the factory-closing order of the Fuel Administration, Pathe announces an important change in dates of release of the one-reel Harold Lloyd comedies.

"The Lamb" will be released Feb. 3, as announced; but on Feb. 10 a one-reel comedy will be issued in which Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels are the stars, under the title of "Hello Teacher."

Beginning with Feb. 17 the Lloyd comedies will be released weekly, the first to be "Hit Him Again," on that date, and followed on Feb. 24 with "Beat It," and on March 3 with "A Gasoline Wedding."

Each of these Lloyd comedies is as good as any which have been made with him as the star, and with exhibitors assured of receiving one each week it is certain that their distribution will be even wider than it has been in the past. The output has been increased in response to a demand for which the popularity of the two-reel "Lukes," now discontinued, and the one-reel Rolin has been responsible.

SLUM STORY FOR ANN PENNINGTON.

Ann Pennington's newest Paramount picture, "Sunshine Nan," is now rapidly nearing completion in the Famous Players-Lasky New York studios. "Sunshine Nan" is Alice Hegan Rice's highly successful story published this year, the original title of this story being "Calvary Alley." As Nan, Miss Pennington appears in the part of a fascinating little slum girl.

In the cast are Richard Barthelmes, John Hines, Charles Eldridge, and Helen Tracy. Charles Giblyn is directing the film, the scenario having been written by Eve Unsell.

SUFFRAGE ARGUMENT IN "THE CATSPAW."

A strong argument for woman suffrage is contained in "The Catspaw," the third chapter of "The Price of Folly," the series of eight two-reel dramas, each complete in itself, being released by Pathe.

"The Price of Folly" is from the pen of Will M. Ritchey, responsible for many Pathe successes. It was released Jan. 20, and from reports it is a big winner. Marcus Loew booked it for a pre-release, showing at his circuit of theaters in and around New York City.

Triangle Finishes Three Features

William Desmond, Belle Bennett and Barney Sherry Are the Chief Players in Week's Output.

TRIANGLE feature directors have gained a lap on the production schedule at the Culver City studios during the new year, completing three subjects in the past week. The schedule calls for two a week. The stories are an elaborate costume picture. "The Sea Panther," "A Soul in Trust" and "The Hard Rock Breed."

In "The Sea Panther," directed by Thomas Heffron, William Desmond is featured as a swashbuckling pirate. Mary Warren, who has been with the Triangle forces for some time, makes her initial appearance as leading woman in this picture. The well-known Triangle villain, Jack Richardson, is included in the cast. A feature of this production is the famous Clara Morris wardrobe, one of the treasures of the Triangle Culver City costume department.

"A Soul in Trust" is a seven-reel Southern society drama, directed by Gilbert P. Hamilton. One of the most elaborate wardrobes seen on the screen in many a day is worn by Belle Bennett in this picture. She has nearly a dozen changes of costume. The cast includes J. Barney Sherry, Darrell Foss, Lee Hill, Lillian West and Grover Franke, this being Franke's first big part since joining the Triangle.

Director Raymond Wells made record time on "The Hard Rock Breed," a film adaptation of Frederic Bechdolt's story by the same name. This feature picture was completed in two weeks. It is a picture replete with action, and several thrilling fights are shown. J. Barney Sherry and Jack Curtis are the two typical "hard-rock" men in the story. The cast also includes Margery Wilson, "Bull" Durham, Aaron Edwards and Lee Phelps.

MISS CALVERT TO APPEAR IN HUSBAND'S PLAY.

Theatergoers who are familiar with the work of the late Paul Armstrong, the playwright whose untimely death was such a shock to the dramatic world, will be interested to know that his young and beautiful widow, Catherine Calvert, will appear shortly as star in a screen version of one of his most successful plays, "A Romance of the Underworld." Miss Calvert is under a long term contract with the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation.

Recently it was announced that the first picture in which she would appear would be "The Girl Who Saw Life," by Ben Kutler. The change in program is made in response to insistent requests that Miss Calvert be presented in one of her husband's plays. Incidentally it seemed better that she should open her series of photoplays under the Keeney management in a part with which she is thoroughly familiar.

MALE "VAMPIRE" PLAYS OPPOSITE MISS BARA.

Theda Bara does not have a vampire role in her superproduction, "The Forbidden Path," which will be released by William Fox as a Standard Picture on January 27. Instead, she is the victim of a vampire; that is, provided a man may be given that name. The role, according to the Fox management, is wholly a sympathetic one in which Miss Bara portrays a woman who has been robbed of honor by a rich man and then trod upon by society.

Throughout, however, the impression obtained from the production, as the Fox interests interpret it, is that the woman Miss Bara impersonates is deserving of everyone's sympathy, and the hope early is raised that the way of revenge will be opened to her.

"HEADIN' SOUTH" IS FAIRBANKS' NEXT.

The scenario for "Headin' South," Douglas Fairbanks' next picture for Artcraft, was written by Director Allan Dwan, giving Fairbanks a role in which he does his utmost to outdo the stunts that made "The Man From Painted Post" somewhat of a novelty from an acrobatic standpoint. The story carries the actors over a wide range of territory from Canada to Mexico, and presents a big variety of scenery, including snow capped mountains, forest wilderness, the Western plains, and the blazing desert. The direction of "Headin' South" is in charge of Art Rosson, a former pupil of Dwan.

GENERAL EXPECTS MUCH OF ITS NEW SERIAL.

Preliminary inspection of the first six episodes of "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," released through General Film Company, reinforce the producer's confidence expressed some time ago that this new serial is to be a sensation. Each episode is crowded with tense and dramatic situations. Besides, many of the German spy outrages figuring in the serial are among those dealt with in the columns of the Providence Journal during its stirring series of exposures.

Jane Vance, the heroine of this exciting serial, is a daring sportswoman whose feats will endear her with fans who are looking for new sensations.

The final episodes of the last half of the serial are nearing completion and are filled with a succession of dramatic events. General Film exchanges report a heavy inquiry for "A Daughter of Uncle Sam."

TAYLOR HOLMES MAKES CAMERAMAN LAUGH.

Even the camera man, a stoic by his long experience behind the camera, achieved a series of loud guffaws when Taylor Holmes acted the poker scenes for "A Pair of Sixes," now being filmed by George K. Spoor. Mr. Holmes, as T. Boggs Johns, and his partner, constantly quarreling in their business, agree to abide by the verdict of a hand of cards, whether Johns or the partner shall relinquish for one year all authority in the business, and that the loser must also serve in the domestic employ of the winner for the same period. Considerable time was given to the facial expressions of Mr. Holmes during the making of these closeup scenes.

SOCIETY ROMANCE FOR GLORIA SWANSON.

Gloria Swanson has the featured part in "Smoke," a picturization of Norman Sherbrook's magazine story of the same name, made by Charles Mortimer Peck. Director Jack Dillon conscripted this well-known comedienne from the Triangle-Keystone forces, where she had but recently returned. Edward Peale, who makes his initial appearance under the Triangle banner as Miss Swanson's leading man, is well known to motion picture fans and will be a welcome addition to Triangle forces. Jim Cope and Grover Franks also have substantial parts. The cast includes George Hernandez, Claire McDowell, Jack Richardson, Darrell Foss, Kitty Bradbury, Bliss Chevalier and Iris Ashton.

"Smoke" is a society romance showing the experiences of a young girl among the ultra smart set of a large city.

SHOWS FRENCH SOLDIERS ON WAY TO ITALY.

The Hearst-Pathe News No. 8 presented to American audiences for the first time scenes of the French armies rushing to the aid of Italy. That the motion picture record of this great movement of troops to aid a hard-pressed ally will attract wide attention goes without saying.

In the Hearst-Pathe News No. 6 appeared scenes from a remote country that has figured prominently during recent weeks, and that are most noteworthy since they bring mediaeval and modern warfare together. The scenes in question showed the tribesmen of Arabia flocking to the British colors in order to join the fight for democracy. In their strange flowing costumes and with their antique firearms they furnish as complete a contrast to European soldiers as may be imagined.

SELECT COMPLETES "THE SHUTTLE."

"The Shuttle," Constance Talmadge's Select picture, has been completed. It is the first production to be made by the player since her arrival in Los Angeles and provides her with a role of unusual dramatic force.

The story was written by Margaret Turnbull and Harvey Thew from Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's famous novel of international love and marriage, and was directed by Rollin Sturgeon.

"The Shuttle" promises to be as big a success as Miss Talmadge's earlier Select pictures.

SECOND TOTO COMEDY RELEASED FEBRUARY 17.

Pathe announces a slight change in the release dates of the new Toto comedies. "The Junk Man" is postponed from Feb. 10 to Feb. 17. From Feb. 17 on there will be one of these two-reel comedies released each week. "Fare Please" will be released on March 17 and "A One Night Stand" on April 14.

From reports received on "The Movie Dummy," the first of the Toto comedies to be issued, it is apparent that the new screen star has "caught on."

Mutual's Schedule of February Releases

Misses Goodrich, Fischer and Murdock and William Russell Are Featured.

MUTUAL'S schedule of February feature releases includes productions starring Edna Goodrich, Margarita Fischer, Ann Murdock, and William Russell, while March will bring pictures starring Mary Miles Minter, Olive Tell, Miss Murdock, Mr. Russell, and Miss Fischer.

The schedule for late January and February is: January 21 William Russell in "In Bad"; 28, Mary Miles Minter in "Beauty and the Rogue"; February 4, Edna Goodrich in "Who Loved Him Best?"; 11, Margarita Fischer in "Jilted Janet"; 18, Ann Murdock in "My Wife"; 25, William Russell in "Dètective Dan Cupid."

"Jilted Janet" has been pronounced one of Margarita Fischer's most entertaining pictures. It deals with the adventure of a daredevil miss who stole the mansion next door to entertain the lover who jilted her and his bride, the unexpected arrival of the young master of the house and the girl's frantic efforts to get rid of her company and avert exposure.

"My Wife" is one of the Charles Frohman plays in pictures produced for Mutual by the Empire All-Star Corporation. It is a clever adaptation of a clever play, and casts Miss Murdock in the role of a young English girl who marries for convenience to comply with the terms of an eccentric aunt's will, and finds herself in love with her husband despite her betrothal to a soldier in France. It is a role admirably suited to the clever Miss Murdock. She is supported by a cast of Frohman players.

The forthcoming William Russell production was produced under the working title of "Detective Dan Cupid," and gives the capable young screen actor the role of a romantic Sherlock Holmes. It provides Mr. Russell plenty of opportunity to develop the particular quality of humor which has marked his most recent motion picture productions, every one of which has been a distinct box office success.

"Extra, Extra," is a newspaper story, and Miss Minter plays the role of a young heiress who comes into possession of a newspaper. It is pronounced one of the best stories Miss Minter has ever had.

MISS GOODRICH TO BE SEEN IN ARTISTIC ROLE.

Miss Enda Goodrich has a unique opportunity in her newest Mutual production, "Who Loved Him Best?" a pictorial drama based on the life of those happy optimists who made Greenwich Village, the New York artist quarter, so interesting a locality.

Miss Goodrich is cast as Doria Dane, a motion picture star whose great beauty so impresses George Steele, a young sculptor, that he beseeches her to pose for him as "America Militant," a statue for which a large prize has been offered by the United States Government.

Miss Goodrich is seen in roles so diverse as "Carmen" and Mary Queen of Scots, these being her stellar pictorial roles in the picture studio aspects of the play. The costumes worn by the actress in these scenes are of remarkable beauty, and quite in accord with her reputation for expensive gowning.

The life of the art quarter is most interestingly portrayed. The picturesque studios are shown both internally and externally, and the Greenwich Village bazaar is one of the prettiest spectacles seen on the screen for many a day. The subject will be released February 4.

JAXON PLAYERS WORK IN 15 BELOW.

The discomfort which the screen actor is sometimes obliged to endure in the interest of release dates and business plans was illustrated in a most unusual manner during the filming of an exciting episode of "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," the Jaxon expose serial. Nearly all of the fifth episode, which is located in a New England forest not far from the sea coast, was filmed at Narragansett Bay while the thermometers hovered close to the fifteen degree below zero mark. It was necessary for the members of the cast appearing in the episode to ride forty miles from the studio before reaching the scene of their work, consequently they were always thoroughly chilled before beginning work. But this did not deter them from putting in eight hours a day of the hardest and coldest kind of work.

"Our company is composed of hardy folk," said Director Morton afterwards, "and not one complaint of the hardship, but entered with zest into the work of the day in order that the scenes might be made as scheduled. The releases through General Film Company, thanks to their fortitude, will not be interrupted."

PUP AND CHILD FEATURED IN O. HENRY.

O. Henry in his story, "Compliments of the Season," introduces a child and a dog. As filmed as the current Broadway Star feature for General Film release, the innovation is developed to great dramatic advantage. Practically the entire burden of this delightful story rests upon the shoulders of a playful pup whose waggish habits aid in bringing about a vivid flash of heart interest. Aida Horton, the child actress; Herbert Prior, Betty Blythe and the dog play the principal roles.

"The Moment of Victory," a stirring, whimsical story of Spanish-American war days, in which Chet Ryan, W. L. Rodgers and Patricia Palmer are the leads, will be the next O. Henry release.

Triangle Announces Two Subjects

"Limousine Life" Features Olive Thomas and "The Hopper" Has William V. Mong in Title Role.

A TRIANGLE adaptation of "Limousine Life," the story of the same title by Ida M. Evans, gives Olive Thomas a charming lead. A fashion exhibit is a feature of the play, and stunning gowns in advanced modes are displayed by attractive models. Miss Thomas has a supporting cast of standard excellence. Lee Phelps, recent addition to the Triangle playing forces, is seen to advantage as Moncure Kelts. The cast also includes Joe Bennett, Lillian West, Lottie Du Vaulle, Harry Rattenberry, Alberta Lee, Jules Friquet and Lillian Langdon. Jack Dillon directed "Limousine Life."

The crook comedy, "The Hopper," adapted by Jack Cunningham from Meredith Nicholson's story, is the second release of the week. It is a unique, up-to-date and distinctly "live" story. William V. Mong, in the title role, has great opportunity for unusual character work and is surrounded by a carefully chosen cast. Other players are Peaches Jackson, child player; George Hernandez, Walt Whitman, Irene Hunt, Lillian West, Thomas Kurihara, Eugene Cory and Louis Durham. "The Hopper" was directed by Thomas N. Heffron.

Plots, powder, and petticoats on board ship, combine to produce a whirlwind of laughter in the Keystone comedy, "A Sea Serpent's Desire," also released the same week. Donnelly and Sims hatch a little plot which is to be pulled off under the hatches of a ship. Franey scuttles the ship and bores the inspector with an auger, filling him with gunpowder. Handled by a notable cast that is loaded to the guards with Keystone "pep," "A Sea Serpent's Desire" promises to rank as one of the comedy record-breakers of the season.

"Airing Their Troubles" and "A Safe Disaster" are Triangle Komedies scheduled for the week of the third.

JANE IS AN IMP, ALL RIGHT.

Bracing, but not really cold weather, prevailed in Philadelphia recently while Jane and Katherine Lee, William Fox's "Baby Grand" stars were there during the week their picture "Troublemakers" was shown at the Palace theater, at which time the Quakers opened their arms and hearts to the little ones. Neither of the Lees wear full-length stockings, no matter how cold it is, because they have always been accustomed to wearing socks.

As they were entering a newspaper office a woman, well dressed, created a scene by threatening to have the Lees' publicity agent arrested for "cruelty to children" because of the short-length stockings. Jane piped up and said:

"Say, missus, let's see what kind of stockings you wear, will you?"

The overzealous intruder did not "make good." Muttering "You little imp!" she disappeared, laughed at by the crowd her own clatter had collected.

FUND OF HUMOR IN NEXT PICKFORD PLAY.

There is little doubt that "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley," in which Mary Pickford will next appear for Artcraft, is one of the most humorous pictures in which she has appeared. Clothesline Alley is typical of the tenement district of a great metropolis. The characters that appear are all indigenous to the precincts that form so large and so picturesque a portion of the city. Mary Pickford, of course, appears as Amarilly, daughter of a tender-hearted Irish washerwoman mother with a family of children who are messengers and newsboys.

In the support are William Scott, Norman Kerry, Ida Waterman, Margaret Landis, Kate Price, Thomas H. Wilson, Fred Goodwins, Herbert Standing, Wesley Barry, Frank Butterworth, Antrim Short, George Hackathorn, and Gertrude Short. In addition there are numerous types of the tenement-folk, policemen, Chinese, and others.

MISS FREDERICK TO BE SEEN IN "MME. JEALOUSY."

The next Pauline Frederick vehicle to be released by Paramount is "Madame Jealousy," the George V. Hobart story staged under the direction of Robert Vignola, the scenario for which was written by Eve Unsell. Miss Frederick is now busily engaged in the production of an elaborate version of "La Tosca" at the Famous Players-Lasky studio in New York City.

In "Madame Jealousy" a complete departure from Miss Frederick's usual style of photoplay is promised. In "The House of the Heavy Hours" there are scenes of weird bizarre beauty. In contrast, "The Garden of Delight," a display of wholesome, natural beauty of the outdoors, is presented; exceptional photography throughout enhancing the effectiveness of the production.

Opposite Miss Frederick in this play is Thomas Meighan. Others are Elsie McCloud, Frances Cappelano, and J. K. Murray.

SIX TO ONE FOR MARY MACLANE.

Whereas the usual screen actress has but one leading man for each picture six were employed to support Mary MacLane in her George K. Spoor feature, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me." These six share conspicuity in this picture, each portraying one of the suitors of the famous authoress. "Men Who Have Made Love to Me" is to be released in February.

What Pathe Offers for February 10

Frank Keenan Heads Bill in "Loaded Dice," a Five-Reel Adaptation by Gilson Willets.

THE Pathe program for the week of Feb. 10 is an unusually strong one, the high lights in it being the first of the Keenan-Pathe plays and one of the remarkable "Animal-Movements-Analyzed" pictures showing "The Horse in Action" in Pathe colors.

Frank Keenan makes his debut as a Pathe star in "Loaded Dice," Pathe Plays special. This picture is a five-reel adaptation by Gilson Willets, from Ellery H. Clark's successful book of the same name.

Doris Kenyon stars in the twelfth episode of "The Hidden Hand," entitled "The Eyes in the Wall," with Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton; serial; two reels; produced by Pathe. Unusual and thrilling situations develop in this chapter, in which Ramsey rescues Doris from Dr. Scarley, but is pursued by "The Hidden Hand" in an attempt to obtain the locket which contains the answer to the secret all wish to find.

Ruth Roland appears in the fourth episode of "The Price of Folly" series under the title of "The Sin of Innocence," with Frank Mayo. The story deals with a young girl reared in the wilds as a child of purity and innocence and the tragedy that comes into her life as the result of her ignorance.

Harry Pollard stars in "Hello Teacher," a one-reel comedy produced by Rolin. Mr. Pollard is known for his splendid work as Snub in the Lloyd comedies and he is featured in this picture with Bebe Daniels, also of the Lloyd comedies, as his leading lady.

The seventh issue of the "Argus Pictorial" is very interesting, showing "Oystering in the Gulf of Mexico," "Liquid Drops and Globules," "The Ameba," the lowest form of animal life, and "The Thrip," a very undesirable inhabitant of greenhouses.

A fine split reel is "Rocamadour and the Valley of Lot," Pathe-colored travel, and "The Horse in Action"; Pathe-colored educational, taken with the famous ultra-rapid camera, showing the movements of the horses, analyzed in every way as remarkable, if not even more so than "Human Movements Analyzed."

An International Cartoon and Educational and Hearst-Pathe News No. 14 and No. 15 complete this program.

MABEL NORMAND TO PUT ON NEWSPAPER STORY.

Word of the forthcoming release of Mabel Normand's "Dodging a Million," another George Loane Tucker subject, has brought such enthusiastic response from exhibitors, after private screenings at Goldwyn exchanges, that it is imperative for Goldwyn to follow it up with a second Mabel Normand production as soon as practicable.

Accordingly, a new story has been chosen which will present the comedienne in a role unlike any hitherto essayed by her. It is a tale of newspaper life combining comedy and thrills, and the role to be assumed by the Goldwyn star is that of a "copy girl," a sort of journalistic ne'er-do-well, whose sudden, brilliant "beat" covers her paper and herself with glory. The production has not yet been given a title.

Mabel Normand.

This story is being directed by Clarence G. Badger, brought from the West Coast for this undertaking.

Tom Moore is Hunter Mason, a rich young religious enthusiast who conducts a Bowery mission. His own secretary is a crook, and much of the excitement comes when Patsy (Mabel Normand), masquerading as a criminal, discovers and unmasks the secretary.

Charlotte Granville is given the part of Hunter Mason's mother. Helen Dahl is another player recruited from the highest class of stage productions.

Louis R. Grisel, Williard Dashiell, Lincoln Plumer and Wallace McCutcheon are other well-known players in the cast.

"WEAVER OF DREAMS" FOLLOWS "BLUE JEANS."

Viola Dana, the winsome star of Metro's special production of Joseph Arthur's famous melodrama "Blue Jeans," has another sympathetic and appealing role in a picturization of Myrtle Reed's novel "Weaver of Dreams," which Metro releases on February 18. Her role of Judith Sylvester is a simple and lovable country girl like June in "Blue Jeans," and the part is similar in its appeal and human interest.

"Weaver of Dreams" is a story of the heart, and Miss Dana excels in her characterization. The action takes place in a rural community filled with quaint types of humanity, where among simple surroundings a drama of the human heart is played and reaches its dynamic denouement. Those who have read the Reed story will be delighted to see reproduced on the screen the House of Hearts, the House of Content, the abode of the beautiful old character, the musician who gives the story its name, the carrier pigeons that have a distinct part in the plot, and other fascinating details which have endeared Myrtle Reed as a writer of stories to countless thousands all over the country.

Miss Dana is supported by a cast of favorite players in this Metro production. Her leading man is Clifford Bruce, who is cast as Dr. Carter Keith. Bruce has supported the star in "Blue Jeans," "The Winding Trail" and other pictures. Mildred Davis, who recently made her screen debut as Margery Gordon, has much to do in the development of the plot. Vera Lewis, a well-known character actress, plays "Aunt" Hattie Taylor. Russell Simpson, who appeared prominently in "Blue Jeans," plays Martin Chandler. Cora Drew plays Cynthia Bancroft. John Collins directed.

SCENES OF ICEBOATING IN "EAGLE'S EYE."

Wonderful ice scenes are to form the locale of a forthcoming episode of "The Eagle's Eye," Chief Flynn's serial of the intrigues of the Imperial German Government in America, which is being made at the studios of The Whartons in Ithaca. Incidentally, the ice scenes have given the company a chance for education in the rather difficult sport of iceboating.

In one of the episodes a winter carnival is necessary in reproduction of one of the excursions which Boy-Ed, von Papen and other Imperial German spies took out of New York while plotting against the safety of America. In this episode an iceboat chase is made a thrilling feature.

The result has been that for more than a week the main characters of the new Wharton serial have been seen upon the frozen surface of Lake Cayuga, swirling before the wind on fleeting iceboats—even King Baggot and Marguerite Snow, the featured actors, being among the students of iceboating craft.

The teacher? He is Wellington Playter, who is acting as co-director with George Lessey and The Whartons. Mr. Playter is an iceboating veteran, and so when the episode came along it naturally was turned over to him for the handling of the winter sports scene.

BIG HOUSES SIGNING FOR THOMPSON FILM.

During the last week big theaters in practically every city of importance in the United States have signed contracts with Pathe for "The German Curse in Russia," Donald C. Thompson's amazing five-reel picture, showing what happened in Russia and containing a pointed warning to America.

In addition to receiving probably the greatest praise ever accorded a war picture by the trade and newspaper critics, "The German Curse in Russia" is also benefiting by a remarkable publicity campaign.

The New York World started off with a four-page rotogravure section devoted entirely to scenes from this film. The Philadelphia North American will run a similar section on February 17. Many other papers have also run rotogravure supplements.

THREE MORE BROWN SUBJECTS ANNOUNCED.

Three new subjects have been announced for the Judge Willis Brown stories being distributed by General Film Company. "Tad's Swimming Hole," the first, is an entertaining and wholesome story of boy life with plenty of lively humor in it. Following this release comes "Marrying Off Dad." Another deliciously funny subject, "The Preacher's Son," which had been scheduled for earlier release, is the sixth release in the series of two-reel stories of youth written by Judge Brown. The new standard of humor set by the early releases, "Bud's Recruit," "Chocolate of the Gang" and "The Lost Lie," is maintained in the current productions, according to those who have seen the advanced showing in the Los Angeles studio of the Boy City Film Company, the producers.

"AMBROSE THE LION-HEARTED" (L-Ko Komedy).

Mack Swain, the famous Ambrose, makes his next appearance as an L-KO star in a two-reel L-KO komedy entitled "Ambrose the Lion-Hearted," in which the determined blacksmith, Ambrose, saves his sweetheart from the clutches of the cruel villain. In spite of his strong arm and lion heart Ambrose is his mother's pet. His blacksmith shop, however, is unable to hold him, for iron is too weak for Ambrose's sturdy arm, so the county appoints him sheriff to take charge of the ruffians and cattle thieves.

All of the comedy in this picture is of the legitimate kind, being comedy of situation rather than of make-up and slapstick. Rae Godfrey is the leading woman.

ESSANAY REISSUES CHAPLIN'S "A WOMAN."

The Essanay comedy releases for the current week are unusually rich in those elements which appeal to good show men, according to the General Film Company. Heading the list is Charlie Chaplin in the reissue of his sensational success of some time ago, "A Woman." Charlie involves himself in a lot of difficulties from which he extricates himself, or attempts to do so, in the guise of a woman. This is the sixth of Essanay's reissues of Chaplin's early successes. The Essanay comedy for the week is "A Tough Knight," a snappy farce comedy, with enough action to satisfy even the most exacting fans.

"WATCH YOUR NEIGHBOR" THE NEXT SENNETT.

The next Mack Sennett-Paramount release to follow "His Hidden Purpose" is "Watch Your Neighbor," which will be issued in the early part of February. Mr. Sennett has chosen for his two leading laugh producers in this subject the sombre characters of an undertaker and a doctor, which are played by Charles Murray and Wayland Trask, respectively, and the laughable situations unfolded are intensified by the seriousness of their calling. Mary Thurman also is featured. The production was directed by Victor Heerman.

GUS PHILLIPS IN BUSHMAN-BAYNE SUPPORT.

Augustus Phillips has been engaged to play Wellington Dix in support of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the forthcoming Metro picturization of George Allan England's magazine story "The Brass Check." Phillips is often a member of Metro casts, having recently appeared with Emily Stevens in "Daybreak" and "Blue Jeans" with Viola Dana.

NAZIMOVA WORKING ON GYPSY STORY.

Nazimova, the chic Metro star, has completed her second Metro starring vehicle, which is a story of gypsy life, and is now reading stories and plays in search of a suitable subject for her next Metro picture, which will be directed by Albert Capellani, who recently produced "Daybreak," with Emily Stevens as the star.

BIG FIGHT SCENES IN "BROADWAY BILL."

Harold Lockwood's outdoor pictures can always be relied upon to furnish an extra thrill or two, and those who look for such an expression in "Broadway Bill," Mr. Lockwood's forthcoming Metro release, which has just been completed under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer, will find it in the form of a big fight between the star as Broadway Bill and Stanton Heck in the role of Buck Hardigan.

The fight, which was staged in the open, is a stirring finish to a strong dramatic episode in which Broadway Bill and Hardigan are the principal figures.

"WITHIN THE CUP" IS READY.

Bessie Barriscale's Paralta-Barriscale-Play "Within the Cup" is now complete. Its light, scenic effects and elaborate setting show up in remarkable style. The strength of the story, the artistic finish of its portrayal by the actors, Miss Barriscale's own acting, and a fine sustained dramatic interest held throughout will make it appeal to all who see it. Raymond B. West, the director, has everywhere included the effects and touches that go to make an unusual picture.

This production will be released about the middle of February by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"EVIDENCE" IS NOW "THE ARGUMENT."

The Triangle Film Corporation announces that the title of "Evidence," released for the week of January 20, has been changed to "The Argument." "The Argument" is described as a drama of professional life offering an entirely new theme for a dramatic production, and involves an interesting study of brainstorm acquittal. The principal characters are J. Barney Sherry, who plays the part of a well known New York attorney, and little Pauline Starke. The supporting body also includes Eugene Corey, Edwin Jobson, and Audelle Higgins.

METRO FINDS ROMANCE IN A CODICIL.

That such a dry thing as a codicil to a will should have brought about so much happiness in the lives of two people goes to show that romance lurks in all things. In Edith Storey's Metro picture, "The Eyes of Mystery," written by Octavus Roy Cohen and J. U. Giesey, and adapted for the screen by June Mathis, this is just what did happen. The picture was directed by Tod Browning and Edith Storey played the role of Carma Carmichael, a young Southern girl who has been kidnapped from her family.

SULLIVAN AUTHOR OF "LOVE ME."

C. Gardner Sullivan, author of many successful photoplays, is responsible for "Love Me," in which Thomas H. Ince will present Dorothy Dalton in Paramount, following "Flare-Up Sal." A powerful cast has been chosen for Miss Dalton's support. The direction is by R. William Neil. The story ranges from the social precincts of Philadelphia to the wilds of a North Dakota construction camp; gives opportunities for highly effective scenic investiture and much action of an exciting nature.

"LIFE OR HONOR" A COMING IVAN.

"Life or Honor," under the direction of Edmund Lawrence, will be the next release of Ivan Film Productions, and is due February 15. The forthcoming Ivan picture is a novelty in comparison with the past Ivan subjects. The touch of mystery and of suspense in the nature of a detective plot is masterfully done.

Leah Baird is being featured with James Morrison in a dual role, co-starring. Violet Palmer has an excellent chance as the ingenue lead. One of the prominent characters in the picture is Ben Hendricks, who, as Olaf Olafson, has gained considerable reputation throughout this country on the stage. His characterization of the fussy old bachelor woman-hater is most picturesquely presented. Special advertising matter has been prepared to accompany "Life or Honor."

EMINENT SURGEONS IN PETROVA PICTURE.

"The Light Within," the second production in which Madame Olga Petrova is soon to appear, necessitated the expert services of two eminent New York laboratory specialists during the taking of several scenes therein. The story of the starring vehicle to be released following the Petrova production of "Daughter of Destiny" is from the pen of Mrs. L. Case Russell, and deals with the discovery of a curative serum for the purpose of combating the dread plague of infantile paralysis. The scenario called for many important scenes to be filmed in the laboratory of Laurel Carlisle, famous woman specialist, skillfully depicted by Madame Petrova as the leading character of "The Light Within."

In order to avoid the errors so frequently committed in photoplay scenes of this nature, Madame Petrova decided to guarantee their accuracy by the presence of two specialists. Dr. Mason Levinson, bacteriologist of the New York Board of Health, was engaged for this important work, while Dr. Noel Campbell placed his private laboratory at the disposal of Director Larry Trimble. During the filming the two specialists were in close attendance, with the result that these scenes will bear the most searching scrutiny of any professional audience.

Keystone Comedy Troupes Make Haste

Triangle-Keystoners Speed Outside Work as Rainy Season Commences—Five New Comedies Well Under Way.

FAVORED by the delay in California rains the Triangle-Keystone forces have been making hay while the sun shines. Five companies are busy at the Culver City studio on the extensive schedule of unusual comedies which S. C. Burr, comedy production manager, has mapped out for the present year.

An all-star cast, under the direction of Herman Raymaker, is completing work on the two-reel "A Playwright's Wrong," in which one of the striking scenic features is the interior of a motion picture theater. Billy Franey, Maud Wayne, Dora Rodgers, Ward Caulfield and Ellton Sims have had exceptional opportunities to show their skill in straight comedy work.

Director Charles Avery has a big cast at work on a "society-crook" comedy, "Her Bohemian Party." Ruth Langdon plays the principal feminine role, a society girl whose longing for new sensations leads to many harrowing and laughable experiences. Eugene Corey, as her sweetheart, and Arthur Moon, as a suave leader of a band of discriminating crooks, have good roles.

Director Reggie Morris, who contracted a severe attack of grippe during the holiday season, is back at work on a one-reeler, "Three Hats and Two Heads." In the cast are Rae Godfrey, Frank Bonn, Mario Bianchi, Rose Carter, Martin Kinney and Marianne Torre.

"A Rough Diamond," with Paddy McQuire, headed by a big cast of well-known funmakers, is having its finishing touches adjusted by Director Harry Edwards.

Director William Beaudine has his two-reeler, "Slinging It," almost ready for the cutters. An unusually large cast, headed by Ray Griffith, and Max Asher was busy nearly two weeks on this comedy, which is described as a "muddle of mud and money".

"THE ROUGH LOVER" (Bluebird).

With a new leading woman in the person of Juanita Hansen, Franklyn Farnum takes his regular place on the Bluebird program in "The Rough Lover," an original story by Joseph F. Poland, which was put into scenario form by Charles A. Kenyon, author of "Kindling." "The Rough Lover" was produced with his usual artistic hand by Joseph DeGrasse. In "The Rough Lover" Franklyn Farnum has a dual role. In one character he is a studious bookworm, timid of women and uncertain of himself. In the other he is a prizefighter, sure of himself, and the more women he knows the more agreeable he finds life.

"THE OTHER WOMAN" (Pathe).

Pathe announces that when "The Other Woman" is released on February 3, Peggy Hyland will be seen in a picture play unique in many salient features. It is a social problem play without any of the objectional features that usually attach to stories of this character and discloses a new view of the eternal triangle.

The story is a semi-conscious preachment; it point a moral without appearing to do so. "I believe," said a Pathe official, "that this picture will do much to bring about better domestic understandings, while giving its full measure of entertainment and, as such, is the kind of photoplay that is entitled to an honored place in the records of motion pictures."

"The Other Woman" tells the story of a wife's too ardent love of domesticity and the straying away of a husband under the strain of monotonous home life. The advent of the other woman appears for a time to be the logical solution of the difficulty, but eventually all of the characters see the error of their ways and all ends as it should without the breaking of moral or social laws.

EDGAR LEWIS FINISHES BIG STORY.

"The Sign Invisible," Edgar Lewis' latest production recently acquired by the First National Exhibitors Circuit, to be released Feb. 18, is from an original script by Anthony P. Kelly. It is a picture of similar calibre to Mr. Lewis' recent successes, "The Barrier" and "The Bar Sinister," and numbers among its cast several of the players whose work was so much appreciated in them.

Mitchell Lewis was Poleon in "The Barrier" and is Lone Deer in "The Sign Invisible." As a hunter, who is equally ready for a lark as a fight and who is as popular with the Episcopal Bishop and his daughter as with the men of the trading post, Mr. Lewis has a role which displays both his good nature and manly strength of character to splendid advantage.

Victor Sutherland has the part of Dr. Robert Winston, "a God-fearing man and eminent surgeon" who loses faith in Providence because his scientifically correct operations prove fatal to five successive patients.

The other leading characters are Lou Baribeau (Edward F. Roseman), the bad factor of the Big Company; Monihan (Phil Sanford), the toughest river boss that ever hit the North; the Rev. Rene Mercier (William A. Williams), the village clergyman; Jeanette (Mabel Julienne Scott), his daughter, and Winona (Hedda Nova), an Indiana maiden who is Lone Deer's sweetheart.

The photography by Edward C. Earl is excellent and displays to good advantage the many beautiful scenic locations about Lake George, New York, where the play was enacted.

BIG SETS IN METRO'S "LEGION OF DEATH."

A massive Russian street set was built on the studio lot at Hollywood, Cal., for the staging of big scenes in the Metro special production "The Legion of Death," starring Edith Storey. This timely story, written by June Mathis and directed by Tod Browning, contains many spectacular and thrilling scenes.

The set was patterned after the Nevsky Prospekt, the broad boulevard which runs from the main railroad station to the River Neva in Petrograd. The houses along the Nevsky Prospekt, which are from three to six stories high, were faithfully reproduced. Every detail of the Russian street was duplicated even to the style of paving. It was constructed by a small army of designers, plasterers, carpenters, and painters.

On this transplanted street of Petrograd many scenes typical of every-day life in Russia were portrayed. The terrific street battles which are almost too frequent occurrences during disturbances in Russian cities are re-enacted.

Edith Storey plays Princess Marya in this timely Russian picture. Her leading man is Philo McCullough, who is seen as Captain Rodney Willard of the United Army. Other members of the cast are Pomeroy Cannon, Francis Marion, Fred Malatesta, Charles Gerard, Norma Nichols, Grace Aide, H. L. Swisher, Harry Moody and R. O. Pennell.

"The Legion of Death" is a special Metro production and is now being booked for early showing in leading theaters.

NEW FOX-LEHRMAN COMEDY RELEASED.

"Hungry Lions in a Hospital" is the February 3 release of Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedies. It is the story, as the title indicates, of the commotion which lions create through gaining admission to an establishment where persons are recovering from illness. Besides the animals, who generally appropriate everything in the place, the cast includes a bevy of pretty girls and enough men to make the lions' invasion profitable.

The production was shown at the Lyric theater in New York during the two-week run of "Cheating the Public." Like all the rest of the Fox-Lehrman productions it is a two-reeler.

Eight Fox Releases For February

Included in Month's Releases Are "Jack Spurlock, Prodigal" and "Les Miserables."

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made by William Fox of the scheduling of eight productions for release during February. There will be two Standard Pictures, four Fox Special Features, and two Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedies.

June Caprice and Henry Lehrman will provide the first releases, the former appearing in "The Heart of Romance," and Mr. Lehrman's comedy offering being "Hungry Lions in a Hospital." Both of these will be available to exhibitors February 3.

The second week of the month beginning February 10 will be a big week from the standpoint of the Fox management. The special feature set down for this date is "Jack Spurlock, Prodigal," in which George Walsh is featured. The other release of this week considered the most important which William Fox has made this year is "Les Miserables," the William Farnum de luxe production that has just finished a long run at the Lyric theater in New York City.

Gladys Brockwell will be seen in "The Moral Law" beginning February 17. This special feature gives the actress a double role, that of two half-sisters, and makes her both heroine and villainess. Another Sunshine Comedy also will be released this week. It is titled "Are Married Policemen Safe?" and was originally scheduled for January 13.

Jane and Katherine Lee have completed a new Standard Picture, which will be offered to exhibitors February 24, but which is not yet named. The Fox Special Feature for the week of February 24 will be "The Girl With the Champagne Eyes," a Western drama in which Jewel Carmen is the star.

GOTTSCHALK FAVORS SCREEN FOR COMEDY.

Ferdinand Gottschalk, who makes his bow to the screen in the Empire All Star Corporation's latest offering "My Wife," declares he believes the screen to be even a better medium than the stage for comedy work, and tells his reasons for so thinking.

"On the screen," declared Mr. Gottschalk, "the various facial expression—even the most fleeting—are caught and instantly registered by the camera with no possibility of being misunderstood. On the stage, if the action of the play is at all brisk, the expression of one's face is apt to be overlooked in favor of the more arresting action of business. Then, of course, close-ups help so tremendously, as also does the ability to do and re-do scenes until the best possible effects are obtained."

In "My Wife," which is starring Ann Murdock, Mr. Gottschalk is playing for the screen his original role of Gibby Gore. Miss Murdock has the role created on the stage by Billie Burke, and Rex McDougall is Gerald Eversleigh—the part made famous by John Drew.

After "My Wife" the next picture to be released by the Empire All Star on Mutual's program will be "The Girl and the Judge," starring Olive Tell, in which she is supported by David Powell.

"WILD WOMEN" IS A HARRY CAREY PRODUCTION.

"Wild Women" is the culmination of a series of special Universal features in which Harry Carey has been starred under the direction of Jack Ford. The story was written by George Hively, although both Harry Carey and Jack Ford collaborated.

Scene from "Wild Women" (Universal).

The result is a comedy drama of remarkable humor. The comedy drama has a western and Hawaiian setting; the Hawaiian part being the result of a dream engendered by a new Honolulu cocktail which had the kick of forty bronchos in it.

The story of "Wild Women" doesn't matter at all. It is entirely subservient to the clever humor of line and the wonderfully contrived comedy of situation. Molly Malone, Vester Pegg, Martha Mattox, Wilfred Taylor, Ed Jones and the Universal cowboys support Harry Carey in "Wild Women."

MOZUKIN FILM RELEASED BY PATHE FEB. 17.

Ivan Mozukin, the great Russian star, will make his next appearance in the Pathe release of February 17. A most remarkable feature entitled "The Inner Voice," affords him a role which calls for his characterization of a man at three distinct periods of his life: youth, middle age and old age. The picture deals with the "Voice of Conscience," and shows how a man who has apparently succeeded in life is brought to the knowledge of his complete failure through the instrument of something inside of him that shows him that unscrupulous action and inconsideration for others do not pay.

Reports from various sections show conclusively that the American public is giving evidences of a great appreciation of these Russian Art Films in which artistry is maintained at a high standard. The pictures reveal with truth and conviction the life of a passionate people held in serfdom, a people whose sole weapon against overwhelming oppression is Art. How magnificently Russian hopes and aspirations shine through between the apparent gloom of their books and plays is presented in this remarkable motion picture giving a further understanding of Russian life and of civil conditions which brought about the country's grasp at the ideal of freedom. There is an irresistible appeal in the true-to-life scenes of Russian court life, of princes and nobles, of peasant and country gentry showing the events of their lives.

PARALTA GETTING READY FOR MISS GLAUM.

The event of Miss Louise Glaum becoming a member of the galaxy of stars at the studios of Paralta Plays has been the cause of additional activities at the Paralta Studios in Los Angeles. The technical and literary staffs are busy preparing for Miss Glaum's first Paralta Play. Sets and scenarios are being rushed for her accommodation. The first production in which she will appear at the head of her own company is nearly ready.

"It is our intention," said Robert Brunton, manager of productions, "to give Miss Glaum roles which will bring into evidence her rare talents for fine sympathetic and emotional acting, and at the same time retain in her work those qualities which have won for her the exalted position she now enjoys. The element of sympathy and the widened emotional scope should earn her an added popularity."

"BY RIGHT OF PURCHASE" FINISHED.

After five days of enforced idleness at the Norma Talmadge studios in East Forty-eighth street, work has been resumed on "By Right of Purchase," Norma Talmadge's Select production, in which she will be presented by Joseph M. Schenck.

The picture, which is now completed, is an absorbing romance of New York's upper life. In it Miss Talmadge appears first as a brilliant debutante forced to make a wealthy marriage and later as the wife of a young millionaire whom she has married for convenience and with whom she subsequently falls deeply in love. Like all of the Norma Talmadge productions, "By Right of Purchase" has been elaborately staged and the role she plays affords the star opportunity for the wearing of a number of beautiful gowns.

Eugene O'Brien will play the part of the husband. Others in the cast are Ida Darling, William Courtleigh, Jr., Charles Wellsley and Florence B. Billings. Charles Miller directed the picture.

"HIS ROBE OF HONOR" READY FOR BOOKING.

Henry B. Walthall's first Paralta Play, "His Robe of Honor," which is the visualization of the widely read book by Ethel and James Dorrance, is now ready for booking throughout the country. When this story first appeared in book form it created a furore and was proclaimed by the legal profession as a most vivid expose of political intrigue.

Supporting Mr. Walthall will be an admirable company of players, which includes Miss Mary Charleson, Lois Wilson, Noah Berry, Jr., J. J. Dowling, Roy Laidlaw, Fred Montague, Eugene Pallette and Guy Newhard. The production was made under the direction of Rex Ingram and is mounted with every regard as to detail. Carl Widen, who photographed the story, has introduced many novel and striking effects.

MISS YOUNG TO MAKE GLYN STORY.

Clara Kimball Young has secured the moving picture rights to Elinor Glyn's "The Reason Why," and is planning to make it her next Select production. The story was first published serially in a well-known magazine and later came out in covers as one of the widely discussed books of the year. It deals with the tangled love affairs of an American girl and her English husband and provides as a setting the sort of romantic background for which the author is known. The screen adaptation has been made by Mary Murillo. Production will be started immediately.

MANY SURPRISES IN DREWS' FEATURE.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, the popular stars and producers of Metro-Drew comedies, will provide their legions of admirers with many surprises when their special five-reel comedy drama "Pay Day" is shown on the screen. The Metro comedians have made a departure from their usual domestic comedies and produced a "regular thriller."

"The Naulahka" on Pathe Plays Program

Big Distributor Announces Titles of First Five Subjects Under New Plan.

A FURTHER step to assure the big new Pathe Plays maintaining the high standard set by them is revealed in the announcement that Astra's eight-reel production of Rudyard Kipling's story of romance and adventure, "The Naulahka," made under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, will be released in the Pathe Plays program. The titles of two of the first five pictures have been changed and the names of these Pathe Plays are announced as follows:

Fannie Ward in "Innocent," Frank Keenan in "Loaded Dice," Antonio Moreno and Doraldina in "The Naulahka," Bessie Love in "How Could You, Bessie?" and Bryant Washburn in "Twenty-One."

Pathe will continue to release a five-reel feature every week, the big pathe Plays being put out every two weeks, the intervals being taken up by Gold Rooster Plays, Russian Art Films or War Specials such as, for instance, "The German Curse in Russia."

The first five Pathe Plays represent the work of big authors, stars, and directors. There is no doubt of the fame of Rudyard Kipling wherever the English language is spoken, and within the British Empire and the United States especially his name means great publicity and box-office value and his genius, coupled with the directing ability of George Fitzmaurice, of Antonio Moreno, of Doraldina, who makes a wonderful and most remarkably beautiful screen appearance, all with unlimited resources at their command, assure a production of real quality.

"MORGAN'S RAIDERS" SET FOR FEBRUARY 18.

An important change in the Bluebird schedule of release brings "Morgan's Raiders," the latest Violet Mersereau subject to be completed, into a much earlier release date than had previously been set. It will now be released the week of February 18.

"Morgan's Raiders" was written for Miss Mersereau by Bess Meredyth, and directed by Wilfred Lucas, and was so satisfactory to all concerned that immediately upon its completion Mr. Lucas was given a contract to direct Bluebirds and sent to Universal City, where he took charge of the direction of Monroe Salisbury.

Miss Mersereau has the role of a poor relation of a rich and honored Southern family in the border state of Kentucky at the outbreak of the Civil War. The character of Betsy Dawley was designed and written about Miss Merserau's personality, giving her exuberance and vitality the best of opportunities.

Miss Mersereau is supported by Frank Holland in the character of Handsome Harry Dawley, Barbara Gilroy as Betsy's cousin Virginia and Edward Burns as John Davison, the Union captain.

BEBAN PUTTING ON ITALIAN SUBJECT.

George Beban will be seen this month in "One More American," picturized by Olga Printzlau from the stage play, "The Land of the Free," by William C. DeMille, presented in New York several seasons ago with signal success. While it was merely a short play—a "slice of life"—it received many encomiums from the press, and in its developed screen form, with a happier ending than that originally appended, will prove, it is believed, one of the most pleasing vehicles ever chosen for George Beban.

The fact that it is located in New York, Ellis Island and the colorful precincts of "Little Italy," gives it an added interest to metropolitan audiences, while its extremely human qualities, the pathos and humor combined, will render it equally entertaining.

"THE TURN OF A CARD" LAID IN OIL FIELDS.

Many of the big spectacular scenes in J. Warren Kerrigan's Paralta Play, "The Turn of a Card," are laid in the oil fields of Oklahoma. In the role of Jimmy Montgomery Farrell Mr. Kerrigan is seen as a young college man who goes west and strikes oil in the Oklahoma fields. During the progress of the story the men employed at the wells become incensed and start a riot, during which they set fire to one of the great wells.

creation of the role of Dolores Ruey in "A Man's Man," will be seen as Cynthia Burdette. The remainder of the cast includes Eugene Pallette, David M. Hartford, William Conklin, Eleanor Crowe, Roy Laidlaw, Clifford Alexander, Albert J. Cody and Wallace Worsley. The production was made under the direction of Oscar Apfel.

"THE SON OF DEMOCRACY" ISSUED FEB. 11.

An auspicious release date for the first two-reel installment of Benjamin Chapin's series, "A Son of Democracy," has been selected by Paramount, namely, February 11. In the week of Lincoln's birthday, when the entire press of the nation will be commenting upon our martyred president, the first of this series of dramatic film stories of America in the making will be shown to the public. The first of the series is entitled "My Mother," and depicts the birth of Lincoln in the wilderness and the incidents of his early boyhood.

Each release in two reels forms a complete chapter in the life of Lincoln. On February 18, the second installment, "My Father," will follow.

SENNETT REISSUE HAS STAR QUARTET.

W. H. Productions Company announces its first Mack Sennett two-reel comedy reissue will be "A Small Town Bully," with an all-star cast—Roscoe Arbuckle, Owen Moore, Mabel Normand and Mack Sennett personally. A number of the scenes of this comedy are laid in the village schoolhouse, of which Mabel is the new teacher. It does not take much imagination to appreciate her trials and tribulations when it is understood that among her leading pupils are Mack Sennett, Roscoe Arbuckle and Owen Moore. The unruly actions of these over-grown pupils occupy her entire attention.

A great deal of comedy is put over by "Fatty." The two reels are simply packed with fun.

"THE FORBIDDEN PATH" IS FINISHED.

A story particularly well suited to her emotional abilities and to her personality is said to be provided in the new Theda Bara super-production, "The Forbidden Path," just completed. J. Gordon Edwards, who has directed all of the Theda Bara super-productions, was in charge of the picture. Adrian Johnson was the author of the scenario. Miss Bara plays the part of a girl who is wronged by a rich youth. She exposes him as he is about to wed a society girl. The society girl repudiates her wealthy sweetheart when she hears the story and she forces him to agree to marry the poor girl whom he has ruined. The poor girl gets her revenge at the altar rail. There is a dramatic ending.

GOLDWYN PICTURE RUNS THREE WEEKS AT QUINN'S.

Goldwyn's "The Cinderella Man" has completed a run of twenty-one consecutive days at J. A. Quinn's Rialto theater, Los Angeles, where the heavy patronage and high receipts of the third week strongly tempted Mr. Quinn to continue the presentation for a fourth week. This was made impossible, however, because of his previously made contracts.

Typhoon Fan at New Orleans

President Glantzberg Establishes Branch at New Orleans and Will Raise the Wind in the South.

THE better to take care of the cooling and ventilating requirements of exhibitors in the territory surrounding New Orleans, the Typhoon Fan Company has established a branch in that city. The entire building at 1044-1046 Camp street, shown in the cut below, has been taken over by this progressive concern. Here will be carried a complete stock of Typhoon

New Orleans Branch of Typhoon Fan Company.

Cooling and Ventilating apparatus, as well as a stock of electric motors.

"We have long felt the need of such a plant at New Orleans," said Mr. Glantzberg, president of the Typhoon Fan Company. "Theater managers, especially those in the South, are coming more and more to realize the big money-making possibilities that lie in making their houses cool and comfortable in hot weather. They no longer accept a dull summer business as a necessary evil—as something beyond their power to avoid.

"Many of them have turned to the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System. That it has successfully solved their problem is proved by the enviable reputation which it has earned as an efficient and low-priced cooling apparatus.

"Under these circumstances, we naturally expect a heavy demand for Typhoons during the coming warm weather season. The establishment of our New Orleans Branch is but one phase of our preparation to meet this increased demand."

BILLIE BURKE FINISHES "EVE'S DAUGHTER."

"Eve's Daughter," starring Billie Burke, has been completed, and will soon be released on the Paramount program. The subject is a comedy-drama in which Miss Burke as the willful Irene Simpson-Bates manages to become involved in many difficulties, some of them amusing and others quite serious. Miss Burke's next production will be a play in a high vein of comedy to be directed by Joseph Kaufman.

The supporting roles in "Eve's Daughter" are played by Thomas Meighan, Lionel Atwill, William Riley Hatch, Florence Flynn, Harriet Ross, Lucile Carney, Mary Navaro, and Harry Lee. Mr. Atwill and Miss Flynn appeared in the stage production, and have the same parts in the photoplay adaptation.

Scene from "The Compliments of the Season" (General Film).

PATHE'S "LES MISERABLES" STILL GOING STRONG.

Reports from the Pathe Company indicate a highly satisfactory amount of business being done on their reissue of "Les Miserables." Following its successful three weeks' engagement at Orchestra Hall in Chicago Pathe's version of Victor Hugo's famous story played a week's engagement at Clune's Auditorium at Los Angeles to capacity houses, and the lasting quality of this film classic is indicated by the reception the Los Angeles newspaper critics accorded the return of the Pathe feature to Clune's Auditorium after an absence of three years.

When first released by Pathe, "Les Miserables" was in twelve reels. In its reissued form it has been retitled and carefully edited down to an eight-reel subject so that it fits well into any theater's program without having in any way hurt the intensity of the story.

DIRECTOR LLOYD MAKING DIVORCE STORY.

With what is declared to be an exceptionally strong cast, including Bertha Mann, Rhea Mitchell, Charles Clary, Bertram Grassby, Marc Robbins, Willard Louis, and Edward M. Wallace, Director Frank Lloyd, of the William Fox staff, is working at Hollywood, Cal., on a production which has for its object the disclosing of evils of the divorce system. It is tentatively scheduled for release March 10 as a Standard Picture. The director is the author of the story, and is said to be developing it to give strong emphasis to the feminine appeal. Indeed it is Mr. Lloyd's suggestion that the production be titled "The Law of Man." Decision, however, has not been announced on this point.

MOORE COMEDIES EXPLOITED IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Klever Pictures, Inc., has entered into an arrangement with J. D. Walker's World Films, Ltd., whereby the latter company secured the entire exhibition rights for the Victor Moore comedies for Great Britain and Ireland for a term of years. The deal was consummated through J. C. Graham, general foreign representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who has just returned from London.

The next Victor Moore comedy to be released by Paramount will be "He Got His," January 28, a rapid-fire production in which Moore is a broker and becomes entangled with a doctor and his wife.

MADGE KENNEDY IN HOPWOOD PLAY.

Ability to construct quick-stepping plays, replete with thrills and convulsing situations, without using the eternal triangle as his theme, has placed Avery Hopwood in the front rank of American playwrights. In none of his notable stage successes has this ability been so thoroughly exemplified as it is in "Our Little Wife," the picturization of which gives Madge Kennedy her third Goldwyn starring vehicle.

Genuine thrills vie with side-splitting scenes from the very beginning, when Dodo (Madge Kennedy) decides to take with her on her honeymoon three of her masculine admirers to appease their heartaches because of her marriage to another.

MISS BARA TO GO WEST FOR INDEFINITE STAY.

Miss Theda Bara, the William Fox star, will leave New York sometime during the first week of February for Hollywood, Cal., where she will begin work on a new super-production which the Fox management considers affords her greater opportunities for display of dramatic talent than she has had in any of her previous dramas, including "Cleopatra," "The Rose of Blood," and others to which the critics generally have accorded unusual praise.

J. Gordon Edwards, Miss Bara's director, already is in California, having left New York January 16. Miss Bara will remain in the West indefinitely.

Picture Theaters Projected

GADSDEN, ARIZ.—Ground has been broken for a new theater by Johen Johanson.

Week's New England Film Trade Brevities

Monday Shows Bring Financial Gain to Exhibitors—Several Prominent Film Men Visit the Hub—Interesting Notes and Personals.

By Richard Davis Howe, 80 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—New England theaters have observed the Tuesday closing order of the National Fuel Administrator without violation. The Tuesday closing brought order out of chaos and financial gain out of business ruin. In all the houses at the first Monday holiday there were capacity audiences from the opening to the closing of business. Some houses made a new record for receipts.

In some cases the order will work a hardship on the exhibitor, but the patriotic spirit of the moving picture exhibitors is to pocket their losses as a part of their contribution to the "boys in the trenches," and they will make no protest against the Tuesday closing order.

Harry Leonhardt in Town.

Boston.—Harry Leonhardt, pro tem exchange manager for the Goldwyn, spent a pleasant but extremely busy week in this city last week. The correspondent of the World met Mr. Leonhardt in the local office of Goldwyn. Mr. Leonhardt is a very democratic man, interesting in every respect, and full of bright and new ideas. Approaching the subject of moving picture censorship, which it is believed will soon come up before the Massachusetts Legislature, the World correspondent asked his views.

"The public of the United States likes pictures to the extent of about one million dollars a day. Any house which makes a business of exhibiting unfit pictures will find that failure only waits upon the attempt to force the public taste for plays of noxious purpose."

Mr. Leonhardt continued: "The motion picture industry is the fifth largest in the world, and Los Angeles, where I am proud to say I am the owner of three first class moving picture theaters, is its home. It employs 15,000 persons regularly there, with many thousands more temporarily. The money these men and women make goes back into immediate circulation in the community."

Hoffman Pleased with Business.

Boston.—M. H. Hoffman, president and general manager of the Foursquare's exchanges, made a hurried visit to Boston last week and complimented Local Manager Samuel Rubenstein on the fine showing of the Boston exchange. He came to Boston from Montreal, where he had made a careful survey of the company's Canadian business.

The forthcoming serial, "The Eagle's Eye," Mr. Hoffman expects to go strong in the Eastern territory. A private showing of this feature was given at the New Columbia theater, and was attended by a large number of New England exhibitors. The first three episodes shown were enthusiastically received.

"The Price of a Good Time" Books Well.

Boston.—General Manager Edward J. Farrell, of the Metro corporation, reports heavy booking for "The Price of a Good Time." He had a large number of exhibitors at a private showing at the Metro theater, and as a result there was some lively booking of this feature picture. Assistant Manager William F. Furber has gotten out some specially good advertising matter boosting this picture.

F. Murphy's Good Work Acknowledged.

Boston.—The Mission Church of this city expressed its appreciation this week of the help given it by Fred Murphy, president and general manager of the United Film service, when they presented the popular New England film executive with a beautiful electrical shaving mirror and stand.

For several years Mr. Murphy has supplied the priests of the Mission Church with free moving picture shows, which were given by the church for charity. Father McQuade, who made the presentation, explained that the shaving outfit was a belated Christmas gift, and that it carried with it the well wishes of the entire church.

Ad Kessel Visits Hub.

Boston.—A prominent visitor to this city last week was Mr. Kessel, vice-president of the Triangle Film Company, who came on to the Hub to look over the business of the Boston exchange. His visit lasted but two days. He expressed himself as satisfied with the way things were running in the local office of Triangle.

Boston Brevities.

Miss Marion Naiherseg, assistant manager of the Grandun Film Company, has left that organization, and will shortly become connected with another Boston film organization.

John E. Dunne, manager of the Grandun Film Company, of Boston, has returned from a tour of Connecticut moving picture houses. He reports business good, and booked a goodly number of his latest films in this territory.

Notes from Martime Provinces.

From Alice Fairweather, "Standard," St. John, N. B.

Halifax Theaters Doing Brisk Business.

HALIFAX, N. S.—The opening of the Halifax Academy of Music went very well. The show consisted of two acts of Keith vaudeville, Norma Talmadge in "The Moth," and a Fox comedy. The settings are very pretty and the audiences even bigger than were expected. A Fox comedy is booked for every week.

All the other theaters in Halifax are doing capacity business, the people seeming to be hungry for pictures and relaxation. Three houses are closed: L. R. Acker's, the Empire and the King Edward. It is expected that the repairs on those will be made soon.

Two New Houses in Sydney Probable.

Sydney, C. B.—There are prospects that Sydney will have two new houses this year. Ground has been broken for the new vaudeville theater which J. M. Franklin, of the Strand, Halifax, and Opera House, St. John, is building. It is hoped to have this completed by spring. It is rumored that the owners of the Casino theater, Sydney, who now have an upstairs house, contemplate building a theater that will be second to none in the Maritime Provinces.

Storms in Sydney caused the theaters to close at least one or two nights lately, not only because the films did not arrive on schedule, but because the streets were absolutely impassible.

The Nickel Doing Splendidly.

St. John, N. B.—The new theater, The Nickel, is doing splendidly and playing to large houses. It opened on Wednesday, January 16, with the Mutual feature, "Please Help Emily." The theater has been thoroughly remodeled and the comfort of the house is one of its telling points. The heating arrangements seeem to be perfect. There is not a step in the place, all the slopes being carefully graded. The lobby is capable of holding six hundred people and the side exits open into ten-foot ways so it is possible to empty the theater easily.

H. H. McArthur Now with Metro.

St. John, N. B.—H. H. McArthur, formerly manager of the General, and lately manager of the Metro Film, has resigned, to take a position as office manager of the Regal Film Company. Don. McCrea becomes the sales manager. I. Sourkes has been transferred to the Montreal office of the Regal. He has been most willing and obliging as manager and has made many friends here.

Joe Kaufman Goes to Famous Players.

Joe Kaufman, formerly manager of the Globe Films in St. John, has accepted a position with the Famous Players in the Montreal office.

Trade Notes of Interest.

St. John, N. B.—Don. McCrea, of the Regal, tells me that "The Fall of the Romanoffs" is booked solidly for one month. There is absolutely no open time on it and it has been most successful wherever shown. "The Spoilers" is playing many repeat dates and "The Warrior" is doing splendidly.

John Khattar, of Whitney Pier, has contracted with the Fox Film for service and comedies. He has also taken World Brady-made pictures from Don. McCrea.

E. R. Lynn, of the Casino, Sydney, has booked the Triangle pictures. "The Freedom of the World" will be in Sydney later, also "The Deemster."

J. S. Liscombe, of the Bijou theater, New Waterford, C. B., has booked Fox comedies from J. Lieberman and the special picture, "The Innocent Sinner."

The manager of the Russell theater, Glace Bay, has contracted for the Triangle service.

N. W. Mason, of the Roseland theater, New Glasgow, N. S., is planning to bring an Italian orchestra from New York.

W. O. Wheaton, of the Opera House, Pictou, N. S., has booked the Fox service.

The Strand theater, with Manager K. Keltie now quite restored to health, is doing an excellent business. He has lately booked the Fox service.

Clarke & Hiltz, of the Nickelet theater, Kentsville, N. S., have contracted for the Fox film service.

The General Film has closed its office in St. John and the business will be handled directly from Montreal.

Capital City News Letter.

K-E-S-E Exchange Visited by Jinx.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Local exchange managers are beginning to believe that the jinx is abroad in the National Capitol. Last week's issue of this paper contained the lamentations of A. J. Nelson, who presides over the destinies of the local exchange of the General Film Company; this week it is Manager Berger, of the K-E-S-E branch.

First off, Mr. Berger is young and able-bodied, and his Uncle Sam told him to proceed to his home town "somewhere in Pennsylvania" and appear before the examining board to have determined his fitness for a job with the new National Army. He qualified, but he has not yet been called to the colors.

That wasn't so bad. But more recently Uncle Sam sent forth a call for stenographers, and two of the talented young ladies of his office responded, and just now in Washington there are plenty of jobs for stenographers, with no one looking for work (and no place to house out-of-town stenographers who might desire to come here to fill the gaps).

Scene No. 3 finds Manager Berger struggling with the problem brought about by the promotion of two male members of his force. The trouble here was that the promotions came from other film concerns. Edwin A. Sherwood, his booker, went to Pathe, Inc., as roadman to travel through Maryland (except Baltimore), northern Virginia, and Washington, D. C. Mr. Sherwood came to Washington from New York, where he had been employed in some of the exchanges there, including the General Film and the Metro Film Company. Victor L. Abbey, who had been salesman for this same concern, returned to the Mutual Film as its manager here.

Victor L. Abbey Heads Mutual Office.

Washington, D. C.—The change at the Mutual branch came as a great surprise to the local exhibitors. When Washington woke up one morning and heard that Manager Evans had gone to Paramount-Artcraft as assistant to B. C. Cunningham it rubbed its eyes.

Mr. Evans is one of the most popular film men in this territory. He is a young man full of pep and a chap who, when he gives his word, sticks to it to the last ditch. He is the 1918 model film man. The fellow you are always glad to meet, glad to do business with, glad to have as your friend, and the exhibitors are glad he did not, in making a move, go out of the territory.

Victor L. Abbey needs no introduction. He started in the film game here about four years ago, although having had previous experience "up North." He joined the then Warner Bros. exchange, which later became the United Film Service Company, and was an assistant to Sidney B. Lust for a long time. He then joined Mutual here, and was put in charge of the serial department. He left that company a few months ago to become salesman with K-E-S-E.

Washington, D. C., Jottings.

Washington, D. C.—S. J. Mayer, assistant to Manager O'Donnell, of the Pathe exchange in this city, has just returned from Pittsburgh, Pa.

Washington, D. C.—When a reel of film was being run off at the noon performance at the Strand theater, Monday, January 21, Bob Burchard, assistant operator, received burns which necessitated his removal to a hospital for treatment. Burchard, when the film became ignited, retained his presence of mind, closed the fireproof door of the booth, and then extinguished the fire unaided.

Washington, D. C.—E. G. Perry is the new lessee of the Rhode Island theater, at Rhode Island avenue and Fourteenth street, Northwest. Mr. Perry is new to the game, but he has quite an attractive, though small house.

Exhibiting Business Poor in Newark, N. J.

Monday Proves a Busy Day but Managers Are Not Feeling Overoptimistic On Prospects—Sixteen Houses Have Had to Close.

By Jacob J. Kalter, 25 Branford Place, Newark, N. J.

NEWARK, N. Y.—Fuel Administrator Garfield's order rescinding the Monday closing of amusement places was hailed with great delight by the local exhibitors. It was most welcome news considering the fact that Monday is a comparatively busy day. The concensus of opinion among the exhibitors seemed to be that the Tuesday closing would not affect the theaters to such a degree as the Monday holiday.

The first Tuesday holiday was observed January 22. The previous day's business in most houses more than made up for the loss incidental to Monday's closing. The local theaters are observing the orders of the Fuel Administration to the letter. The marquees and the lobbies of the larger playhouses are either entirely or partially darkened. The outside illuminating signs are entirely extinguished, making the show houses hardly distinguishable in the streets.

Conditions in Newark are far from good, and the prospects are not tending toward optimism. There are many houses that have recently shut down in Newark and vicinity. Secretary Bornstein, of the New Jersey State Exhibitors' Association, is authority for the statement that sixteen houses have closed down due to various causes. The most frequent reason given was shortage of coal, while lack of water in one case, and the disastrous effect of the new taxes was responsible for the closings. The taxes, however, have not effected business to the extent generally believed. Local exhibitors are unanimous in praising the spirit with which the war taxes are paid.

Forest Hill Theater Incorporated.

Newark, N. J.—A company known as the Forest Hill Theater, Inc., has taken out papers in Trenton to finance the new Forest Hill theater, Mount Prospect avenue, corner Heller parkway, Newark. The concern is capitalized at $125,000, and the registered agent is Arthur W. Moore, with offices at 675 Mount Prospect avenue. The incorporators besides Mr. Moore include C. W. Thomason and A. Thomas.

"Thais" at Newark.

Newark, N. J.—Mary Garden in the Goldwyn feature, "Thais," was presented the week of January 21 at the Newark theater, and the picture was enthusiastically received.

Sunday Shows as Before.

Newark, N. J.—All the local theaters that had advertised benefit Sunday shows for January 20 were allowed to hold them as usual notwithstanding some early misunderstanding of the order from the Fuel Administrator. It is not known yet whether there will be any interference on the part of the authorities on succeeding Sundays.

Trenton Amusement Firm Incorporates.

Trenton, N. J.—The New Jersey Fair & Bazaar Company has obtained a charter authorizing it to promote amusement enterprises. The concern has a capitalization of $20,000. The registered office is located at 123 South Warren street. The incorporators listed are Albert B. Sloer, George D. Bishop, and Frederick J. Sloer.

Wider Use of School Films.

Newark, N. J.—Philip Gordon has been appointed clerk of the Newark school museum, and his appointment signalizes the wider use of the moving picture machine as an educational aid. Mr. Gordon's duty will be primarily to visit the various schools with the movable projection machine belonging to the museum. Scenes of educational interest will be shown.

Red Cross Receives $700.

Newark, N. J.—The Red Cross is in receipt of over $700 received from Proctor's Palace theater for the single benefit performance held last month. Lewis R. Golding and R. J. O'Reilly are the managers.

C. H. Wallen Appointed Agent.

Newark, N. J.—Clarence H. Wallen, of 114 Market street, has been appointed agent in New Jersey for the Proctor interests, including the following corporations all under the laws of Delaware: F. F. Proctor Board Street Realty Corporation, F. F. Proctor Jersey Street Realty Corporation, F. F. Proctor Newark Realty Corporation, and the F. F. Proctor New Jersey Theaters Company.

Philadelphia News Letter

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Business Healthy at Reading's Royal.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—C. V. Gerry, of Gerry Bros., Royal theater, Reading, paid a visit to the local Mutual exchange, and reported fair business conditions at his house. Mr. Gerry stated that no complaints were ever heard at his box office window regarding the paying of the war tax in addition to the ten cents admission charged.

Mutual Has Wicker Chairs for Screenings.

Philadelphia, Pa.—J. Gill, manager of the local Mutual exchange, announces that he has just been officially informed that contrary to the many rumors recently being circulated concerning the merger of certain producers, he states that the Mutual will under no circumstances be a party to any one of them. The projection room has just been artistically painted and the exhibitors will find plenty of nice comfortable wicker chairs to sit in while viewing the latest Mutual releases.

F. W. Buhler Gives Anniversary Luncheon.

Philadelphia—Frank W. Buhler, general manager of the Central Market St. Amusement Co., with offices in the Globe Theater bldg., celebrated his tenth anniversary in the motion picture business, Saturday night, Jan. 19, by giving a midnight luncheon at his Victoria theater. Mr. Buhler is directing the destinies of ten beautiful and up-to-date theaters, which have undergone extensive alterations and remodeling under his personal direction, and he is the most unpretentious genius that ever entered into the exhibiting field.

The specially invited guests were: G. E. Battersby, treasurer of the company; A. L. Einstein, publicity director; F. V. Armato, of the Press-Telegraph; A. Plough, of the Ledger; Captain Young, of the fire marshall's office; T. K. Goldenberg; Edgar Wolf, manager of the Cross Keys; H. Henderson and Howard Semple.

The managers present were: A. W. Forbes, Victoria; F. Hammond, 333 Market Street theater; C. J. Morteo and R. Madden, assistant, Regent; Martin A. Wolf, Ruby; C. Raymond, assistant; J. Battersby, Savoy, and James Martin, Princess. W. K. Goldenberg, assistant general manager, and Leon Dessauer, leader of the Victoria orchestra, should be given the credit of having attended to the arrangements for the party in every detail.

Quebec Theaters Can Open on Sundays

Court of King's Bench Turns Down Decisions of Lower Tribunals That Have Kept Managers from Opening Their Shows on Sabbaths.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street, East Toronto, Canada

QUEBEC, QUE.—The exhibitors of the City of Quebec have at last won a signal victory in the courts with respect to operating their houses in that city on Sundays. By a decision of the Court of King's Bench, sitting in appeals, all moving picture theaters of the city may be opened on Sundays. This turns down a series of adverse judgments rendered by the Recorder's Court, the Superior Court and the Court of Revision, during the past two or three years. The courts were used for a number of test cases against the municipal by-law which provided for the closing of the houses. Immediately after the issuance of this judgment, the managers of the Victoria, Olympia, Imperial, Princess, Majestic and other houses prepared to open on Sunday, January 13. Manager J. H. Paquet, of the Auditorium, declined to do so, however, until he had made certain rearrangements.

The Mount Royal Has New Manager.

Montreal, Que.—F. Lee, late of the Orpheum theater, Montreal, has taken over the Mount Royal theater, Montreal. Lee recently returned from overseas, where he had been in action with the Canadian field forces. He has adopted a policy of mixed photoplay and vaudeville for the Mount Royal, with three shows daily. The program is changed three times each week. Lee likes the idea of an entirely different show for Sundays only. Prices for matinees are 10 cents and 15 cents; for evening performances, 15 cents and 25 cents. Two vaudeville acts are included in the regular program. Lee is featuring Mutual releases.

Fire Damages Royal at Hamilton.

Hamilton, Ont.—The Royal theater, Hamilton, Ontario, was visited by a nasty fire on Sunday evening, January 13, but the management had repairs made so that the theater was reopened for business Monday afternoon for the usual matinee. The fire was discovered at 11 P. M. by the occupants of the apartment upstairs. The firemen were on the scene most of the night because the flames had eaten their way between walls, but the building was saved. The loss will not exceed several hundred dollars.

Fuel Very Scarce in Ontario.

Toronto.—The citizens of St. Mary's Ontario, have been called upon to do without their picture show on all but two evenings each week on account of the local scarcity of fuel. The local council ordained that the only local theater, called the Pleasant Hour, should be closed except on two nights of each week until the coal shortage is rectified. This is the only instance of such procedure so far in Ontario.

In Northern Ontario, however, the theaters in several small towns have been compelled to close voluntarily on account of inability to secure fuel. With the temperature many degrees below zero in this section and with poor transportation facilities, the coal problem is very serious.

Arthur Cohen Buys U-Kum Theater.

Toronto.—Arthur Cohen, Toronto, controlling two of the smaller, yet very successful, downtown moving picture theaters of the city, has invaded the suburbs. He has purchased the U-Kum theater at College street and Dovercourt road, formerly managed by H. E. Stonage, who is now manager of the new and large Oakwood theater. The U-Kum theater is four years old.

Notes from Middle Canada.

Toronto.—The annual meeting of the Canadian Fox Film Corporation was held in Montreal on Monday, January 21, when several officials came up from New York to examine the various reports and to pass upon measures affecting the Canadian business.

Toronto.—Tom Byerle, formerly Montreal manager of the Canadian Universal, has resigned from the management of the Montreal office of the Famous Players Film Serivce, Ltd., after being with the latter company for a period of only three weeks. It is reported that he is going to New York.

Toronto.—The Specialty Film Import, Ltd., representing the Pathe in Canada, now has two cameramen at work in Eastern Canada. The company announces that it has improved facilities for both topical and commercial moving picture photograph work.

Montreal.—The company behind the King Edward Palace, Montreal, has been reorganized, but it is announced there will be no change in the theater itself.

A complimentary dinner was tendered to James Sperdakos of the Independent Amusement Company, Ltd., which controls three moving picture houses in Montreal, on January 16, to celebrate his approaching marriage. Mr. George Nichols, managing director of the company, had charge of the proceedings.

Ottawa—The National theater, Ottawa, suffered damage by fire on December 22 and the house was forced to close until after Christmas. The back portion of the theater, including screen and curtains, was partially destroyed.

Montreal—The famous Japanese stage setting of the Imperial theater, Montreal, arranged by Manager H. W. Conover some time ago, has been replaced by another brilliant setting which depicts an Arabian scene. Mr. Conover is again being congratulated.

Toronto—Manager Liscombe of the People's and Kitchener theaters, Toronto, has added a third house to his local circuit. This is the King theater, College and Lansdowne avenue, which he has purchased.

Toronto—Ray Peck, publicity and advertising manager of the Canadian Universal, spent his Christmas vacation in bed owing to an attack of quinsy. Peck was at his home in Chatham, Ontario, at the time.

Buffalo News Letter

By J. A. McGuire, 157 North Elmwood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Buffalo Theaters Thrived Monday.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Buffalo's moving picture theaters did a thriving business on Monday, January 21. All the local retail stores, office buildings, factories, etc., were closed, and the people naturally sought amusement before the screen. Not only the large downtown houses, but the smaller theaters in the manufacturing zones, where thousands had a holiday, were thronged. By having matinees on Monday and giving high class shows such as are featured Sunday at advanced prices the receipts of many houses on Monday were equal to the total receipts of an ordinary Monday and Tuesday of previous weeks.

On the previous Saturday morning most of the managers of the moving picture theaters had their programs, newspaper ads, etc., all ready. When the official report arrived Saturday afternoon that Monday shows were the order there was some feverish activity among the managers.

On Tuesday, the closing day, the theaters had just enough heat to keep their radiators or sprinkling systems from freezing.

Paramount Official Found Exchange Improved.

Buffalo.—William L. Sherry, of the Paramount Corporation, recently called on Daniel J. Savage, Buffalo manager of the Paramount. This exchange has been considerably enlarged. New partitions, new lights, and other equipment have been added to the front office, where Mr. Savage's headquarters are located. The place has been redecorated throughout. The vault has been enlarged. Extra space for the shipping department and a rear entrance to the exchange have been added. A new projecting room will be built when warmer weather arrives.

George Blackman V isits Buffalo.

Buffalo.—George Blackman, Central New York representative of the Victor, was in Buffalo to confer over various matters with Mr. Hopkins. He also was optimistic about business. A caller at this exchange was George Tooker, of the Regent theater, Elmira. Another visitor was R. A. McVoy, of the Morgan and Cornell theaters, Auburn. The Cornell had to close on a recent day on account of frozen pipes. This house is now running two days a week.

Many Visitors at Goldwyn Office.

Buffalo.—Messrs. Louvett & Merritt, of the Family theater, LeRoy, N. Y.; Edgar Weill, of the Strand theater, Syracuse, and Harris Lumberg, of the Lumberg theater, Niagara Falls, called at the Goldwyn exchange, Buffalo, Tuesday, January 22. Mr. Lumberg recently advanced his prices from fifteen to twenty-five cents during a showing of "Thais," a Goldwyn picture, and was delighted with the returns. N. Dipson, of the Family theater, Batavia, was another "Thais" enthusiast. He said he was highly pleased with a screening of the Mable Norman picture, "Dodging a Million."

The Fairyland Burns.

Gouveneur, N. Y.—The Fairyland theater, Gouveneur, N. Y., was recently destroyed by fire. Mrs. Burnham was the owner. Plans are under way for a new house.

Matt Whitham Finds Some Comfort.

Buffalo.—"Heating the theaters is a problem because the meagre supply of coal we are receiving has no body to it," said Matt Whitham, manager of the Allendale, Buffalo. "But the moving picture business is not all disappointment. For instance, on a recent Sunday, when the city had the worst blizzard of the season and we didn't expect a handful of people, we had an attendance of one thousand. We had two high class shows on Sunday and Monday of this week, and the results were satisfactory."

Western New York Notes.

The theaters of Dunkirk, N. Y., have been co-operating in the Thrift Stamp campaign there. Four-minute talks on this subject have been made in the houses.

The Majestic theater, Buffalo, at which popular-priced road attractions and occasionally moving pictures have been played will hereafter show high class legitimate performances. These were formerly featured at the Star theater, Buffalo. The Star will be used temporarily for stock shows.

The Nelson Opera house, Dunkirk, N. Y., has new owners, and will be turned into a lithographing plant.

Buffalo theaters and exchanges may have to get their coal from a municipal coal yard. Mayor Buck, of this city, is considering the opening of such a yard.

Pittsburgh News Letter.

By Pittsburgh News Service, 405 Fourth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

L. N. Kniskern Gets Promoted.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—L. W. Kniskern, formerly branch manager of the Paramount-Artcraft exchange in Pittsbugh, has been appointed sales manager for this territory. Mr. Kniskern succeeds Joseph Klein, who recently accepted a position with the Metro in New York City.

National Exchange Gets Three New Pictures.

The National Film Booking Service, 804 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, has acquired the rights on "The Submarine Eye," formerly handled here by the Submarine Eye Company, for West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania, exclusive of Allegheny County. Other important acquisitions just announced by the National are "The Conquest of Canan" and "The Spirit of 1917," formerly handled by the Liberty Film Renting Company.

R. Edmunds Takes Charge of the Nittany.

State College, Pa.—Ralph Edmunds has taken charge of the attractive Nittany theater, State College, Pa. He succeeds J. C. Blackford.

T. P. Kelly Will Travel for Wolfberg.

The Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, Lyceum theater building, Pittsburgh, has again strengthened its sales staff by the addition of Thomas P. Kelly, formerly of the Pathe exchange in this city. Recently Mr. Kelly has been connected with the Paramount, and for the past few months has made his headquarters in Detroit, Mich. He is well known throughout the Pennsylvania territory and is therefore considered a valuable acquisition by the Wolfberg organization. Mr. Kelly will cover the northwestern part of the state.

Mrs. Barbin Will Run the Reliable.

Millvale, Pa.—The attractive Reliable theater, Millvale, is being continued under the able management of Mrs. Barbin, widow of the late Thomas P. Barbin, whose recent death was a severe shock to the local moving picture trade. For the past three months Mrs. Barbin has had active charge of the Reliable during her husband's illness, and will continue to set the high standard which has made the house popular with the picture fans of the Millvale district.

Exhibitor Elected to Council.

Washington, Pa.—The many friends and patrons of J. M. Conners, owner and manager of the Regent theater, Washington, Pa., upon his election to the City Council. Mr. Conners has a large following, and his wide and successful business experience makes him well qualified for the important position which he now occupies.

Notes from Quality Exchange.

Mark Horowitz, the popular salesman of the Quality Film Company, 404 Ferry street, Pittsburgh, has resumed work on the road after an illness of several weeks.

Edward Lebby, formerly of the staff of the Liberty Film Renting Company, has joined the road staff of the Quality exchange.

Carl Frederick Books Three Metros.

Ford City, Pa.—Carl Frederick, manager of the Princess theater, Ford City, Pa., was a recent visitor at the Pittsburgh Metro exchange, and booked the three Metro specials, "The Slacker," "Draft 258" and "Blue Jeans." Mr. Frederick is an enthusiastic Metro booster.

Cleveland Operators Trip It Lightly

Dreamland Academy Scene of the Annual Dance of the Local Union of Picture Projectors—Humorous After Reflections.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbus Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—The Cleveland moving picture operators' union gave their annual dance Tuesday, January 15, at Dreamland Academy. There was a crowd, estimated to be larger than at any other similar event, and to say the affair was a huge success would be putting it mildly.

The boys had been making preparations for this event for about a month. There was a forty-piece orchestra, furnished by the musicians' union, and the doings started promptly at ten o'clock, lasting until almost daybreak the next day. City officials and other prominent Cleveland people were in attendance.

Among the features of the ball were the special lighting effects, furnished by Al. Newman, of the Opera House; the taking of moving pictures by the Cleveland Plain Dealer Weekly, and a beautiful program which most of those in attendance took home for a souvenir.

After the Ball Notes.

Harry Holmden ought to make a good "jazz" dancer. Leo Weiss nearly talked himself to death. Charles Canfield, as usual, was the "Beau Brummel." Jim Foster nearly slipped and fell. It's a good thing he didn't. Abe Copperman was very dry. He drank a lot—of water. Frank Masik was talking business all night long. Ray Wood was looking for a "Gaiety" two-step. Modest Charley Bullock told us to be sure and get him in this column. We are satisfied now that Oscar Scheck can't dance.

Maude Murray Miller Heads Ohio Censors.

Cleveland, O.—The Ohio Censor Board is now headed by a woman, and is practically controlled by the government of Democrats.

Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, the oldest member of the board in point of service, has been elected chairman to succeed Charles G. Williams, who remains a board member.

Mrs. Miller just returned to work following an illness of pneumonia. A short time ago, Governor Cox, through the industrial commission, appointed Maurice A. Hague to membership on the board, which made Hague and Mrs. Miller Cox appointees. The chairman at that time was Mr. Williams, who was appointed by former Republican Governor Willis.

The Ohio censor board this week rejected in full the Essanay production, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," with Mary McLane, "on account of being harmful." The Cleveland Kleine offices received a certificate to this effect on January 21. This was the first big feature to be turned down completely following the election of Mrs. Maude Murray Miller to office as chairman of the Ohio Censor Board. The board also rejected a Keystone comedy, "Ruined by a Dumb Waiter," and another one-reel Triangle, "Airing Their Troubles."

Film men are of the opinion that a more drastic policy has been adopted by the board because the reports for the last few weeks showed very few eliminations.

New 1,200-Seat Theater Coming.

Cleveland, O.—This city is to have a new theater, to seat 1,200, at West 30th street and Lorain avenue.

Fine & Kramer, of Meadville, Pa., sold their two Meadville theaters, the Photoplay and the Academy, also the Meadville Poster & Advertising Company, a billposting concern, to A. G. Phillips, owner of the Meadville Daily Messenger, who will dismantle the Photoplay theater, as he is making a department store out of the building.

Mr. Fine, one of the owners of the Dennison Square theater, Cleveland, then bought the Zimmerman block, on Lorain avenue, at 30th street, a block from West 25th street. He and Mr. Kramer, who will move to Cleveland, will remodel this building and erect another building which will give them a theater to seat 1,200.

All Elyria Theaters Combined.

Elyria, O.—Complete consolidation of all the theaters in Elyria, O., has been accomplished through the sale, last week, of the American theater by its owner, John Pekras, to the Elyria Theatres Company.

Mr. Pekras will retire from the picture business after more than ten years in it and will be engaged in manufacturing rubber heels. The Elyria Theatres Company now controls the American, Strand, Dreamland, Rialto and Bannon's. Henry Wurst is president; Christ. Neufert, treasurer; E. J. Georgople, general manager, and Milton Phelos and O. J. Bannon, assistant general managers.

Notes of the Film Trade.

Cleveland, O.—John Reinhardt has bought the Chaplin theater at 7518 Woodland avenue, Cleveland, from A. Tucker. This house was reported to be closed for good. It seats 600.

Akron, O.—Paralta plays had their first run in Akron, O., last week, when Jim Dunlevy played "A Man's Man" in his new Bank theater, for a four-day run. He did good business.

The first run in Warren, O., has been sold to John Murray, of the Warren Opera House.

MORE CANADA NOTES.

By W. M. Gladish.

Saturday Matinee Concerts.

Montreal—The Imperial theater, Montreal, is giving a forty-minute orchestral concert under the direction of M. Henri Delcellier every Saturday matinee, starting at three o'clock, in addition to the regular show. The concert programme consists of five solo and ensemble vocal and instrumental numbers.

Pertinent Personals of Filmdom.

Toronto—Joe Kauffman, formerly manager of the St. John office of the Globe Films, Ltd., has joined the Montreal office of the Famous Players.

George F. Perkins, head of the Perkins Electric Company and of the Independent Film and Theater Supply Company, has appointed Sidney Starfield manager of the Winnipeg office of the company in succession to J. Levine, who is now handling state rights propositions.

R. S. Bell has left the Superfeatures, Ltd., to go into the wholesale fruit business in Montreal.

D. G. Walkley has taken charge of the Universal's Winnipeg office during the temporary absence of Phil Hassa, who has come to Eastern Canada, on account of his father's health.

Earl Sharpe has become assistant booker at the Regal headquarters in Toronto and has been succeeded as head shipper at the head office by H. Paff.

Ben Geldsealer Joins O. T. C.

Toronto—Ben Geldsealer, assistant to Meyer Fischer at the Toronto headquarters of the Famous Players Film Service, has joined the Canadian Officers' Training Corps at the University of Toronto and is slated for overseas service after he earns his commission.

Happy Managers Can Use Wood and Open

Nashville Exhibitors Have No Heatless Days, but They Have to Carry Wood—Ococee Falls Furnishes Them with the Light.

By J. L. Ray, Trade News Service, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Instead of causing the moving picture interests of the state to lose a day's business by closing their houses on "heatless day" the modified order, which allows theaters to remain open providing wood is used as fuel on Tuesdays, is proving one of the greatest boosts the theater managers have encountered in some time. Since the order has been altered allowing theaters to remain open on Tuesday as well as Mondays if wood is burned, managers of show houses in Nashville are beginning to feel the benefit of the added patronage.

Additional matinees have been arranged at a number of houses over the state where one matinee and two night performance have been given under normal conditions. At the Princess, a combination moving picture and vaudeville house, a corps of men were put to work hauling in over a thousand cords of wood for Tuesday, and the house on that day was as warm as if heated by coal. A number of the suburban houses closed down during the excessive cold weather, but thus far only two of the central theaters have been forced to close, and these only temporarily. The Alhambra, which closed for a few days, is again open and running every day on heat provided from the boilers in the Fifth Avenue theater, which adjoints. The Rex, a Fifth avenue theater, closed on "wood-burning day," but the rest of the uptown houses remained open.

Ococee Falls Furnish the Light.

All Nashville theaters are furnished with electric light and machine power from the plant of the Nashville Railway & Light Company, which power is generated by hydro-electric process from the Ocoee Falls establishment, located about 125 miles south of Nashville. State Fuel Administrator W. E. Myer has ruled that by closing down the auxiliary steam boilers of the power plant current will be allowed to be distributed the same as usual, which is a great advantage to the show men.

Chattanooga and Knoxville also have water power plants, and have accordingly reaped the benefits of this system. Memphis is a coal-burning city, and is severely handicapped by the fact that she has no water power electricity. Two thousand coal miners in and around Knoxville worked Sunday as a means of increasing the coal supply through the activities of the Southern Appalachian Coal Operators' Association.

In Nashville managers of theaters reported that the first "heatless Monday," which threw out of employment thousands of industrial and commercial workers, provided about the same number of patrons as on a Saturday afternoon. Even greater crowds were held back on account of the extremely inclement weather, but with milder conditions the box office receipts are destined to attain still higher altitudes.

Nashville Censors Act on Stage Play.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Nashville Board of Censors last week notified the management of the Orpheum theater, a legitimate house, that no presentation of "Her Unborn Child" would be permitted until the play had been approved by the board. The action of the board was sustained by Mayor Wm. Gupton, who issued orders to Chief of Police Alex Bathell to permit no further billboard or street advertising of the play. The play was at first forbidden outright, but, after a consultation by Manager W. H. Moxon and his attorneys with the censor board, it was agreed to run a special matinee on Monday afternoon to decide on the relative merits of the show. After reviewing the play, the board placed its approval thereon, and allowed it to run. A photoplay with a similar title was review by this board some months ago, and was slashed so it was hardly recognizable. Both plays were attacked by reason of their suggestive titles.

Knickerbocker's New House Organ.

Nashville.—The Knickerbocker News, the recently added house organ of the Knickerbocker theater, is proving a splendid boost to this popular moving picture house. The publication is a weekly, running five columns across and about two-thirds newspaper length, and is a four-sheet. The generous use of cuts on all the pages is making it a much livelier sheet than it would be with solid reading matter. Co-operation between the theater and the daily newspapers in the use of cuts is helping cut down expenses.

New Memphis Loew House Thrives.

Memphis, Tenn.—Since the Princess theater was taken over by Marcus Loew business has been above normal. The formal opening was had on December 23, and the house, which formerly operated on a 5-cent scale, has been changed to 10 cents for all seats, including war tax. It has one of the largest theater auditoriums in west Tennessee, and the $10,000 pipe organ just rebuilt is a big feature. A new ventilating system is also an asset.

Pictures of the Hart, Fairbanks, Farrar, and Sennett type are shown for this nominal sum, with four weekly changes. A. B. Morrison, formerly assistant manager of Loew's Lyceum, vaudeville and picture house, is putting on good shows, and is being rewarded for his efforts. The house has adopted the slogan, "Big shows—little prices."

Memphis Exchanges Close Mondays.

Memphis.—Exchanges in Memphis feel the heavy hand of the coal famine, and are complying with the fuel administrator's mandates to the letter of the law. A number of these west Tennessee exchanges have been suffering by reason of many small town houses in Tennessee closing during the cold weather. Shipments are being arranged by Kaufman Specials, one of the leading exchanges, in order that they may be forwarded one or two days in advance to reach the picture men on time for their programs.

Dayton News Letter

By P. J. G., Dayton Correspondent.

Rudy Knoepfle Entertains.

DAYTON, O.—Rudolph Knoepfle, representing the Fox Film, opened his Dayton drive on behalf of the Sunshine comedies with a supper given at Satalia's Italian restaurant here. It was not a large affair, rather an impromptu arrangement in the form of a surprise for the few who attended. Among the notables who were present we will mention John Lyons, manager of the Orpheum; Gus Kinsler, with the George Kleine system; Eddy Gomersol, with the Foursquare exchange at Cincinnati; J. A. Conant, representing Select (which, by the way, is taking quite ahold in Dayton), and John Frinkoss, formerly with the Triangle exchange at Cincinnati, but who answered the call, and is now enrolled in the Signal Corps of the U. S. Army.

Chas. Houser Takes Alhambra at Miamisburg.

Miamisburg, O.—Chas. Houser, formerly with many circuses, and an acrobat with the Ringling show, will operate the Alhambra theater at Miamisburg, Ohio. Charley also operates the Miami theater at Miamisburg, and as there is only one more house in the town his acquisition of the Alhambra places him in the magnate class. The Alhambra will be open one night a week until further notice.

George Davis a Dependable Adviser.

Dayton.—George Davis has returned from a short trip through West Virginia and Kentucky, where, he states, business is also on the decline for the present at least. From his conversation one would glean that West Virginia and Kentucky are not the most convenient places in the world to travel through, although George told of many happenings which interested a small gathering of film men at the League rooms. One thing I will say for George he does not stretch the truth as do some of those who I am forced to call "film peddlers." George is an old timer, and knows that if business is not exactly rushing it will not help things to give out prosperity announcements, for the present poor business is hitting all the companies, and they all suffer alike, as far as I can see.

Pathe Has New Dayton Representative.

Dayton, O.—James (Pathe) Hamilton, as he is known to the trade, was formerly at the Louisville Pathe office. Jack Needham, who represented Pathe here for a few weeks is handling the Government picture recently made at Camp Sherman, Ohio, showing the life of Uncle Sam's boys. Jim was much in evidence at the League rooms last week and is meeting all members in fast order. As was the case with Jack Needham and Paul Allison, we wish Jim Hamilton all the luck in the world.

Marguerite Clark Dayton Favorite.

Dayton, O.—It was indeed a feast for the eyes to see admirers of Margerite Clark line up at the Strand to see her recent picture, "The Seven Swans," and it must be remembered that the thermometer registered about sixteen below zero that day.

New Stage Set at Strand Theater.

Dayton, O.—A new stage set is to be installed at the Strand here, within the next two weeks, which will equal any in this part of the country if plans are carried out as announced by Clay Brehm. The total cost of the set will run well into $1,500, and should improve the appearance of this already beautiful house. Mr. Brehm also promises another surprise in the way of novelties for patrons of the Strand, to be announced within the next week.

Crisp Bits About Dayton Film Men.

J. A. Conant, with the Select exchange at Cincinnati, announces he has booked the Mecca theater in Dayton for the entire Select output.

Chas. Gross and John Siefert, of the Columbia and Ideal, Dayton, respectively, are seen together very often these days. Their frequent meetings have caused several rumors, after sifting all these down we can see none of importance, but it looks as though something is being discussed.

Many film salesmen were snow bound in Dayton within the last week, and this increased the attendance at the League rooms muchly.

After Al Kinsler had asked about the old fashioned man who always carried a rabbit's foot we found that Eddy Gomersol had one in his coat pocket. Eddy also smokes Swastika cigars.

John Frinkoss likes the army, and says he is anxious to go "Over the Top" with the rest who have volunteered.

Had a letter from John Nuckols last week, he says all the boys at Montgomery, Alabama, are anxious to go to France.

The newspapers spoke well of "The Seven Swans," with Margerite Clark.

The Strand at Piqua is still closed owing to the coal shortage.

Tony Klotz, formerly with the Universal exchange at Cincinnati, is doing well in Charleston, W. Va., where he manages the local branch of Universal.

The "Barrier" went over big at the Orpheum.

J. A. Conant declared he liked Dayton as well as Cincinnati. We don't blame you Mr. Conant.

Harry Shaw did not arrive with the recent contingent of film salesmen. It takes Harry to put over a good story in the right manner.

Lurson Anderson, doorkeeper at the Strand, is surely worth mentioning, he is one of the most genial attendants I have seen. In most theaters when the patrons enter covered with snow it is allowed to melt on the clothes, but not so at the Strand. Anderson has a little brush which he uses in cleaning the coats of the patrons.

Things that never happen. Any theatrical man wearing a bow tie as small as that worn by Archie Adlman.

Business continues to hold up at the Lyceum here.

We had several of those film salesmen who get more for their program than any other in Dayton last week.

Upon investigation at the Dayton Public Library we find the "World" very popular. A fact worthy of mention is that the "World" is the only film magazine on the shelves of the Dayton Public Library.

Gilbert Chandler, son of Martin G., came out of the hospital safely after an attack of rheumatism.

I enjoyed most of last Sunday afternoon at the Elite with A. L. Kinsler, the "genial manager," as they say in the different trade papers. Al is more than genial, he is a "regular fellow."

Shows and Programs.

Dayton, O.—The Columbia, in Dayton, under the management of Charles Cross, is to present the Paralta program first run. The opening attraction was "A Man's Man" with Warren Kerrigan. The Columbia includes in its regular pictures part of the Paramount and Artcraft program, as well as Triangle, also the Triangle comedies. For three days George Beban in "Jules of the Strong Heart" made a lasting impression with local fans.

"One Hour" and the "Sin Woman" are two of the Hoffman Foursquare pictures that have been played at the Lyceum theater here to good business.

MICHIGAN TRADE NOTES.

By F. H. Madison.

Charlevoix, Mich.—The new moving picture and vaudeville theater which will be erected here will be known as the Stoddard & Wallace theater.

Alpena, Mich.—The Temple theater was destroyed by fire.

Kalamazoo, Mich.—George Spaeth, who has been manager of the Fuller theater, and W. S. Butterfield, of Battle Creek, have purchased the lease on that house from F. J. Stafford, and Spaeth will continue as manager, using photoplays and three acts of vaudeville.

Houghton, Mich.—The Lyric theater, which has been reopened under the management of James C. Flynn, had for its grand opening "Draft 258."

The Moving Picture World leads in authoritative information, in service and in circulation.

Kentucky's Bitter Weather and Scant Fuel

Exhibitors Have Much to Contend with—Don't Mind Closing Order but Fear Effects of the Lack of Employment in Factories.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The past week, from Jan. 15 to 22, has been one of many surprises to the Kentucky exhibitors, but unless orders of the Fuel Administration are again changed, it appears as though it will be fairly easy sailing for the next few weeks.

Much Less Money After Shut Down.

That the closing order will hit the theaters harder than the mere loss of business on Tuesday is the claim of some of the leading exhibitors, who say industrial concerns are not paying any wages on the one Monday of each week that their plants are down, and that they were forced to dock employes for each of the nine succeeding Mondays under the schedule. Retailers are generally paying their forces full wages, but with the big industrial plants it is said that such a step would be impossible. This means that the workingman will lose five days' pay for the first shutdown, and a day's pay out of each envelope for nine succeeding weeks. With coal costing close to $6 a ton, and the thermometer at or near zero; food, clothing, shoes, etc., out of sight, the workingman is going to have very little left for amusement out of ten short envelopes, and this is bound to affect the picture business. However, two holidays falling together as they do will undoubtedly increase receipts considerably for the first two days in the week, and the exhibitors will do their best to crowd seven days business into six working days. A number of exhibitors are planning to pay their employes full time during the interval of short weeks.

Some Theaters Glad to Close One Day.

"There is a bright side to everything, even the order of the Fuel Administration," remarked a prominent exhibitor of Louisville, who called attention to the fact that it would be good business for some of the theaters to close a day a week, and cut their fuel bills somewhat. He continued: "A better time could not have been selected for closing us one day a week, as a number of small houses have not been making expenses for some time, and Tuesday was, without doubt, the worst day in the week for them. Good attendances would be found in the houses on Saturdays, Sundays and Mondays, but by that time the remains of the Saturday envelope were down to an irreducible minimum, or the people were tired of amusement and the cold. The thermometer has been under zero just ten times this winter, and the worst weather of forty-three years was experienced last week when the thermometer bumped fifteen degrees below zero, this being followed by eighteen inches of snow. There has been snow on the ground now for more than six weeks, and such weather has never before been experienced in Kentucky.

Traffic conditions have been frightful, automobiles hardly able to get through, and the street car service very poor; in fact, there being hardly any service on many days. People have been afraid to come downtown in the afternoons or night for fear that they would be held up for two or three hours in getting home. Coal, at about $6 a ton for the lowest grades, is too high for heating empty theaters, and if the theater isn't warm it isn't going to draw at all. Of course some people patronize the theaters in order to keep warm, but this percentage is small, and generally undesirable. As a fact I believe that the general closing of theaters for one day during the balance of the bad weather period will be of great benefit to some of the small houses, which will make more money by staying closed, but which were afraid to close for fear of losing regular patronage. The big houses paying big rentals are bound to feel it somewhat, especially where contracts have been made for high-rental films, but we are all patriotic enough to take our chances and hope for the best."

Weather Has Disorganized Programs.

Many substitutions have been run in Louisville during the past few weeks on account of blizzards which have blocked railroad traffic, resulting in films failing to arrive. Early last week a heavy snowfall blocked all of the railroads entering Louisville, and nothing was received from Chicago, Indianapolis or St. Louis for a day or more, while traffic was hours late in every direction. The Walnut, Alamo, and other local theaters, had trouble in getting films for advertised shows, and in some of the theaters it has been necessary to swap films around in order to change the bills. Now, however, things are in almost normal shape again, and the situation has been cleared.

Raising $10,000 for Kentucky Soldiers.

Louisville, Ky.—Opening of the new Liberty theater, at Camp Taylor, Ky., erected for the convenience of the soldiers at the camp, was delayed during the recent blizzard by the failure of an Eastern orchestra to arrive in time. This building has a seating capacity of 4,000. Arrangements have been made by the Mayor of Louisville and other leading citizens for a "Smilage Campaign," to sell ticket books to local citizens who, in turn, will give them to the boys at the camp, it being planned to raise $10,000 for the benefit of the theater and the boys from Kentucky, Indiana and Illinois. Talks are to be made from the stages of the local picture theaters and other theaters in an effort to raise the money. Charles Scott, formerly with the Strand and Ben Ali theaters, of Lexington, Ky., was recently named manager of the camp theater, it having been reported several weeks ago that the choice would probably fall to Mr. Scott.

Operator Burned by Ignited Film.

Lexington, Ky.—Thomas Weilman, operator at the Orpheum theater, was seriously burned about the face, arms, right side and back when a large double reel caught fire while running through the projecting machine. Mr. Weilman was some time getting out of the booth, which is reached by a ladder, and was immediatcly removed to the hospital. It is reported that he will recover from his injuries. The fire department flooded the front of the theater with water, which instantly froze, putting the theater out of business until warmer weather is experienced. J. H. Stamper, manager of the house, was unable to place an estimate of the damage.

Exhibitor J. V. Lang Shot from Ambush.

Louisville, Ky.—John V. Long, of Newport, Ky., who has been conducting a moving picture theater at McRoberts, Ky., in the coal-mining district, was assassinated by an unknown slayer on Jan. 7, while accompanied by four companions. They were returning from Jay's Fork. They were members of a bowling club, composed of Lang's cousin, Ray Lang; Lawrence Day, Henry Gillie and Tom Short. They had made the trip to Jay's Fork, and were returning along the trail in Indian fashion, with Lang following Short, who was in the lead. Several shots were fired from ambush, one striking Lang in the leg, and another in the temple, the man living two hours, but not regaining consciousness. Members of the party stated that Lang had spoken to an unidentified man who had accosted him while on the trip, but that occurred some time before the shooting, and no clew has been obtained as to the slayer.

Missouri Picture Shows Closed Two Days

State Fuel Administrator Discriminates in Favor of Road Shows—St. Louis Exhibitors Protest but Show Their Patriotism.

By Mary Moore, 6035 Kingsbury Block, St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—The motion picture exhibitors of this city are up in arms over what they declare is a gross discrimination and injustice brought about by the City Fuel Administration and State Fuel Administrator Crossley in ordering all motion picture houses closed for two nights each week, Mondays and Tuesdays, while the so-called legitimate theaters are allowed to run every night.

So heated was the discussion in the office of the State Fuel Administrator immediately following the issuance of the order, that one of the exhibitors and a member of the Fuel Board almost came to blows.

League Was Willing as Volunteer.

When the proposal to save fuel was first made to the exhibitors, a meeting of the league was called and it was agreed that the motion picture theaters could easily close two nights a week if the necessity of war so dictated. The league authorized its president, Joseph Mogler, to notify the Fuel Board that if "theaters" were to be called upon to do their bit out of patriotic motives, two days' closing was satisfactory. Mogler so notified the Board.

Saturday, January 19, the Board made known its rulings in a proclamation, and to the surprise of the motion picture exhibitors it was found that the discrimination had been made. A 10 P. M. closing hour was ordered on the motion picture houses and legitimate theaters for all nights, but the motion picture theaters were the only theaters ordered closed altogether on Mondays and Tuesdays.

The news of the ruling stirred the film men to quick action. A committee of fourteen of the biggest exhibitors in the city was formed hurriedly with William Sievers as chairman. This committee actually marched on the office of the Fuel Board.

Exhibitors Protest But Show Patriotism.

"Our appearance here is demanded by your ruling," Sievers told the Board, "and we will not tolerate for a minute any insinuation that our present protest is indicative of a lack of patriotic co-operation. We are not protesting against the closing order; we are demanding that the discrimination between moving picture theaters and 'legitimate' theaters be changed at once."

Secretary C. H. Weiser of the Fuel Board told Sievers that inasmuch as the legitimate houses were playing road attractions, the loss to them would be heavy if they were ordered to close on a given night.

"Is your fuel order to protect one industry and neglect another or is it to save fuel, irrespective of possible loss?" asked Sievers.

The question put blandly to the Board caused great commotion in the room, during which loud talking and shouting completely drowned out all possible chance of logical settlement of the question. The exhibitors' committee left the Fuel Board without getting satisfaction, and the order went into effect. There was some talk of court action in the name of fairness, but several of the managers decided that in view of the patriotic necessity of saving fuel at this time, it would be better to avoid anything that might interfere with the fuel order, despite conditions.

Accordingly, on Monday and Tuesday nights, January 21 and 22, St. Louis saw its hundreds of motion pictures closed in the name of patriotism, while twelve so-called legitimate theaters ran wide open with increased business because of the absence of all other entertainment.

Exchange Must Hustle to Keep Up.

St. Louis, Mo.—When A. D. Flintom, district manager for Paramount, passed through St. Louis on his way to his home, Kansas City, a few days ago, he found the entire local office force at work Sunday morning the same as on a week-day.

"With the exigencies of war the business in the St. Louis district is so great that it surprises the most optimistic," said Manager George McKean. "The fuel-saving closing days and the 10 P. M. nightly closing order has not been felt financially by the film companies, although adjustments made necessary to meet changed openings are many. We look forward to the greatest year in motion picture distribution."

The adjustments referred to by McKean have been experienced by every film manager in the city. An unusual condition prevails in the district, in that the Mississippi, the dividing line of the Garfield fuel order, is at the district's door. The St. Louis offices distribute to all points in Illinois, just across the river.

In this field and in Illinois, the closing night was, as ordered, originally on Monday. When this order was made, the managers set about to arrange for either Sunday or Tuesday openings in Illinois points.

No sooner had the proper adjustments been made to comply with this order than the date of closing was fixed by Garfield for Tuesday and the whole scheme of release had to be changed in Illinois.

To save both time and possible entanglements, the film managers had also readjusted the Missouri dates along with those in Illinois, and had just completed this work when the Monday and Tuesday night closing order was made for St. Louis and Missouri. The entire scheme of release had to be changed again.

D. M. Thomas, manager of the Fox office here, left town himself to handle the situation for his company in Illinois and Missouri. He visited Quincy, Hannibal and even as far north as Keokuk, Iowa, on this mission, stopping at the larger intermediate points.

George Applegate Transferred.

St. Louis, Mo.—George Applegate, of the Fox office, has been transferred to the Cincinnati office from St. Louis.

"Tuesday" Ruling Helps Exchanges.

CINCINNATI, O.—The eleventh-hour ruling of the Fuel Administration that moving picture shows would be allowed to take their enforced "holiday" on Tuesdays instead of Mondays came as a welcome surprise to exhibitors and exchange men alike. The news was especially welcome to exchanges for the reason that it will make Monday, the day on which they are supposed to close down, an idle day for them, as no programs will have to be shipped out to arrive on Tuesday.

Cincinnati Theaters Pay for Full Week.

Cincinnati.—Operators, ushers, doormen, musicians, and other theatrical employees will lose nothing in a majority of cases by the enforced closing of the houses on Tuesday, as the leading exhibitors have for the most part announced that they will pay wages for the "holiday" as usual. The Walnut, the Strand, the Family, the Bijou, and a number of other Cincinnati houses hastened to make this announcement in order that employees might be freed from the natural worry resulting from the possibility of a wageless day.

Good Business in Cincinnati Suburbs.

Cincinnati.—Vindication of the belief that the war and war taxes would cut little figure with the moving picture houses under normal conditions is seen in reports from several of the suburban exhibitors to the effect that business has been splendid lately.

Liberty Camp Theater Ready.

CAMP GORDON, GA.—Final preparations for the opening of the Liberty theater at Camp Gordon are being made by Manager Percy Weadon, who has erected a big electric sign over the doorway of the playhouse preparatory to the coming of the first attraction on February 1. The big sign can be seen for considerable distance over the camp in all directions.

Assistant Manager Milner Weds.

Atlanta.—Even weddings must wait on business at times. Mr. B. B. Milner, assistant manager of the Vaudette theater, completed his duties shortly after 10 o'clock checked up his day's receipts on a recent Friday night, and then hurried to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Killebrue, where he and Miss Ramah Killebrue were united in marriage.

"Birth of Nation" Comes Back.

Atlanta.—With a long line waiting the sale of seats for "The Birth of a Nation," opened at the Criterion at 10:45 o'clock, Thursday morning, a specially constructed box office being used. An option is held by the house for the second week should the success of the engagement warrant its staying over.

A Great Treat for All Ware County.

Waycross, Ga.—From January 24 to 28 there was to be shown free in various rural schools in Ware County a most interesting and instructive set of motion pictures illustrating the cattle breeding industry. Besides an interesting story film by the Delco Light Company. The Georgia Hereford Breeders Association has furnished some beautiful pictures of cattle. The United States Bureau of Animal Industry will have film showing how farmers may improve their cattle and free them from the tick, with details of the different vats. Other organizations will furnish films showing dairy and beef cattle, and pictures of butter making of interest to every farmer's wife.

Fine Show at the Auditorium.

Atlanta.—Six thousand people attended the Auditorium show Sunday afternoon, January 19. In addition to the regular vaudeville and regimental band concert moving pictures had its place on the program. "The Cossack Whip," with Viola Dana in the leading role, was donated by George Kleine Company. The Southern Paramount furnished a comedy, "Pullman Brides," while the Select donated the "Lone Wolf," featuring Hazel Dawn and Burt Lytell.

Interesting News Briefs of Trade.

PARIS, ILL.—Miss Lucile O'Hair, of the Vitagraph Company, has been visiting her parents in this city, and co-incidental with the screen presentation of "The Count and the Guest," in which she starred, appeared in person at the Majestic theater.

New Holland, Ill.—J. C. Synder has closed his moving picture theater here.

Joliet, Ill.—John Cushman and C. N. Fox, who have been operating the photoplay house, have discontinued the use of pictures and turned the house into the home of a stock company.

Springfield, Ill.—Certificate of incorporation has been issued to the Arizona Film Company, of Chicago; capital stock, $50,000. Incorporators, George J. Dehn, W. H. Botham, and Fred Gerlach.

Litchfield, Ill.—James Grieg, who operates the Royal theater, has purchased the Lyric from James Gehlman, and will operate both houses. Gehlman was owner of the Lyric but a short time, having purchased it from S. E. Pirtle, who retired from the Litchfield field to devote all of his time to his theater in Flora, Ill.

Urbana, Ill.—Paul Casey, who has enlisted in the aviation corps, has sold the Colonial theater to Charles D. and Herbert M. Motz, of Chicago. The house will be under the management of Herbert Motz, who has been an exhibitor for nine years.

Hillsboro, Ill.—John Grubbs, of Fairfield, is reported to be contemplating the erection of a moving picture and vaudeville theater here.

East St. Louis, Ill.—Redmon's Majestic theater has installed a $15,000 pipe organ and photoplayer.

Taylorville, Ill.—The Empress theater has started daily matinees, the shows beginning at two o'clock and running until eleven. A bid for transient patronage is made by announcing that patrons waiting for trains may leave word at the box office, and they will be advised if their train is late. Special attention is paid to taking care of parcels for shoppers.

Cheyenne Notes of Trade.

By John C. Fleming, Box 273, Cheyenne, Wyo., with the Wyoming Tribune.

Cheyenne to Have Big New Theater.

CHEYENNE, WYO.—The Moore & Greaves Amusement Company of Denver, now running the Atlas and Lyric theaters in Cheyenne under the management of M. H. Todd, are erecting a new $40,000 theater, which is about half finished. This theater when completed will be the finest picture playhouse in Wyoming, seating close to fourteen hundred people and having a stage large enough for the working of vaudeville and small road shows. The policy and name of the new theater has not yet been announced.

New Manager at Amuse Theater.

Cheyenne, Wyo.—Mr. B. W. Morris, formerly of the Rialto theater, Denver, Colo., has accepted the management of the Amuse theater of Cheyenne. Mr. Morris started by booking Paralta and Jewel services.

New Theater in Glenrock, Wyo.

Glenrock, Wyo.—Cities spring up over night in the oil fields of Wyoming and Glenrock, Wyoming, like many another, is the latest town to become large enough to support a picture playhouse. As soon as the wiring and heat are installed, Glenrock's new theater will begin entertaining the oil drillers of the big muddy oil field. Glenrock is located in heart of this district.

Owner of Cheyenne Theater Leaves.

Cheyenne, Wyo.—Carl Ray, president and secretary of the Amuse theater, left for the east to attend to business and visit Minneapolis' famous Ice Palace the later part of January. Mr. Ray makes his home in Los Angeles.

Minneapolis Mondays Are No Longer Blue

Big Crowds Fill Picture Theaters in Twin Cities on Fuelless Day When Nobody Worked but the Exhibitor and His Aids.

By John L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Administrator Garfield's famous coal conservation order kept the exhibitors hereabouts busy, and this last word might be written in caps, too. Three weeks ago exhibitors were in hot water on lighting their theater exteriors. However, the new fuel-saving ordinance shook them up considerably. When it was first announced that the theaters would be closed on Mondays some exhibitors grumbled a little, pulled out their heat bills and began to smile. Monday, they figured would be the ideal day for them to be forcibly closed. After reading the newspaper stories about the Monday closing a majority of the local and out-of-town exhibitors flocked to the exchanges to cancel service and to rearrange bookings. This done they returned home to plan out what they would do with a "holiday" when news came from Washington to the effect that the theaters would not close Monday but Tuesday. The change caused a second run of exhibitors to the exchanges, and film bookers perspired freely trying to keep pace with the demands for cancellations and changes. Various local exchanges adopted hurried measures to satisfy exhibitors who had put up deposits on Tuesday pictures. Exhibitors seemed satisfied that the exchange men would treat them fairly.

The first "store-closed, theater-open" Monday brought about astonishing results in Minneapolis. The many thousand people sought the various theaters to kill time, and in a majority of downtown theaters, for the first time in history, Monday's business equalled and, in some cases, eclipsed Sunday's mark. It is believed that the Tuesday closing will educate the public into coming to the theaters Mondays, as well as the other week days, in the future.

Heretofore Mondays have proved blue for local exhibitors. One downtown Minneapolis exhibitor estimated that Monday's business alone would average about 75 or 80 per cent. of the amount previously recorded on Monday and Tuesday together, which comes close to proving that Doc. Garfield's alterative was a good thing. Some local film exchanges were closed up Monday, while others were not. Local exchanges, it appears, were not quite sure whether they were expected to close the same day theaters did or whether they were to close the same day with factories and stores.

Associated Theaters, Inc., Progressing.

Minneapolis—The Associated Theaters, Inc., organization has transferred its business offices from 810 Lumber exchange to the fourth floor of the Film Exchange building, where President C. W. Gates and other officers and directors hold forth daily. President Gates has sold his theatrical interests at Aberdeen, S. D., and will devote most of his future time to help build up Associated Theaters, Inc. Secretary Thomas Jacob Hamlin of the new organization left Minneapolis for New York Jan. 19, to attend a meeting of producers, and was very confident that he would be able to announce some "big things" when he returned to headquarters. (He paid us a friendly visit in New York. Come again.) The Associated Theaters, Inc., organization reports rapid progress.

New Garrick Gives Popular Benefit.

St. Paul, Minn.—Manager Theodore L. Hays, of the New Garrick theater here, is getting some excellent publicity and creating many new photoplay patrons this week by displaying "The Italian Battelfront" feature, booked through the Supreme exchange, Minneapolis, and giving the proceeds to various war organizations. Nespapers and different clubs have given Mr. Hays theater some extraordinary boosting.

Many Theaters Suddenly Lose Light.

St. Paul. Minn.—Several local theaters suffered a sudden shock last week when a main feed wire at a local heating and lighting plant broke and darkness fell upon them. Reports indicate good business at local theaters on the fuelless Monday.

Twin City Exchange Personals.

R. L. White, formerly with George Kleine's exchanges at Kansas City and Des Moines, and E. W. Reese, formerly with the Universal at Kansas City, have joined the Minneapolis Universal exchange.

Manager Pearson of the Universal exchange, conferred with Joe Brandt for two days at Chicago last week.

A. S. Dowd, New York sales representative of the Universal, and Nate Schaeffer, his assistant, have returned East after spending about three weeks in Minneapolis boosting Universal service and assisting Mr. Pearson in the reorganization of the local exchange.

Julius Bernheim, former Bluebird manager, Minneapolis, has joined the Chicago Universal exchange forces.

J. F. Flaherty, Chicago's Hoffman-Foursquare manager, spent several days with Manager George Law of the Minneapolis branch last week.

Manager Harry Graham, of the Kleine Minneapolis exchange, has returned from a week's trip through northern Minnesota.

Patrick Howard Carey, manager of the local Educational Film Co. exchange, has announced the rights to distribute that firm's products in Iowa have been obtained by the Minneapolis branch.

A. A. Hixon, Paralta exchange manager, has booked Henry B. Walthall's Paralta feature, "His Robe of Honor," in the Blue Mouse theater, St. Paul, giving that theater two week's Paralta bookings in succession. Mr. Hixon plans visiting Iowa and Wisconsin exhibitors shortly and states that he intends to "Paraltize" the territory.

North Dakota Theater Notes.

VALLEY CITY, N. D.—C. A. Robinson, who took the Grand theater from N. A. Burch, made plans to have his new acquisition supersede the Rex, which he had been conducting. The plans included the entire redecoration of the house, the changes embodying the best of the ideas which Robinson has secured in inspecting the leading photoplay houses in the country.

Canton, S. D.—The Empress theater is now under the management of Floyd J. Cooper.

Yankton, S. D.—The Yankton and Lyric theaters have been taken over by A. L. Hess, of Watertown, S. D., and J. H. Hess, of Fargo, N. D.

Jamestown, N. D.—The North Dakota Defense Council will spend $14,000 in exhibiting throughout the state films which are supplied by the United States Bureau of Public Information. Among the thirty exhibitions was the opera house, which included in its plans a free matinee for school children under fourteen years when accompanied by adults with tickets.

Indianapolis Theaters Shut Down 4 Days

All Amusement Houses Closed by Marion County Fuel Administrator—Many Families in Dire Need of Coal—Little Saving Effected.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Life with the motion picture exhibitors of Indianapolis for the last ten days has been one huge nightmare. Dr. Henry Jameson, Federal fuel administrator for Marion county, ordered all theaters—motion picture and legitimate—churches, clubs, lodge halls, saloons and poolrooms closed from Tuesday evening, Jan. 15, until Saturday evening, Jan. 19, in the effort to conserve fuel. The theaters closed their doors soon after the order was received and they kept them closed until 6 o'clock Saturday night.

However, when the conservation lid did blow off Saturday night, it blew off with a bang. All Indianapolis, it seemed, thronged the downtown streets to hear the "explosion," and a majority were "on the job" long before the doors opened at 6 o'clock, because a lot of pent-up energy had to be expended.

Comedy programs were the most popular and love films didn't seem to get much attention. It was a gloomy night, otherwise, that greeted the surging theatergoing crowds. Only a lighted window here and there, a few electric signs, nearly every store window dark, and even the moon, itself, only half full.

January 14, however, things reverted back to the gloomy side again as exhibitors observed their first showless Tuesday under the orders of the Federal Fuel Administration. Although there was some little grouching over the inconvenience of the order, it was generally accepted cheerfully and patriotically.

Meeting Held at Circle Theater.

Plans for a getting together of the Administration and the theater men were perfected at a meeting at the Circle theater on the night the order was issued. It was attended by Robert Lieber and S. Barret McCormick, of the Circle; B. V. Barton, Charles M. Olson, H. K. Burton, Edwin Booth and W. H. Shewmaker, of the Central Amusement Company, operating the Lyric, Isis and Alhambra theaters; H. A. Keene and Edward Sourbier, of the Bijou, Keystone and Palms; E. H. Bingham, M. D. Cross and H. E. Cohen, of the Colonial, Regent and Crystal; Shafe Zeigler, of the Park; Nelson Trowbridge, of the Murat; A. F. Miller, president of the Indianapolis Theater Managers Association and manager of English's opera house, and Roltare Eggleston, of Keith's.

All of the men were perfectly willing to comply and co-operate with an order issued by the fuel administrator if it would aid in saving lives or suffering incident to the coal famine, but they were unanimous in the opinion that the closing of the theaters would not effect much saving in coal.

A committee composed of Robert Lieber and S. Barrett McCormick, of the Circle; Edward Sourbier, of the Palms and Keystone, all motion picture houses, and Roltare Eggleston, of Keith's, and A. F. Miller, of English's, called on Dr. Jameson bright and early Wednesday morning. They informed him that the theaters are heated from exhaust steam from the plants of the Merchants Heat and Light Company and the Indianapolis Light and Heat Company, and claimed that this steam is a byproduct of necessary generation of electricity.

They also argued that the heat allowed by the fuel administrator to heat the stages for the purposes of keeping the water pipes from freezing would be sufficient, when the curtains go up, to heat the auditoriums, as the body heat of the people helps to raise the temperature. They further showed that more than 1,200 theater employes would be thrown out of work by the order.

Theaters a Refuge from Cold.

Many people had been going to the movies in the afternoons and evenings to keep warm, the committee pointed out, and added that a number of the photoplay houses had been permitting people to sleep in their places all night during the extreme cold weather. One member of the committee presented figures showing that closing order would cost the Government about $1,500 a day in war taxes.

"I do not want to cut off your business if doing so does not affect a material saving in coal," said Dr. Jameson. "However, when we talked this matter over we decided that those large rooms used too much heat. When you realize, gentlemen, that there are from 1,000 to 2,000 families in this city whose homes are without fuel of any kind, you can see that something had to be done. I am not saying that this order is absolutely correct. Here's what I'll do for you:

"You go to the lighting and heating companies and have their engineers prepare statements giving facts about the heating systems used in your places. Bring in the facts concerning the number of people who are thrown out of employment by the order, and other phases of the question, and I will confer with you an hour each afternoon until Friday.

"Then if you can make it plain that there is no saving of coal I will let you open. I will make an order affecting a future operating of the house probably Friday afternoon or Saturday morning."

The committee submitted statements from the lighting and heating companies showing that all of the downtown theaters are heating from exhaust steam, a byproduct of the manufacture of electricity.

The theater men argued that in serious times like the present it is a real benefit to the people to have places of amusement to go to. They estimated that in normal times 20,000 people attend the theaters and motion picture houses each night, which results in a fuel saving in their homes, and that more than 1,200 people are employed at the theaters. The theater men protested that they should not be "made the goats" when other businesses which could be closed were allowed to remain open.

A Touch of Paternalism in Dr. Jameson.

Dr. Jameson said the closing order was not only meant for the saving of fuel but also to give the clerks and working people an opportunity to get home and help themselves. In his opinion, people who are out of coal should have the opportunity to arrange for their coal supplies in the daytime. He argued that the theaters are not a necessity and added that the people who might attend the theaters would be better off in their homes.

Then, on Friday afternoon, Dr. Jameson issued an order saying that all places affected by his order would be permitted to resume normal conditions again at 6 o'clock Saturday afternoon in order to comply with the order of Dr. Garfield.

Iowa News Letter

Many Exhibitors Feel Blue.

DES MOINES, IA.—With so many trains already removed and prospects of many more going, with the state in the grip of below zero weather, and with coal at a premium the exhibitors of Iowa are blue. They are sticking close to business, and seldom come to the exchanges.

Des Moines Film and Supply Buys All Mutual Supplies.

Des Moines.—Stanley J. Mayer, manager of the Des Moines Film & Supply, purchased all of the supplies that the Mutual exchange had on hand at the time of their removal to Omaha.

Fairfield Theater Destroyed by Fire.

Fairfield.—Word came in recently from Hugh Bennett that the Fairfield theater, of Fairfield, which he recently took over, was totally destroyed by fire early in the week. His loss was total, and no insurance.

R. L. White Goes to Minneapolis.

Des Moines.—R. L. White, who recently joined the sales force of the local Metro exchange, has resigned, and is leaving this week for Minneapolis, where he will act as specialty man for the Jewel Productions, Inc., and First National Exhibitors' Circuit pictures.

"The Whip" Going Over Big.

Des Moines.—Stanley J. Mayer, manager of the local office of the Yale Photoplay Company, has returned from a short trip over the state. Mr. Mayer is jubilant over the success of his picture "The Whip," and is proudly showing a letter from E. M. Henle, of the Palace in Muscatine, a letter that repeats the tale of Mr. Myers, of the Palace in Waterloo, that "The Whip" broke all attendance records.

Jewel Sales Manager in Town.

Des Moines.—Harry Berman, sales manager of the Jewel Productions, Inc., has been in town the latter part of the week conferring with D. B. Lederman and Nicholas Amos. The Jewels will open their Des Moines run at the Casino, Sunday, January 20, with "Sirens of the Sea."

Columbus Jct. Exhibitor in City.

Des Moines.—Doctor Pense, manager of the picture house in Columbus Junction, was compelled to close down for several days last week for lack of coal, and took the opportunity to run down to Des Moines for a call on the exchanges.

Cantonment Theaters Doing Better.

Des Moines.—More troops have been arriving at Camp Dodge, and business at the Herrold theater has increased. The Trilby theater has opened, and also reports business progressing as well as could be expected. Managers of the cantonment houses are both confident that with the arrival of the full 45,000 men business will be all that could be desired.

Star Theater Sold to T. H. Tessman.

Dallas News Letter

By Douglas Hawley, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

Conditions in Oklahoma Good.

DALLAS, TEX.—L. Remey, manager of Texas Goldwyn branch, is gradually thawing out. He was up in Oklahoma during the blizzard of January 10, when fourteen below was registered, and the snow was some feet deep. Mr. Remey declares conditions in the young state are excellent, and that Goldwyns are in excellent demand. W. C. Wood, Lawton, Okla., has taken over a newly completed theater there in addition to one he already controlled. Mr. Remey is proudly exhibiting the new paper on "A Splendid Sinner," with Mary Garden, a new Goldwyn, releases on which are soon expected for Texas.

No "Birth of Nation" Shows Near Colored Troops.

Dallas.—Fearful of race prejudice and because of the number of colored troops at San Antonio camps, "The Birth of a Nation" has been forbidden at San Antonio by Col. Rucker, in charge of amusements as affecting Texas camps. The picture had been booked for a week's run at the Texas army city. Jack Abrams, representing the Epoch Producing Company, is doing well in Texas with "The Birth" and "Intolerance," the latter having been recently booked at a number of the larger cities.

Vitagraph Texas Men Meet.

Dallas.—Vitagraph salesmen met with Western Division Manager H. D. Naugle and Manager J. B. Dugger at the Dallas branch January 25 for a sales conference. "Over the Top" and "The Woman and the Web," Vitagraph's newest serial, were the chief topics. The travelers included J. L. McKinney, central Texas; H. E. Fulgham, Oklahoma; G. W. Thornton, west Texas; Joe Berliner, southwest Texas; Jack Petit, south Texas, and G. L. Randal, Arkansas.

Theater at Marietta Damaged by Fire.

Marietta, Okla.—The Pickford theater, J. Renfro, proprietor, was badly damaged by fire January 16. A blaze was discovered in the ceiling during the progress of a performance, but the audience filed out in good shape. Temporary quarters have been secured while repairs are being made. No films were destroyed.

Two Beaumont Exhibitors Visit Dallas.

Beaumont.—Harry Barr, of the People's theater, Beaumont, and J. A. Holton, of the Port Arthur Amusement Company, Port Arthur, have returned to south Texas from a booking trip to Dallas during which they took on some new features for their houses.

Two West Texas Exhibitors Visit.

Dallas.—Despite the fact that they are located in the so-called "drouth district," H. B. Robb and B. S. (Bright Sunshine) Adams, of Robb and Rowley, Abilene, San Angelo, and Big Spring, Tex., were visitors at Dallas exchanges during the week of January 20. They say business is good, considering, and that the recent snow didn't help west Texas much. High winds prevailing blew the precipitation into drifts, and the hope that it would soak into the thirsty ground wasn't realized. "But it always rains sometime' in Texas," says "Bright Sunshine," with the addition, "we should worry." He's an optimist with a big "O" if there ever was one.

Picture Theater Notes from Texas.

Naples, Tex.—Thomas C. Wickenden has sold his motion picture show here, the Hippodrome.

Waco, Tex.—Further arrangement for the soldiers near the camp has been arranged for in the way of picture shows, and a big building has just been completed for Mr. Stevenson of Galveston. The building is 45x155 feet. It is located on the Bosqueville road, southwest of headquarters.

Houston, Tex.—Henry C. Stearn is the new manager of the Isis theater. He succeeds Maurice Barr, who has been transferred to New Orleans as manager of the Strand theater there.

Waco.—David Goodlett, who several years ago conducted a theater at Georgetown, has opened at this place. Mr. Goodlett is well known and popular.

W. F. Sonneman, of the Rex theater, has returned from a short trip to Dallas, where he booked some new attractions, including Vitagraph features.

F. Sandekos, of the Central Film exchange, is a pioneer in exchange service locally, and reports good results from his venture.

Kansas City Theaters Accept Fuel Decree

New Two-Day Closing Order Met Without Protest or Worry—New Theaters Building and Business Is Good—Few Houses Have Been Closed.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The order of the Missouri fuel administrator in closing moving picture theaters in Kansas City two days a week—Mondays and Tuesdays—and at ten o'clock each night, was met by the Kansas City exhibitors in the same manner that they have met all other moves directed for the benefit of the Government.

The film business in Kansas City is good just now, too. There are now four new houses in the course of construction. Three of these will be the last word in motion picture theaters and will be large houses. The fourth will only have about 400 seats and is in an old building.

To date only two first class theaters have closed in Kansas City. One of these is open several nights a week. The other is planning reopening as soon as the coal crisis passes. In Kansas City, Kansas, a theater which has been closed for four months has reopened. In Rosedale, a part of Kansas City, Kansas, only one theater has closed.

Some of the theaters are practically rejoicing over the fact that the state has relieved them of the necessity of continuing on two days, which have quite frequently cut down the week's profits, while on the other hand, there are several exhibitors who have contracted for a week for one picture, and consequently are hit hard. The local theaters more than did their share in the floating of the two Liberty Loans, the Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. subscriptions, and other patriotic affairs.

Kansas City Censors Are Irritating.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Kansas City Goldwyn office is experiencing more troubles with the Kansas City censor board. "Thais" was booked to the New Center theater for the week of January 19. The Kansas City Board of Review rejected the picture. An injunction restraining interference of the showing of the picture was obtained by the attorneys of the film office. The city demurred the injunction and the judge of the Circuit Court sustained the demurrer. He gave as his reasons that the board is a body legally constituted to pass upon pictures, and that the ordinance creating it was a valid and good one, and that he highly approved of the work done by the board. However, a change of venue was secured and the judge of that court has the case under advisement.

The testimony is being made by affidavits. This picture passed the Kansas State Board of Review without a cut, and was commented upon by the board as one of the most beautiful pictures ever reviewed by the board. Incidentally, the city board revels in law suits, and recently put the "Birth of a Nation" promoters to rout. The Kansas Supreme Court recently handed down the decision that a review of motion pictures rejected by the state censor board cannot be held to be other than final by Kansas courts, under the state law, and that relief for producers must come through a showing of fraudulent and arbitrary power by the state board.

R. C. Cropper Out of Standard.

Kansas City, Mo.—R. C. Cropper, president of the Standard Film Corporation since its conception, has resigned his office, which has been left temporarily open. The Standard is an independent booking company handling state rights productions and Billy West comedies, as well as several other series of pictures. Phil Ryan, formerly sales manager of the company, has been made general manager. F. J. Warren is secretary and treasurer. R. T. Tannehill handles the publicity for all the offices.

A meeting of the office managers of the Standard was held at the Kansas City office of the company January 14 and 15. The meeting, conducted by Phil Ryan, general manager, was attended by J. W. Rachman, Omaha; C. W. Stombaugh, Minneapolis; F. J. Fegan, St. Louis, and J. R. Rogers, Chicago.

J. L. Shipley Gets Important Position.

Kansas City, Mo.—John L. Shipley, who for the last three weeks has been manager of the Kansas City office of the Standard Film, has resigned, to act in Des Moines as the personal representative of A. H. Blank, head of the Blank Enterprises, controlling theaters in Omaha, Des Moines, Davenport, Ia., and Marshallville, Ia., as well as several state rights productions. Mr. Blank is also district manager for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Before taking the management of this office, Mr. Shipley was personal representative of Richard Robertson, manager of the Kansas City Goldwyn office. He is succeeded by L. Herman, formerly manager for Mutual at Omaha, Neb.

Kleine Pictures at Garden Theater.

Kansas City, Mo.—Pictures released by the Kansas City Kleine office will be shown at the Garden theater here beginning the week of February 3. The management of the theater and the Kleine office are going to show pictures at this house on a percentage basis, similar to that now in effect with road shows. The first picture to be shown is "I, Mary McLane, in Men Who Have Made Love to Me." This will be followed by "Quo Vadis." Super-features only will be shown.

This theater has a seating capacity of 2,200. It is one of the prettiest theaters in the city, its interior having a garden effect, which is really artistically beautiful. It is managed by William Quigley, who has held the lease for several years.

Theater and Trade Notes.

Kansas City, Kan.—The Idle Hour theater here has been reopened by W. E. Brown, after being closed for four months.

Rosedale, Kan.—The Ricksecker theater here has been closed by the owners of the theater.

Lawrence, Kan.—Mrs. C. H. Carey, owner of the Varsity theater here, has bought out Sherman Williams, owner of the Bowersock theater here, and will operate both houses.

Kansas City, Kan.—"The Planter," featuring Tyrone Powers, has been booked to the New Center theater in Kansas City for the second week of February.

Kansas City, Mo.—R. H. Fairchild, traveling for the General Film out of Kansas City, was a visitor in the local office of the company January 19. He has been on his territory in northern and western Oklahoma since Christmas.

Many Tab Shows in Oil Field Cities.

Kansas City, Mo.—O. A. Bandy, Select salesman in Oklahoma, returned to the Kansas City office after a two weeks' trip and reports that the exhibitors in that territory have nothing to fear from the coal shortage, as many of them are located where there is an abundance of oil, gas and wood. Films find opposition in the oil towns where two out of every three houses have what are known as tab shows or light musical shows composed of from seven to ten persons who travel from one oil town to the other. The greater part of the show is feminine. The audiences in these towns are 65 per cent. men, of which 90 per cent. are transients, consequently the conditions are such that these shows furnish an opposition to the picture theater manager.

In spite of such conditions, though, the Oklahoma exhibitor is prospering, and only accidents can bar him from showing regularly.

Strand Theater Sold to M. L. Markowitz

San Francisco House Owned by the Graumans Sold to One of Best Known Film Men on the Coast—Will Direct It Himself.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Ber keley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—One of the most important theater transfers that has taken place in this city in several years was consummated about the middle of January, when the Strand theater was purchased from Sid and D. J. Grauman by Morris L. Markowitz, general manager of the California Film Exchange. This theater was conducted for years as a part of the Sullivan & Considine vaudeville circuit and later was taken over by Sid Grauman, who transformed it into a straight moving picture house about a year ago, installing a fine organ and making many important changes. It is a very handsome house, with a seating capacity of 1,758, and is located in the very heart of the downtown amusement district, on Market street, opposite Mason.

The new owner is one of the best known moving picture men on the Pacific Coast and is one of the pioneers in the film exchange business in this territory. He founded the California Film Exchange, and under his guidance this has grown in the past nine years to a commanding position among local film exchanges. The Strand theater will receive his personal attention and will be conducted along the same lines as formerly, with Leo Weinberger continuing as house manager. The consideration in the deal is placed at $100,000, this covering the leases on the entire property.

Sid and D. J. Grauman have left for Los Angeles, where a large theater has been in course of erection for them for some time, and which will be ready for occupancy at an early date. They have been connected with the amusement business in this city for many years, D. J. Grauman being a pioneer moving picture exhibitor, and will be missed in local trade circles.

New District House Planned.

San Francisco.—Sam Levin, who formerly owned the Haight and Sunset theaters, and who recently sold these to take over the Grand theater, in the Mission district, intends to erect a moving picture theater at Ninth avenue and Clement street, in the Richmond district. He has just purchased a lot and will erect a theater having a capacity of about 2,500. Mr. Levin plans to go East shortly to look over some of the leading houses of the country to secure ideas to be incorporated in this theater.

Alhambra Becoming a Distinctive House.

San Francisco.—The recent change in ownership and management of the Alhambra theater, on Market street, near Mason, has brought with it a change of policy, and the new ideas introduced by Manager Al Nathan are serving to make it one of the most distinctive of San Francisco's downtown playhouses. Universal productions are being offered here and are being advertised and presented in a manner that is proving a revelation to others who are using this service. No type is used in even the smallest display advertisements of the house, only printed cuts from drawings. The lobby, which has been remodeled, is filled with display cards in colors, made by one of the leading artists in this line. An especially fine piece of work which recently attracted wide attention was a thirty by forty inch cubist picture of Mae Murray, displayed when "Face Value" was the attraction.

"Blue Jeans" Making Big Hit.

San Francisco.—The Strand theater recently concluded a one-week run on "Blue Jeans" and played to more people in this time than during any week since it went to straight pictures a year ago. The production was advertised for a full week in advance by the big electric signs on the Marquis. When shown at the New Mission theater the ushers and doormen were dressed in blue jeans and several roosters confined in the lobby also wore garments of this description.

Pantages Books L-Ko Comedies.

San Francisco.—The management of the Pantages Theaters circuit has completed arrangements for showing L-Ko comedies in its houses at San Francisco, Oakland and Salt Lake City, and negotiations are under way for showing these in its theaters throughout the United States.

New Kleine Releases Please.

San Francisco.—W. J. Drummond, who recently returned to the coast to take a position with the George Kleine system, has already made a brief trip through the northern territory and will soon cover the southern field. "Brown of Harvard" has been booked to the Rialto theater for the week of March 3 and will also be shown at the Liberty theaters of Fresno and San Jose; Goddard's J Street theater, Sacramento, and the American and Alameda theaters of Oakland and Alameda. "Uneasy Money" will be shown at the Tivoli during the week of Feb. 17, while "Men Who Have Made Love to Me" will be shown shortly at the Oakland and Alameda houses of R. W. Midgley and the San Jose and Fresno houses of James Beatty. Glenn Hurst, of the Grand theater, Reno, Nev., was here recently and booked all of these attractions.

New Manager for Casino Theater.

San Francisco.—The Casino theater, which has been conducted since its opening day by Robert Drady, is now being managed by Lester Fountain, for years manager of the Hippodrome theater at Los Angeles.

San Franciscans Home from New York.

San Francisco.—Herman Wobber, manager of the Paramount-Artcraft interests, and J. A. Partington, manager of the Imperial theater, have returned from a trip to New York. The extremely cold weather experienced interfered with some of their plans for sight-seeing and visiting houses, but they had an enjoyable and profitable trip, despite the drawbacks.

December Business Nearly a Million.

San Francisco.—Tax returns for December just made public by Collector of Internal Revenue Justus S. Wardell indicate that theaters, moving picture houses and other places of amusement took in $979,204.50, of which ten per cent. went to the Government.

Select Offices Remodeled.

San Francisco.—Since H. H. Hicks took over the management of the local branch of the Select Pictures the offices have been remodeled and transformed into the open type for the convenience of exhibitors. The traveling force of this concern is meeting with good success on the road and business is described as being highly satisfactory.

San Francisco Briefs.

The Class A theater at Sutter and Fillmore streets has been sold by Mrs. Muir to C. A. Riffe.

Moving picture equipment is being installed in the Army and Navy Y. M. C. A. on the Embarcadero.

Edward H. Kemp recently shipped a Motiograph projection machine to Mr. Hertzberg, who conducts the Apollo theater at Shanghai, China.

M. E. Cory, representing Jewel, recently made a highly successful trip through the Sacramento Valley, booking the "Man Without a Country."

J. R. Tillman, formerly with the General, at Seattle, Wash., has been transferred to the local office.

Northern California Notes.

Sisson, Cal.—A moving picture house will soon be opened by A. Bascom.

Exeter, Cal.—The Exeter theater has been opened by C. V. Cook, this being a new fireproof house, with a balcony.

Turlock, Cal.—The Turlock theater is to be sold, as George Bailey expects to be in the army shortly.

San Jose, Cal.—A. M. Miller is now in charge of the T. & D. theater, having succeeded Nick Turner.

King City, Cal.—Alfred Goetz, of the Novelty theater, has installed an electric generating plant of his own.

Seattle News Letter

By J. S. Anderson, East Seattle, Washington.

Business Getting Better in Willamette Valley.

SEATTLE, WASH.—G. A. Metzger, manager of the Film Supply Company, which handles Universal films in the Northwest territory, and C. M. Hill, manager of the Portland Artcraft-Paramount office, came up from Portland to attend the meeting of the Northwest Film Board of Trade on January 15. Mr. Hill stated that business was improving rapidly in the Willamette valley, known to film men as the poorest part of Oregon, and added that after the first week or two Oregon exhibitors had found that the increased prices caused by the admission tax was not seriously affecting their business. He said that he had just persuaded two more exhibitors to raise from 10 to 15 cents.

One Seattle Exhibitor Finds Pennies Ready.

Seattle.—D. Geddes, manager of Ye College Playhouse in the University district, is one of the few exhibitors of this territory who raised his price the exact amount of the admission tax. A little over a month before Mr. Geddes had raised admission from 10 to 15 cents. He found his patrons willing to pay 17 and 6 cents, he says. Mr. Geddes recently bought the Green Lake theater from J. L. Alexander, and is using the same price schedule there.

Liberty Theater to Have Rich Interior.

Seattle.—The Liberty theater is being entirely redecorated, both in the main auditorium, in the foyer, and the reception rooms. When it is finished this house will have one of the richest interiors of any motion picture theater in the Northwest.

Policy of the Society Theater.

Seattle.—The Society theater is the only neighborhood motion picture house in the Northwest known to the Seattle World correspondent which charges 20 cents admission. The raise from 15 cents to 20 cents was made when the war tax went into effect, and George Ring, the manager, declares that his business has not suffered by it.

The biggest successes that appear in Seattle are shown at the Society. A sample of the kind of pictures it offers is shown this week in "The Daughter of the Gods," which was run for the first time in a motion picture theater in Seattle only two weeks ago at the Clemmer. All

Hart and Fairbanks pictures are shown at the Society soon after their first run in the downtown theaters.

Cantonment Film as Road Show.

Seattle.—A. A. Singelow has taken a five-reel picture of the National Army cantonment at American Lake, near Seattle, to which he has given the title of "Camp Lewis and the Northwest Prepares for War." Mr. Singelow showed the World correspondent some very interesting lobby displays for it. He will handle it as a roadshow through the Northwest.

Henry Pierson Boosting Big Fox Film.

Seattle.—"Cleopatra" is being handled in the Northwest territory by Henry Pierson under the direction of A. W. Eden, Northwest manager for Fox.

J. J. Parker, manager of the Majestic theater, Portland, has booked "Cleopatra," and intends running it at $2 admission prices.

Seattle Triangle Wholly Reorganized.

Seattle.—The Seattle Triangle office has been entirely reorganized and is now on an efficient working basis by means of which films are being delivered to the entire satisfaction of exhibitors throughout the territory.

Short Notes of Seattle Film Men.

Seattle.—L. A. Todd, Seattle manager for General, has just returned from San Francisco, where he attended a convention of all the managers of General's Pacific Coast offices.

Seattle.—W. L. Loudy, Western representative of the Motiograph, is in Seattle after a tour of the entire Southwest. Mr. Loudy reports business growing better and better as he traveled from San Francisco north.

Seattle.—Fred Mercy, well known theater man of North Yakima, spent this week in Seattle, during which time he invested in a 7-passenger Packard painted a wonderful green. Mr. Mercy reports that construction on his new theater is going ahead very satisfactorily now.

Seattle.—E. Oswald, co-manager with Jack Rantz, of the Dream theater, Bremerton, is at this writing recovering from a six weeks' illness in a hospital.

Seattle.—Al. Rosenberg, secretary of the DeLuxe Feature Film Company, has returned from California, where he spent several weeks' vacation.

E. I. Hudson, salesman for Goldwyn, has just finished one big swing through his territory, and is leaving this week on another.

SPOKANE NEWS LETTER.

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 Eleventh Ave., Spokane, Wash.

First Titan Scenic Film Ready.

SPOKANE, WASH.—The first film to be shown by a permanently organized Spokane picture producing company will be seen in one of the theaters of the city within two weeks, according to an announcement by J. Don Alexander, president of the Titan Feature Photoplay Company.

The picture will be a scenic reel filmed by Charles Dreyer, technical director of the new concern. Dreyer recently explored the north woods of Canada with his camera and Spokane moving picture fans will be the first to witness his efforts.

Washington Company Signs Up W. H. Dietz.

Spokane, Wash.—W. H. Dietz, famous football coach and experienced motion picture actor and director, signed a contract Thursday, January 10, with the management of the Washington Motion Picture Corporation by which he will become actively associated with this industry and will make Spokane his home.

Exchange Man on Portland Conditions

Admits That His Own Exchange Has Not Given Service Above Reproach and Tells Why—Everything in Good Business Order Now.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Special Representative H. H. Hurn, of Triangle, called on the World correspondent and stated that he didn't like the item that appeared in a recent issue about the poor service the Seattle office was giving to Oregon exhibitors. While Mr. Hurn didn't like the article, he admitted that the service from the office had not at all been above reproach, but that the difficulty had all been straightened out by the employment of W. F. Seymore as branch manager. Mr. Hurn says that he and Mr. Seymore labored for many nights with a corps of stenographers straightening out the tangles in the office due to managerial changes and that now everything is running smoothly in Seattle.

Mr. Seymore is reputed to be an excellent exchange man, and with Mr. Hurn back in the harness as special representative, Triangle customers ought to get the best treatment ever.

The trouble at the Triangle is reported to be due to "politics," where an efficient exchange manager is replaced by a man who has little or no knowledge of the territory. Changes in managers of exchanges every couple of months are ordinary occurences in this neck of the woods and when they do happen and chaotic conditions in serving the exhibitors result, the fact that the situation becomes news ought to enlighten the Eastern heads of distributing companies rather than make them sore.

Films Run Close Together and Make Good.

Portland.—Out on Hawthorne avenue, Portland, are located two theaters about twelve short blocks apart. The Echo, managed by J. A. Bradt, and the Alhambra, managed by W. E. Tebbetts, were bitter competitors for a certain service when it first came into the market. It was given to one of them. However, the other man recently concluded that he wanted those picture, too, so they run in one show first, then follow in the other, twelve blocks away. Business is good in both houses. The fact that they are both in the same district apparently makes no difference. This condition is something new in Portland, where it was heretofore considered poor business to show the same film in theaters within a mile or more of each other.

Nob Hill Charges Fifteen Cents.

Portland.—A. L. Scott, manager-owner of the Nob Hill theater, has finally seen the light. He has raised his prices to fifteen cents for several nights out of the week and indications are that he will make it fifteen cents straight soon.

Athena Theater Closes.

Athena.—F. E. Alderman has closed his theater here. Poor business is the cause, he says. Mr. Alderman took over the Athena theater a few months ago from Lester Martin. This is one of the few places in the state that have been complaining of poor business.

No Chance for George Now.

Portland.—All chances for George Jackson, manager of Mutual, in the matrimonial market are apparently off. He received his draft classification the other day, which put him in Division A of Class One.

Sunnyside Theater Improves.

Portland.—W. A. Ayres, owner of the Sunnyside theater, is another exhibitor who has felt a touch of prosperity of late and he has installed an additional projector, furnished by Pete Sabo. Mr. Ayres runs one of the prettiest little theaters in the central East Side district.

Waite Back from the South.

Portland.—C. E. Waite, branch manager of the General Film Company here, returned recently from a trade conference of coast managers in San Francisco. En route home, Manager Waite stopped at all the cities between the California line and Portland in the interests of Paralta plays and he reports he had no trouble in placing this service up and down the line.

Fred Simonton is working the eastern part of the territory for Paralta and Mr. Waite is personally taking care of the exhibitors near Portland.

J. M. Tally Weds.

Portland.—James M. Tally, manager for Vitagraph in Seattle, came to Portland to be married. And the bride, Miss Florence Flood that was, came from Denver, Colo., for the same purpose. Joe Deitch, spechial representative for Essanay in these parts, was the "best man." Then the bridal party continued on to Seattle.

Strong on Co-operation.

Portland.—Sol. Baum, manager for Bluebird in this territory, and Dean Collins, publicity expert for the Universal interests here, have a plan of co-operation with the exhibitors that is getting results. Mr. Baum occasionally goes out and looks over the local situation, reports to Mr. Collins, who is always ready with exhibiting ideas. These are passed along to the theater man running a certain picture of the service, sometimes in form of advertising copy, press matter, ideas for stunts, or whatever form of advertising seems to fit the picture and the place it is being shown.

Both of these gentlemen have many letters of commendation for their past efforts, and incidentally their exchange is doing business.

A Few of George Bligh's Ideas.

Portland.—George Bligh, of Salem, hesitated a while in Portland en route from Seattle, and expressed a few of his ideas. He still maintains he is strong for vaudeville as an added attraction to pictures and as he has been getting good acts of late, he is feeling quite prosperous. He is also of the opinion that a town the size of Salem ought to have one picture theater that charges a lower admission price than twenty cents. Whether he will open one he did not say, but inasmuch as he controls three theaters there, he is the logical man to do the deed.

Some Pertinent Oregon Briefs.

St. Helens, Ore.—A new theater is building here on a location owned by a Mr. Rutherford.

Portland, Ore.—Exchanges report that Tillamook has been shut off as far as film service is concerned for the past week, due to washouts on the railroad.

Camas, Wash.—W. H. Durham, Grand theater, reports business picking up again since the pickets at the paper mill strike have left their posts.

Portland, Ore.—Ed. Myrick recently gave free admission to Liberty to school children to see "The Man Without a Country."

Critical Reviews and Comments

"A GRAIN OF DUST."

Six-Part Adaptation of David Graham Phillips Popular Story in Crest Picture Features Lillian Walker.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Crest's adaptation of David Graham Phillips' story, "A Grain of Dust," was produced and directed by Harry Revier. It is an artistically made picture, and contains more than one dash of sensationalism that will make it popular with certain audiences. And no matter what a personal criticism might be we have to admit that the production is strong enough in human appeal to make it exceedingly popular with all.

The characterization as delineated in the picture is intensely interesting; and we may add further that the production is not a one-star proposition. Lillian Walker, interpreting the role of Dorothy Hallowell, "the grain of dust," which unpremeditatedly dropped on the intellectual machinery of one Frederick Norman, does an effective piece of work. Yet not more effective is her portrayal of the weak and unprotected feminine than that of the character of Frederick Norman by Ramsey Wallace.

And if one may depart from the usual method of eulogizing the title role we would say that the character of the man Norman not only provides more opportunities to the player but is more interesting by way of analysis than that of the woman who is blown hither and thither struggling weakly against prevailing conditions. The man in the question is of that type, which, possessing a powerful intellect and a selfish nature, strives by peculiar and weak-fibered means, to remove the disturbing "grain of dust," or rather to convert the disturbing element into an avenue which would mean added power and pleasure to himself. The suggestion of the marriage ceremony at the close of the picture removes any objection from the moral standpoint.

Since the entrance of Miss Edith Day, the bright young star of "Going Up" at the Liberty theater, into the production it has been under the control of Carle E. Carlton, president of the Crest Pictures Comporation. Others of the cast are Corrinne Uzsell, James O'Neill, Ralph Delmore, Richard Wamgerman, Jacques Tyrol, Cecil Fletcher, and Elizabeth Tyrol.

"THE HIRED MAN."

Paramount-Ince Production Featuring Charles Ray Delightful Subject of Strongly Human Qualities.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald

WE have learned to look forward with pleasure to the character portrayals of Charles Ray, and we doubt that any of them have been done with more perfection of artistry than that of Ezra Hollins in "The Hired Man." The production, which is in five parts, is based on a story by Julien Joseph and was directed by Victor L. Schertzinger. Furthermore, it is one of the Ince productions and appears on the Paramount program for January 28.

The character allotted to the star in this production is that of a young lad of extraordinary ambitions, who is in the employ of a farmer. In his room he burns the midnight oil studying to pass an examination which will enter him at an agricultural college; and in the meantime he saves the necessary money to pay his tuition fees. The big situation arises when the son of the farmer, who has appropriated funds from the bank in which he is employed, preying upon the sympathies of Ezra, persuades him to loan him the money with which he is about to launch himself on his college course. The brave and truly amusing struggle of Ezra in the face of all sorts of taunts and unpleasantness to hide the disgrace of the son and brother from his employer and the daughter, with whom Ezra is in love, is touching and inspiring. There is a wholesomeness about the production that is pleasing and a lesson in nobility and perseverance that is worth while.

"STELLA MARIS."

Artcraft Presents Mary Pickford in a Beautiful Story Adapted from the Novel by William J. Locke.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE original of "Stella Maris" will never reach any such audience as this beautiful screen version, nor with anything like the power given by Miss Pickford's exquisite interpretations. Words are too feeble and inadequate. The printed story is a poor thing in comparison. It contains a lot of old and insincere adjuncts of plot, a merely clever readjustment of well-known artifice, in type. Suddenly these are transformed, as by the wand of a magician, into a strong and unified story clothed with great imaginative charm, emotionally appealing through what seems to be the finest work Miss Pickford has ever done, the whole rising in dignity to a play of social significance.

The story is an old one, that of a girl kept pure and good in a life so sheltered that she is unaware of the world and its hard struggle, then the bitter disillusion. Such is the theme and the plot so far as the main issue is concerned, with a side one, the contrast of another, similar girl's life of hardship. The idea is vital in so far as it is humanitarian, but the screen version rises far above the novel through pure artistry of development and most of all through a contrast little short of marvelous made by Mary in her dual roles. She is amazingly sincere this time, daring to look positively commonplace and unattractive as a mentally and physically stunted child from an orphan asylum, but she might never have consented to it without the ever-present contrast of her lovely self as Stella Maris. Those who have thought her merely pretty have a new think coming to them in this play. Those who like her straight through will sit amazed to note the transformation she succeeds in making of her personality. One might reasonably conclude from this exceptionally fine performance that personality consists of conduct, clothes and the way both are worn.

I have watched the career of Mary Pickford since I reviewed the one-reel stories in which she made her first appearance—that was under Griffith in the old Biograph days, and I have never seen her in a more satisfying performance, true to life and to art, dramatic rather than theatric. Even as quiet little Stella Maris, whose happenings are not those of intense action, she succeeds in affecting the heart and the mind of the spectator by some exquisite portrayals of character. She seems to have become transformed by her own experience and study to a creature of finer spiritual force, though she loses none of her dainty charm as a comedienne. The play should be "the thing" to achieve lasting success, but Mary is one of the very, very few who can make most dramas appear secondary to their interpreter.

The Strand presentation was admirable, the house packed with a long waiting line outside, and the audience profoundly interested from beginning to end.

"THE WIDOW'S MIGHT."

Paramount Presents Julian Eltinge in an Entertaining Comedy by Marion Fairfax. Directed by Cecil De Mille.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AN ingenious and entertaining comedy by itself is "The Widow's Might," but it is obviously made to suit the versatile and clever Eltinge. It fits him almost as well as do the marvelous gowns he wears, but it rises above the vehicle class through intrinsic merit and bright glimpses of human nature on its weak and erring side. It is an entertaining story adapted by nature and artifice to the dual personality of the star performer.

Julian as Dick Tavish is a young man of wealth and position, who has gone back to the land among real men in the West, and he is living the life of a ranch owner when he finds that he and his friends have been sold property of faulty title by an agent who conspired with the owner to defraud unsuspecting purchasers. Tavish goes straight at the heart of the trouble, visits a fashionable hotel in search of the crooked owner of the land and finds in the same hostelry his ideal, a girl whose face he first saw and loved on a calendar. The property owner, the villain of the story, is, of course, engaged to this very girl, and Tavish has a double incentive to expose his villainy.

Peculiar complication is that of an attempt to blackmail the calendar girl by leaving a young baby at the door of her room. Tavish, now posing as Princess Martini, a widow of five years standing, very thoughtlessly declares the baby to be her own, to the scandal of the entire establishment, and complications thicken in the fashion of old fashioned farce comedy of the stage. It is all very amusing, however, and carried on with ease and good nature by the lead that plausibility ceases to be a virtue. The laugh is there—what care we? So we laugh on to the end, well assured that the atmosphere will be clarified. The story suited a large house at the Rialto, and it will suit wherever shown to a bright audience or to one which needs brightening.

"THE OTHER WOMAN."

Astra-Pathe Subject, in Five Reels, Features Peggy Hyland, Milton Sills and Anna Lehr.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS offering is an interesting example of a moderately entertaining story enacted by a capably balanced cast, which makes the most of the situations depicted. There is no special novelty in the plot, which revolves about the familiar triangle situation of a man and two women, one of the latter his wife, and the second the "other woman."

The "other woman" in this case is a pretty country girl who has come to the city to study art. She falls in love with the married man, and the latter returns her affections. The sympathies of the observer are not entirely with the man in this case, as his wife is a sweet, pretty creature, whose only fault is that she loves him too well. It is also a strain upon the better nature of the observer when the husband insists upon a divorce after the death of the child, with his wife in a state of helpless grief.

As it results in this case the country girl becomes acquainted with the wife, and the latter confides in her that her husband loves another. This brings up the strongest situations in the story, wherein the wife shows the country girl the letters she herself has sent to the husband. The country girl then has a change of heart, and brings the couple together again, she herself returning to her old home.

The cast is pleasing, with Peggy Hyland, Milton Sills, and Anna Lehr in the leading roles. The story is by Frederick Arnold Kummer, and the adaptation by Philip Bartholomae.

"A MOTHER'S SIN."

Earle Williams Has Lead in Five-Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature That Is Mildly Dramatic.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AT the start, "A Mother's Sin" bids fair to tell an interesting and vigorous story, but it falls short in the punches. This five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, with Earle Williams at the head of the cast, was written by Hilda Sharpe, and directed by Tom Mills. It is a story of English life, and, barring the American rail fences, reflects the country and customs of the subjects of King George with sufficient truth. At several stages of the action the spectator is led to believe that the characters are about to "mix it up" in lively fashion, but the author always succeeds in finding the mildest way out of the difficulty.

Patrick Yardley, the son of the wealthy owner of Meldon Hall, is allowed to follow his own bent and spend a liberal allowance at will without suspecting that his father hates him and is planning to cut him off with a shilling and leave the bulk of his property to a nephew. Patrick returns home, and the unpleasant truth is told him, the elder Yardley explaining that the boy's mother deserted him, and he has hit upon this way of satisfying his wounded pride.

Patrick has a goodly share of pride and grit of his own, and in the end defeats his cousin in an attempt to win the heroine and comes into his fortune. Earle Williams makes a handsome hero, and acts the part in the subdued manner called for by the lack of dramatic situations. Miriam Miles has little to do as Celia Graham, but indicates ability for much more important things. Ernest Maupain is forceful as the elder Yardley, and Denton Vane is a correct representative for Vincent Tessier. Fred Peters is excellent as the Rev. Francis Vivian. Charles Horton, Louise DuPre, and Eleanor Lawson act the other characters.

"THE DIVINE SACRIFICE."

Five-Part World Photoplay Features Kitty Gordon in Emotional Drama of Considerable Strength.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ALMA SPEER BENZING, the author of "The Divine Sacrifice," a five-part World photoplay starring Kitty Gordon, having started out to secure a strong emotional appeal for her story, has done so by selecting for the leading characters a number of persons who are much more concerned in following their own desires than in obeying the laws of convention. The plot twists and turns in obedience to the will of its maker until it arrives at the big scene, and gives a mother a chance to deny her motherhood so that her child may not learn that she was nameless and the girl's marriage with a young man of good position be prevented.

To make matters more interesting the man the woman marries is the son of her mother's real husband by his first wife, and, although no blood relation, is still one of the family. There are other complications that are somewhat unusual, and the most of the people in the play lead anything but humdrum lives. All of the trouble springs from the refusal of the wife of a prominent physician to curtail her social engagements and increase the number of her family, consequently the husband finds consolation with another woman. There is drama aplenty in the picture, and its emotional appeal will strike a responsive chord in the heart of many a spectator, especially of the gentler sex.

Kitty Gordon plays the self-sacrificing mother. The part is right in her line, and she has little difficulty in meeting all its requirements. She also wears her usual selection of distinctive frocks. Next to the star's performance the most interesting appearance is that of Vera Beresford as June. The young girl is the daughter of Kitty Gordon, and has had but little acting experience. She shows decided promise, holding herself well in hand, and giving an intelligent impersonation of the character. Jean Angelo as David Carewe makes the doctor sympathetic and likeable. Celene Johnson as Helen Carewe, Frank Goldsmith as Rupert Spencer, Charles Dungan as Dr. Merwin, Mildred Beckwith as Linda, Ethel Burner as Timmie, and Harry Fraser as Robert Spencer complete a satisfactory cast. The direction by George Archainbaud and Philip Hatkin's work with the camera bring excellent results. Several of the exterior scenes are full of beauty.

TWO CHRISTIE COMEDIES.

"Five to Five" and "Many a Slip" Amusing Comedies Not Above the Ordinary, but Clean.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"Five to Five."

AN old situation has been used as a basis for a Christie comedy entitled "Five to Five." Nevertheless it contains some laugh-getting business, and with Ethel Lynne and Bob Vernon in the leading roles emanates a quality of brightness.

The story of the comedy treats of a domestic situation in which the wife is master, making the young husband carry the brunt of the home cares such as washing the dishes and minding the baby. The majority of the comedy is extracted from the situations brought about by his failure to obey. The climax occurs when he sneaks away to the club with the baby, intending to be in his place by the cradle knitting at five o'clock when his wife returns. Five to five, however, finds him still at the club, and in his rush to get home on time he forgets the baby, which is sent later by a messenger boy causing complications which end happily.

"Many a Slip."

The theft of a bit of jewelry at a reception is the point about which the comedy of this picture centers. The fiance of the young lady from whom it is stolen is the first on whom the thief places the stolen article, after which it is kept amusingly in circulation until it finds its way into the pocket of the girl's father, who confusedly calls off the detective who is making a search of the guests. Finally he is detroused by the thief in an effort to gain possession of the jewel. Betty Compson and Billy Mason are the featured members of the cast.

"BEAUTY AND THE ROGUE."

Mary Miles Minter Featured in American Comedy-Drama of Moderately Entertaining Quality.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ONE of the most interesting characters in "Beauty and the Rogue," an American five-part comedy-drama, is played by Orral Humphrey. This is the role of Bill Dorgan, an ex-convict, whose amusing attempts to "go straight" provide a good deal of the comedy of the play. Mary Miles Minter is the featured member of the cast, and as such is not less charming than usual, well dressed, fresh and youthful. The production, which has been directed by Henry King, is not particularly strong, but is moderately interesting as presented. The atmosphere, largely rural, is pleasing, and Miss Minter, in the course of the picture, appears in ballet skirts and dances briefly.

In the story, Roberta Lee, daughter of Thomas Lee, a wealthy mining man, is interested in the uplifting of ex-convicts. Bill Dorgan, who has "done time," happens across her path, and is installed as assistant gardener at her father's place, after which he manages to rob Roberta of her jewels. Roberta, in a sojourn at her father's ranch, works up a romance between herself and a young man who appears to be always engaged in fishing, while she herself poses as a boy in overalls. Bill Dorgan, wandering into the country, sells Roberta's brooch to the young man, who, by the way, is her father's general manager traveling under an assumed name. The young man presents the brooch to Roberta, and an arrest is made, which is rectified when Bill Dorgan is finally collared after rescuing Roberta from pals who have kidnapped her. As a reward for this deed he is released through an appeal from Roberta.

"THE SUPERSTITIOUS GIRL."

Third of the "Girls You Know" Series Slightly Less Entertaining Than First Numbers.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald

IN the third number of the James Montgomery Flagg "Girls You Know" series, produced by the Edison Company, the superstitious girl affords considerable amusement to the audience. This number, by the way, is not quite up to the previous two in entertaining quality. It holds its own, however, from the standpoint of the well-made picture.

The superstitious girl presented in the picture is the most rabid of her kind—no superstition that we have ever heard of seems to have escaped her, from the drinking of bubbles off her coffee to the breaking of seven perfectly good mirrors to avoid the ill-luck which is supposed to follow the breaking of an individual mirror. This girl's uncle and aunt, not knowing of her failing, invite her to visit them and from the moment of her arrival at the railroad station are pestered with her continual harping on the same thing. Finally, after throwing salt over her shoulder into the butler's eyes and doing various other seemingly outrageous things she perpetrates the mirror-smashing act, which not only leaves the house almost mirrorless, but ends in her being shipped home by the next train.

"THE BULL'S EYE."

New Universal Serial Touches High Water Mark for Continued Stories of Action on Western Plains.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

SOME six or eight instalments in the forthcoming Universal serial, "The Bull's Eye," have been seen by the reviewer. It may be set down thus far as a highly interesting and exciting yarn in which there is action and fighting and scenic beauty without stint. It has not quite the striking novelty of the serial, "Liberty," in the matter of locations, but has a great deal of the same irresistible movement, and features as the hero Eddie Polo, who appeared in that serial.

Action is the predominant note in "The Bull's Eye." It fairly sizzles with gun fighting and hand-to-hand encounters between sheepmen, cattlemen, and a band of rustlers headed by an outlaw named

Sweeney. Eddie Polo is ranch foreman for a man named Clayton, who has a beautiful daughter. At the beginning of the story the foreman goes East to bring home Cora Clayton from college. Trouble starts while the travelers are still on the train, certain big interests desiring to keep the foreman away from the ranch for a time. Eddie Polo performs some daring "stunts" from time to time in the various instalments.

Vivian Reed appears as the daughter of Clayton, and around her much of the action centers. She is beloved by the foreman and a young secret service man played by Hal Cooley. Sweeney, the outlaw, also complicates the situation by taking a violent fancy to her. Sweeney is portrayed by Noble Johnson, who has done much good work in similar parts. William Welsh reappears after a long absence from Universal films as a villainous cattle dealer named North.

"THE STUDIO GIRL."

Select Star Series Features Constance Talmadge in Third Offering—A Bright and Enjoyable Number.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

EXCELLENT character work is in evidence throughout this delightful subject. There is scarcely a portrayal in it that is not true to life, and accordingly entertaining and convincing. The story is an adaptation by Paul West of "La Gamine," a comedy by P. Veber and H. de Grosse. It is simple in plot, merely picturing the mad exploit of a daring young country girl who falls in love with an artist and hides in his automobile to escape marriage with a country youth she does not love.

There are at least two miracles in this story. One of them is that the country girl does not come to grief, for she took grave chances, and another is that the artist-hero really did not want to run off with the girl at all. It is worth going a long way to see a photoplay in which an artist-hero has no ulterior motives. The events which transpire in this story have a touch of the risque, but the situations are handled with such delicacy and charm that there can be no offense.

Constance Talmadge is at her best in this offering. She will be remembered as the actress who carried off that striking bit of feminine elan as the mountain girl in "Intolerance." Her work in this, particularly in the closing reels, is just as pleasing. Earle Foxe is proficient as the artist; Johnny Hines is amusing as Obediah, and Gertrude Norman and Isabel O'Madigan do well as the maiden aunts.

Some of the humor of this has the Paul West flavor, and to him, as well as the director, Charles Giblyn, is due much credit.

"THE FIGHTING GRIN."

Franklyn Farnum in Five-Part Bluebird Comedy Races Through Comic Complications by the Score.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A PAIR of authors, R. E. Bradbury and F. H. Clark, are responsible for the story of "The Fighting Grin," a five-part Bluebird photoplay produced by Joseph DeGrasse, and featuring Franklyn Farnum. Charles Kenyon furnished the scenario. The situations are all of the comedy variety, and speed is the word once the action starts. Of course, it is a love affair that starts things.

Billy Kennedy has a rich father from whom it is an easy task to abstract money. For example, one day the young man asks for ten thousand dollars with which to start a taxi-cab company. Father hands over the check, and then requests the name of the place where his son is going to start the business. "Venice," laughs Billy, as he runs out of the office.

In spite of such a bringing up, Billy has good material inside, and when he finds that Margie Meredith's father is opposed to him puts up a fight for the girl that is usually alluded to as a "good stiff mill" by sporting editors. His adventures before he makes Margie Mrs. William Kennedy turn him into a tramp and a bandit, and, for a short space of time, leave him bobbing about in his B. V. D.'s.

Admirers of Franklyn Farnum will find him playing a lively version of his favorite role in "The Fighting Grin." As an irresponsible young chap with too much money, an excess of high spirits and generosity, and the average amount of brains he acts a well known and popular character in screen fiction with the relish and vigor that contribute largely to its success. Edith Johnson is pretty and vivacious as Margie, and other adequate impersonations are offeerd by J. Morris Foster, Charles H. Mailes, and Fred Montague.

NOVEL TRIANGLE FIVE-REELERS.

"The Hopper" Is Made from the Meredith Nicholson Story and "Limousine Life" Features Olive Thomas.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Hopper."

EVEN a scenario cannot be too careful in picking out its parent. "The Hopper," a Triangle five-reeler, having been created in story form by so accomplished a writer as Meredith Nicholson has been turned into an excellent photoplay by Jack Cunningham. The plot is novel, full of humorous situations, and will entertain any one with a relish for a well made and unusual story. "The Hopper" is a reformed house-breaker who marries and settles down to chicken farming, and who consents to return to his old profession and "turn a trick" to oblige a young married woman who has married against her father's wishes.

The old gentleman and her husband's father are collectors of antiques, and have quarreled over the possession of an ancient Chinese vase. "The Hopper" steals it as requested, and his act is the means of patching up the quarrel between the two families.

It is all so brightly told and so cleverly acted it will prove a most diverting picture. George Herdandez, Walt Whitman, and William V. Mong are the leading members of the cast; Irene Hunt, Eugene Corey, Lillian West, Louise Durham, Peaches Jackson, and Thomas Kurihara playing the other roles. Thomas N. Heffron has directed the picture skilfully, and William Reinhart has been equally successful with the camera.

"Limousine Life."

This five-part Triangle is well called "Limousine Life." It is from a magazine story by Ida M. Evans, and is an amusing satire on the simple village maiden who comes to the great city and falls a victim to its alluring temptations. Minnie Wills, the heroine, is a second cousin to the artless young woman from the tall grass made famous in the song, "Her Golden Hair Was Hanging Down Her Back." Minnie hails from "Three Oaks," a real town about fifty miles out of Chicago, and runs away to that wicked but dazzling town, leaving a honest-hearted lover to mourn her departure. She obtains a position in a fashionable modiste's shop, and starts in on a career that spells early ruin in the ordinary run of such tales.

Taken up by a notorious young millionaire whose specialty is trapping innocents like herself, Minnie works things so that he spends a raft of money on her, finally offers her marriage, and then makes her a present of his limousine for breaking off the match.

The simple small-town belle returns home worldly wise, but unsmirched, a trunkful of the latest style garments, and a roll of yellowbacks to show for the material side of her experience. She marries the faithful one, hurries him back to Chicago with her, sets him up in business, and makes a success of him from every point of view. One day they meet the young millionaire. Minnie greets him cordially, introduces him to her husband, and thanks him for giving them both such a fine start in life. Without doubt the world is witnessing some marvelous social changes at the present time, but such a tale of flying in the face of a long established line of conduct is simply astonishing, and very amusing.

Olive Thomas is the Minnie Wills. She acts earnestly, but by no means exhausts the possibilities of the part. Her support is of good quality, and includes Lee Phelps, Joe Bennett, Lillian West, Virginia Foltz, Lottie DeVaulle, Harry Rattenbury, Alberta Lee, Jules Friquet, and Lillian Langdon. Jack Cunningham made the scenario, Jack Dillon directed it, and A. Nagy was the photographer.

"A HEART'S REVENGE."

Exciting Picture—Story Is Like a Good Serial in Quality—Sets Are Good.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE Fox picture, "A Heart's Revenge," is diverting, and will make a good evening's show. The plot is as full of incidents and exciting climaxes as a serial, and the startling things that happen in it will remind one a good deal of that kind of picture. In no way is it cheaply done, and one noticeable good point is its use of contrasts, both the subtle contrast between dreams and the reality of life which always appeals to our imagination, and the more open contrast between the Orient and the Occident found in different sections of the great metropolises. Sonia Markova and David Herblin play the juvenile leads, with Frank Goldsmith and Bradley Barker as the villains. Helen Long has a most attractive part as a Chinese girl. It was directed by O. A. C. Lund.

The place is Washington. Sonia is the daughter of the Russian ambassador, and is loved by an American lieutenant. This makes a certain ruthless Russian baron jealous. He has dabbled in occultism, and has heard of a drug that, poured in a man's ear, makes him mad through hardening an artery. A certain Chinese man of great learning is living in Washington, and from him the baron gets the drug.

The lieutenant and Sonia are to be married the next day, and then he is to go to France with his unit. The baron invites him to dine. He is drugged, the drop is put in his ear, and he is sent away on a coastwise ship as a hand. A letter to the girl is forged, and she thinks that he has committed suicide. There are a few clues, and soon she begins to pick them up. She visits by stealth the house of the baron and the Chinaman, and suspicion becomes certainty. She is captured by the Chinaman, and escapes by a miracle and with the help of the Chinese girl. There is a sea chase. The lieutenant is found, but he is made, and knows no one. One of the officers has to stun him to overpower him. His skull being fractured he comes to himself, and the happy end is in the next scene. It is certainly exciting and pleasant to watch.

"MOROK."

Seven-Part Version of "The Wandering Jew" Good Example of Foreign-Made Picture.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

FAMILIARITY with the novel, "The Wandering Jew," will show clearly the impossibility of compressing all the characters and incidents of Eugene's Sue's work into seven reels, the story filling a book of over fourteen hundred pages. It became a question of selection, and the Hesperia Films Company's foreign-made version contains a coherent, if greatly condensed, telling of the famous novel. As to the title, "Morok," the picture might better have been called "Dagobert." The courageous old soldier is the most heroic figure in the screen story, and quite as prominent as the villainous animal trainer. The other leading characters chosen are Rodin and the four heirs to the Rennepont fortune—Rose and Blanche Simon, Adrienne and Djalma, curtailed of the D. "The Wandering Jew" appears but twice on the screen, and his connection with the tale is barely indicated.

The story opens with explaining the conditions of the Rennepont will, and confines itself with telling how a secret society, the name of which is not mentioned, tries to wrest the immense sum from the rightful heirs. The two most dramatic incidents of the picture are the killing of the soldier's horse by the tiger, and the scenes at the theater. The first incident is done with a realism that will prove offensive to American eyes, and the substitution of a poor old nag for the horse that really carried the two orphans is readily detected. The dramatic interest of the performance at the Porte Saint Martin does not show Morok's struggle with the infuriated "La Mort" and the killing of the tiger by the East Indian prince, but is turned into a fire scene from which Adrienne is rescued by Djalma. The finish comes quickly after this, and the heirs of Count Renneport receive their fortune.

"Morok" is well acted after the stilted style of the foreign artists. This does not seriously harm the performance, but rather seems to fit the atmosphere of the story. Real locations are used as much as possible, and such an effect as an American producer would have created by building a theater and then burning it down is never attempted. Lovers of Eugene Sue will not be wholly satisfied with this screen version of his best known work, but the large portion of the rising generation to whom "The Wandering Jew" would otherwise remain a sealed book may view the screen version with considerable profit.

"HIS HIDDEN PURPOSE."

To See the Recent Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedy Is to Laugh Heartily and Often.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE reviewer knows not whether the ram who plays such a vigorous part in the recent Paramount-Mack Sennett picture, "His Hidden Purpose," has a sense of humor or not, but anyway he is like hot butter to the crisp, fresh toast of the picture. He has plenty of speed, and he knows when to run and wait and spurt and butt and run again. "Give me no buts" might have been shouted over the shoulder running, but, if so, he was inexorable. He played his part like a good trooper, and we can say this for him—that while he was in the action neither Chester Conklin nor Marie Provost either did any stalling.

He is not the only thing in the picture. There is good action all through. Then in one group of scenes there is Marie Provost just herself alone in nature and a pool. Finally the closing group of scenes has the best comedy storm that ever blew lovers into each other's arms or made it necessary to bail hard to keep an automobile afloat on a mountain road. One specially good thing is a picture of Chester Conklin cranking his Ford way down in the depths under the waves. I'll bet he didn't have much of a water thirst after playing that particular bit. It is a better picture than even "The Kitchen Lady" recently released, and that is making a decided hit.

"THE CLARION CALL."

A Two-Reel O. Henry Story with Walter McGrail in Leading Role.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

IN this two-reel Broadway Star Feature based on O. Henry's story of the same name the title refers to the daily press, which is instrumental in bringing a murderer to justice. The action is not entirely clear, particularly in the first part of the story, and this offering can hardly be ranked with the best of this series.

In order to get his friend Barney Woods out of the way, Johnny Kernan lends him one thousand dollars. Kernan then starts to win Barney's friend, Eileen, but she turns him down. Barney finally becomes a detective, and in investigating a murder ascertains by finding a gold pencil which he had given Kernan that he is the guilty party. He locates Kernan, and is about to turn him over to the authorities, when Kernan recalls the fact that Barney still owes him the money he advanced. Just as Barney is about to turn in his shield he reads in a morning paper an offer of a reward for Kernan's arrest; collects the reward, and, as he expresses it, repays the debt in full with some interest.

Walter McGrail is satisfactory as Barney Woods, and Alice Terry appears as Eileen Murphy, while Bernard Randell gives a good performance of the role of Johnny Kernan. Ashley Miller directed the production.

"THE EYES OF MYSTERY."

Edith Storey Featured in Melodramatic Story—Her First Metro Appearance.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

IN "The Eyes of Mystery," Edith Storey makes her initial appearance on the Metro program. It is a melodramatic offering in five reels abounding in gunplay, and making use of various appurtenances of mystery such as sliding panels, an entrance to a secret stairway concealed by a revolving portrait from which the eyes can be removed, leaving peep-holes for an observer. This subject is an adaptation of a magazine story, "The House in the Mist," by O. R. Cohen and J. U. Giesy, and was released January 21.

Carma, living with her uncle, Quincy, is kidnapped by an adventurer posing as her renegade father. Quincy feigns death, naming as his heir Terbune on condition that he find the codicil hidden in "The House in the Mist" and marry the girl named therein. Carma agrees to stand by her supposed father, and vows vengeance on the intruder. As soon as Terhune arrives various exciting adventures commence, including an attempt by one of the band to murder him. Carma learns that that man posing as her father is actually his murderer, also that Terhune is the one who attempted to rescue her as she was being kidnapped. She endeavors to help him; the impostor incites the moonshiners against him; they attack the house, but everything ends satisfactorily when Uncle Quincy appears with a number of men and rescues the besieged party.

Edith Storey is excellent as Carma, but is capable of better work than the part affords, and Harry Northrup is well cast as her father. Bradley Barker appears as Terhune, Kempton Greene as his pal, Frank Andrews as Quincy, and Frank Bennett as the overseer. The production was directed by Tod Browning, and, while the big scenes are sufficiently exciting, there are a number of faults in the direction, and the construction is weakened by the unconvincing manner in which the heroine overhears on several occasions information vital to the development of the story.

"UNDER THE INFLUENCE."

Attempt to Keep Even with the Fashion in House Furnishing Is Theme of Amusing Drew Comedy.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A NEW idea has been used as a basis of one of the most entertaining of Metro-Drew comedies. "Under the Influence" is the title of the picture which presents an amusing situation in which Polly listens to the advice of a friend and engages a certain Mr. Gumble to refurnish her home according to the latest style in "influence." Antiques were the fashion, and so Mr. Gumble, a very ladylike gentleman with a liking for cocktails, proceeded to place in the Minor home various influences belonging to different periods and nationalities to the tune of several hundreds of dollars. A personal call from Mr. Gumble, when he presents the bill to Henry, affords considerable comedy; for just at that moment a telephone message from her friend aquaints Polly with the fact that the fashion has taken a sudden change, and that on account of the war house furnishings shall be simple and carry the American influence. Needless to say Mr. Gumble makes a hurried exit with the help of Henry, and is told to send for his antiques the following day.

Comments

General Film Company.

THE CLARION CALL (Broadway Star Feature).—A two-reel O. Henry story, the title referring to the call of the press, which, in this instance was instrumental in bringing a murderer to justice. While this offering is interesting, the action is not altogether clear in the early part of the story. Walter McGrail plays the lead, assisted by Bernarr Randall and Alice Terry. A longer review appears on another page of this issue.

PHYSICAL CULTURE SCREEN MAGAZINE NO. 3.—This reel shows various exercises, including a strength test by Bernard MacFadden, styles of swimming illustrated by Henry Elionsky, boxing as related to bayonet practice, exercises indulged in by a baby aged 16 months and jiu jitsu bout between Prof. Allen Smith, now an instructor at Camp Upton, and a Japanese expert.

NEXT (Essanay).—A one-reel slap-stick comedy, dealing with a wife, who, because her husband refuses to fire the furnace, gets a job in a barber shop run by women. Hubby comes in several times, and flirts with the girls, finally his wife waits on him, smears his face with lather and gives him a spanking. There is not much diversity to this reel, much of the action is repeated in different ways, and there is an abundance of hosiery display, this feature being overdone.

Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

WOLVES OF THE RAIL, Jan. 14.—William S. Hart as the leader of outlaws engaged in holding up and robbing passenger trains, is converted and exercises the same force of character on the right side. A thrilling melodrama.

STELLA MARIS, Jan. 21.—A beautiful adaptation from the novel by Locke, an improvement in every detail on the printed version, but made emphatically so by remarkably fine dual interpretations by Mary Pickford, possibly the best work she has ever done for screen portrayal.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE FIGHTING GRIN, Jan. 28.—Lively action is the feature of this five-part comedy which permits Franklyn Farnum to appear as a tramp and a bandit, as well as a young spendthrift. The picture is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Christie Film Company.

MANY A SLIP (Christie).—An entertaining comedy, but not out of the ordinary. Its fun is derived from a situation brought about by a theft of jewelry. The jewel is passed from one to another of the guests and finally finds its way to the pocket of the father of the girl to whom it belongs. A full review will be found elsewhere.

FIVE TO FIVE (Christie).—A rather amusing comedy, based on an old situation. The story treats of how a young wife, taking the master hand in her household, brings about a climax in which the husband takes the baby to the club with him and returns in a hurry to be home when his wife returns that he forgets the child. Funny complications occur which end happily. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Foursquare Pictures, Inc.

THE EAGLE'S EYE (Whartons).—A new serial showing the efforts of German spies in the United States, the foundation of fact upon which it is built was furnished by William J. Flynn, ex-chief of the Secret Service. King Baggot and Marguerite Snow play the leading characters. A longer review was printed in last week's issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

A HEART'S REVENGE, Jan. 20.—A five-reel picture that will make a very serviceable show. It is exciting, is ably set and directed, has fresh interest and is full of interesting things. The quality of the story is not artistic, but it is a kind of picture that has always made good when ably done as here. For a longer notice see elsewhere in this issue.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

A MOTHER'S SIN, Jan. 28.—Earle Williams and Miriam Miles head the list of players in this five-part picture, which has an English setting, has a fairly good story but lacks punch. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Hesperia Films, Inc.

MOROK (Hesperia).—This foreign-made picture is a seven-part screen version of Eugene Sue's celebrated novel, "The Wandering Jew." It is very well acted and the production compares favorably with the usual melodramatic subject made on the other side of the water. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

George Kleine System.

GIRLS YOU KNOW NO. 3 (Edison), Jan. 30.—The third number of the James Montgomery Flagg series, "Girls You Know," is not quite up to the standard of the first two numbers in entertaining quality, but is well made and interesting. It is entitled "The Superstitious Girl," and has been reviewed at length elsewhere.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE EYES OF MYSTERY, Jan. 21.—Edith Story makes her debut under the Metro banner in this five-reel subject, based on a magazine story, "The House in the Mist," by O. R. Cohen and J. U. Giesy. The construction of the story leaves much to be desired. However, there is plenty of action, much gunplay, together with secret panels, a doorway hidden by a portrait, and other appurtenances of mystery. Reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 5 (Gaumont), Jan. 28.—Some of the most interesting scenes in this issue of the Weekly were photographed somewhere in Italy showing the Allies throwing reinforcements along the Piave front. There are also scenes showing the preparations being made for supplying our aviators in France with a sufficient number of aeroplanes. A picture of the famous sculptor Rodin, who died recently and also one of his most famous works, "The Thinker," is interesting.

BEAUTY AND THE ROGUE (American), Jan. 28.—A five-part production, featuring Mary Miles Minter. The picture is moderately entertaining, and of wholesome atmosphere, and takes the form of a comedy-drama. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

OUT WEST (Arbuckle), Jan. 20.—A two-part farce comedy of considerable originality, featuring Roscoe Arbuckle. It is not particularly refined, but some funny and original business has been inserted in the comedy which will be found reviewed elsewhere.

HIS HIDDEN PURPOSE, Jan. 27.—A two-reel Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy that is a scream indeed. Marie Provost has a group of scenes that prudes may not commend, as she is seen swimming as in nature and is chased by a wrathy ram. It is filled with things that will compel laughter and can surely be depended on to fill a theater after word gets around that it is good. A more extended comment will be found elsewhere in this issue.

THE HIRED MAN (Ince), Jan. 28.—One of the most wholesome and pleasing five-part productions on the market at the present time. It features Charles Ray in the character of a young farm lad of unusual ambitions. The production will be found reviewed elsewhere.

THE WIDOW'S MIGHT, Jan. 28.—An ingenious and amusing comedy, with Julian Eltinge in one of the most interesting of his dual roles. Generally bright and interesting.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

COGS OF DEATH (Pathe), Jan. 27.—Episode No. 10 of "The Hidden Hand." This instalment opens with a rather startling resuscitation of the Hidden Hand, after the dynamited chimney had injured him. Other entertaining features are the shooting in the arm of Dr. Scarley by Doris, after he has made an attack upon her, and later the escape of Doris from the Hidden Hand by dropping from a bridge to a moving train.

PICTURESQUE BRITTANY (Pathe), Feb. 3.—A tinted half-reel showing something of the quiet, simple life of this French province. The pastoral scenes are very attractive; various castles and glimpses of the rocky coast are also shown.

BONNETS OF BRITTANY (Pathe), Feb. 3.—This half-reel, shown with the above, contains an interesting study of the lace headgear worn by the natives. The hats and caps are worn by women, girls and children. This entire reel is unusually pleasing for one of its type.

THE LAMB (Rolin-Pathe), Feb. 3.—An amusing one-reel comedy, featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. The burlesque scenes in the wine room are very funny. In these Harold appears as a nonchalant individual who cleans up an entire gang of tough individuals.

THE OTHER WOMAN (Pathe-Astra), Feb 3.—A five-reel subject, by Frederick Arnold Kummer, featuring Peggy Hyland, Milton Sills and Anna Lehr. The plot presents the familiar triangle situation of two women and a man. The "other woman" in this case is a country girl, who came to the city to study art. She wins the husband's love and then renounces it out of pity for the wife. The subject is one of about average strength. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

ARGUS PICTORIAL NO. 7 (Pathe), Feb. 10.—This topical number opens with a pictorial description of oystering in the Gulf of Mexico. The scenes are taken at the Florida oyster fisheries, and show the manner in which the bivalves are gathered and prepared for the market. The next subject shows some interesting experiments in physics, picturing the action of various liquids, such as aniline, in hot and cold water. Following this are microscopic studies of the amoeba, the smallest known form of life, and the thrip and other tiny insects which are found in gardens.

ROCAMADOUR AND THE VALLEY OF LOT (Pathe), Feb. 10.—A picturesque half-reel subject, depicting an old fortified city of France and its charming surroundings. A castle, a bridge and the Road of the Virgin are among the special points of interest. This is in attractive tints.

THE HORSE IN ACTION (Pathe), Feb. 10.—On same reel with above. This is an instructive and at the same time amusing study of the movements of a horse's legs, while walking, trotting and galloping. The pictures are taken very slowly and give the animal the appearance of floating through the air. An enjoyable subject.

THE JUNKMAN (Rolin-Pathe), Feb. 10.—The second of the "Toto" comedies, introducing the clown as a collector of old bottles, rags, etc. He strips an automobile of its parts, after inducing an unsuspecting policeman to aid him, but is afterward forced to give them up. Later he wins the hand of a wealthy girl in competition with a count. The subject is an entertaining one and reveals considerable versatility on Toto's part.

Physical Culture Photoplays, Inc.

ZONGAR (Physical Culture Photoplay).—This good state rights subject is well described by Bernarr MacFadden, who wrote the story and directed the production, as an athletic romance. It is a melodrama, featuring George Larkin, whose ability as a daring actor is known to screen followers. It is in five reels. A review will be found in last week's issue.

Select Pictures Corporation.

THE STUDIO GIRL (Select Pictures).—A five-reel comedy, adapted by Paul West from "La Gamine," by P. Veber and H. de Gorsse. Constance Talmadge is cast as a pretty country girl who hides in the automobile of an artist and flees with him to the city, in order to escape an unwelcome marriage with a country youth. The artist discovers her in his studio and, fortunately for her, proves to be a gentleman. She bewitches him and he eventually marries her. The story is delightfully pictured. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE HOPPER, Feb. 3.—Taken from a story by Meredith Nicholson, this five-part picture is uncommonly entertaining and is acted in the proper spirit. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

LIMOUSINE LIFE, Feb. 3.—Olive Thomas is the star of this five-part photoplay which cleverly satirizes the country girl who comes to the city and is caught by its wiles. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 8 (Universal), Jan. 23.—Women chauffeurs in San Francisco, diet testing in New York schools, a military masquerade at Camp Logan, a washout on the Northern Pacific Railway and other entertaining features are included in this number, which closes with cartoons by Hy Mayer.

CURRENT EVENTS NO. 38 (Universal), Jan. 26.—The effect of the nation-wide industrial tie-up is the opening feature of this diversified number. A mountain wreck, adventures of a British flying corps hero, scenes at the Italian front and newspaper cartoons are also included.

THE GREAT SEA SCANDAL (Nestor), Feb. 4.—A knockabout comedy, by A. F. Statler, featuring Dave Morris, Gladys Tennyson, Sam Appel and Gertrude Astor. The scenes occur on a vessel going to "Mocha and Java" and consist of flirtations of a fairly amusing sort. The plot is not very definite and there is not much point to the action, though it will bring some smiles.

THE BULLSEYE (Universal Special), Feb. 9.—This is the first instalment of a new serial, by Henry McRae and Harvey Gates. It is entitled "First Blood," and introduces the reader to a splendid cast, headed by Eddie Polo, who played in "Liberty," and including Vivian Reed, Hal Cooley, Ray Hanford, Frank Lanning and William Welsh. The latter appears as the villain, a role he has successfully handled many times. The opening scenes give some striking panoramic views of the Western range, and also view the Eastern seminary where the ranchman's daughter is completing her schooling. The hero is sent for her and is abducted from the observation end of the train on the return trip, after desperate fighting. The story, which gets a good start in this number, concerns early warfare between cattle and sheep raisers.

THE LINE OF DEATH (Universal Special), Feb. 9.—Episode No. 11 of "The Mystery Ship." Numerous exciting incidents occur in this number. Gaston and Betty are rescued from the water. Russell and the spies emerge from the wrecked lighthouse and are warned by the Phantom to give up their efforts to obtain the treasure. The Phantom is seen in his mountain laboratory and emerges with his ship, which is also equipped for land travel. The approach of the runaway engine toward the open bridge makes a thrilling feature.

World Pictures.

THE DIVINE SACRIFICE, Feb. 4.—Kitty Gordon and her daughter Vera Beresford are the leading players in this five-part photoplay, which is novel in story and strongly emotional. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

BEAUTY AND THE ROGUE.

American Presents Mary Miles Minter in a Five-Act Comedy Drama of a Burglar Who Simply Would Not Be Reformed.

Cast.

Roberta Lee.....Mary Miles Minter
Richard Van Stone.....Alan Forrest
Bill Dorgan.....Orral Humphrey
Thomas Lee.....George Periolat
Sarah Wilson.....Lucille Ward
Benjamin Wilson.....Spottiswood Aitken
Detective Callahan.....Clarence Burton

Directed by Henry King.

The Story: Roberta was a fashionable and sympathetic uplifter, but, while she took a penitent burglar to reform, she caused the arrest of Dick Stone, who gave her her own stolen jewelry, and he wasn't a burglar at all. Then Bill helps Roberta to escape from kidnappers, and he might have gone on being respectable only Roberta was so busy with Dick that he could not resist temptation—and Calahan wasn't in love, if Roberta was, and the reform movement came a cropper.

For the Program: Marries man whose arrest she causes.
The burglar and the debutante.

Advertising Phrases: The amateur reformer and the professional crook.
Roberta got the wedding ring and Slippery Bill the bracelets.

Feature These Players: Mary Miles Minter as the amateur reformer.
Orral Humphrey as the burglar.
Alan Forrest as Richard.

Stunt Suggestions: For the lobby frame set out a royal flush in hearts and another in diamonds. Below, "Which hand wins? Roberta played hearts, but (King of clubs here) Callahan took the trick. See how it happened in 'Beauty and the Rogue,' with Mary Miles Minter. (Date.)" For a jewelry store arrange a display of diamonds on one side of a card, with a pair of handcuffs on the other. Letter in, "The rings were what Bill wanted, but the bracelets were what he got in 'Beauty and the Rogue' at (house and date). Mary Miles Minter's newest." The poker hand idea can be used for other windows.

Advertising Aids: One style each one, three and six-sheets. Unmounted banner. Half-column cut. Cuts and mats one, two and three columns. Program cut 4x4. Lobby displays 11x14 and 22x28. Slides. Press sheet.

Released January 28.

CAPTAIN OF HIS SOUL.

Triangle Presents Eleanor Talbot Kinkaid's Mystery Story of Love and Big Business, with William Desmond, Claire McDowell and a Strong Cast.

Cast.

Ebenezar Boyce.....Walt Whitman
Rollins.....Jules Friquet
Horace Boyce.....Wm. Desmond
Henry Boyce.....Charles Gunn
Martin.....Jack Richardson
Myra.....Mitzi Gould
Reggie Van Fleet.....Eugene Burr
Annette DeSearcy.....Claire McDowell
Annette's Husband.....Percy Challenger
Mammy.....Lucretia Harris

Directed by G. P. Hamilton.

The Story: Horace and Henry Boyce, each believing the other to be the murderer of the man who wrecked their father's business, fall in love with the same girl, who proves to be the daughter of the murdered man. Henry, seeing that Horace is the favored suitor, in a passion of jealous rage denounces him as the murderer, but it develops that neither is the guilty man, and Horace wins his bride.

For the Program: A tale of tangled lives and loves.
The business wrecker and the wrecker of lives.

Advertising Phrases: Each thought his brother a murderer.
Vampire brings death to man she loves.

Feature These Players: William Desmond as the man who found himself.
Claire McDowell as the vampire.

Stunt Suggestions: For the lobby try and get a copy of Henley's poem Out of the Night, and display the passage in which the title of the story occurs, or have the poem typewritten. The library can aid you in locating the poem. Below, "Horace Boyce heard this poem in the desert, and made himself 'Captain of His Soul.' See the story (date)." For a window show get three large revolvers exactly alike. Use with a card, "Three men had guns precisely alike. One of the men had ruined the other two. Which gun killed him? For the answer see 'Captain of His Soul' at (house and date)."

Advertising Aids: Two styles one-sheets. One each three and six-sheets. Herald in rotogravure. Slides. Lobby displays 11x14 (choice of sepia or tinted) and 22x28. Electros and mats. Press sheet.

Released February 10.

THE DOCTOR AND THE WOMAN.

Jewel Presents Mildred Harris and True Boardman in Lois Weber's Sympathetic Adaptation of Mary Roberts Rinehart's Famous Mystery Story, "K."

Cast.

"K".....True Boardman
Sidney Page.....Mildred Harris
Dr. Hax Wilson.....Albert Roscoe
Carlotta.....Zella Caull
Joe Drummand.....Carl Miller

Directed by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley.

The Story: Mysteries and hospital stories are where Mrs. Reinhart is found at her best, and in "K" she has written of a mystery in a hospital and produced one of the best stories this prolific writer has yet turned out. "K" makes his appearance in a small town, and as "K," Lamoyne gets a position with the gas company. He loves Sidney Page, but Sidney thinks she loves Dr. Wilson, and takes a course in nursing in the hospital in which he is house surgeon. Carlotta, jealous, changes labels on medicine bottles, throwing the blame on Sidney, and it is the mysterious "K" who suggests a new treatment, saving the patient's life. Then comes the climax in Carlotta's own romance, and she reveals the mystery of "K" to save the life of the man she loves.

For the Program: You've read the book, but the play offers new charm.
Mary Roberts Rinehart at her best.

Advertising Phrases: Who is "K"?
Love and jealousy in the house of pain.

Feature These Players: True Boardman as the mysterious "K."
Mildred Harris as Sidney Page.
Zella Caull as the jealous nurse.

Stunt Suggestions: Although the title has been changed, play on the book title. For teasers use, "Who is 'K'?" both in newspaper liners and snipes. Follow up with, "Who is 'K?' Carlotta knows, do you?" For the lobby decorate profusely with cut out letters, either gilt or in various colors. Try the line "'K' means kome to the (house and date) to see the Mary Roberts Reinhart story." Get a card into the library and persuade the book sellers to make window displays of the Reinhart books, particularly "K."

Advertising Aids: One, three, six and 12-sheets. Scene photos. Lobby displays. Heralds in rotogravure. Window cards. One, two, three-column and quarter and half-page cuts. Press book.

THE DIVINE SACRIFICE.

William A. Brady Presents Kitty Gordon in the World Pictures Production of Alma Speer Benzig's Colorful Story.

Cast.

Madelien Spencer.....Kitty Gordon
Helen Carewe.....Celene Johnson
David Carewe.....Jean Angelo
Rupert Spencer.....Frank Goldsmith
Dr. Merwin.....Charles Dungan
Linda.....Mildred Beckwith
June.....Vera Beresford
Timmie.....Ethel Burner
Robert Spencer.....Harry Fraser

Directed by Philip Hatkin.

The Story: Denied children by his selfish, pleasure-loving wife, Dr. Carew finds elsewhere the domestic happiness his own home does not contain, but time exacts payment for pleasures past, and a heart-broken mother is called upon to make the divine sacrifice that her daughter may be spared the consequences of the mother's transgression.

For the Program: A tale from life with the charm of romance.
The absorbing story of a woman's sacrifice for her daughter's happiness.

Advertising Phrases: Mother-love is capable of the greatest sacrifice.
Daughter in real life plays daughter in the films. Vera Beresford is real daughter of Kitty Gordon.

Feature These Players: Kitty Gordon as the errant mother.
Vera Beresford, who is both the film and actual daughter of Kitty Gordon.
Jean Angelo as Carew.

Stunt Suggestions: The want and teaser ads in the press book will work well. For the lobby erect an altar and letter it, "Mother's heart makes the Divine Sacrifice for her daughter's happiness." For the altar flame use alcohol in which a little nitrate of strontium has been dissolved. This will burn with a red flame, and attract no little attention. The flame should be a small one to avoid danger of igniting the clothing of patrons. A similar altar with a larger flame may be used for wagon work. Add such questions as "Why should the woman always pay?"

Advertising Aids: Free advance poster. Two styles each one and three-sheets. One six-sheet. Two-color heralds. Lobby displays 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Slides. One and two-column cuts. Press book.

Released February 4.

THE EYES OF THE WORLD.

Clune Producing Company Presents Jane Novak in the Seven-Part Production Based Upon the Widely-Read Novel of Harold Bell Wright.

Cast.

Sybil Andres.....Jane Novak
Mrs. Taine.....Kathleen Kirkham
Aaron King.....Jack Livingston
Conrad LaGrange.....Monroe Salisbury
Brian Oakley.....Fred Burns
Edward Taine.....Jack McDonald
John Marston.....Arthur Travers
James Rutledge.....Edward Peil

The Story: The young artist, Aaron King, has a great career before him, but the woman of the world in the person of Mrs. Taine, the eternal temptress, endeavors to thwart and deprive him. The love of the pure, young girl, Sybil Andres, is his inspiration to resist the lure. Symbolism is the underlying motive of the story in which other strong types, including a cynical author, an unrepentant roue, and some denizens of the far Southwest of the United States assume prominence to carry on the story to the defeat of vice and the installation of virtue in success.

For the Program: The eternal conflict between the powers of good and evil.

A sermon on life.

Advertising Phrases: Stirring episodes of the clashing social forces of our times.

The triumph of spiritual art over gross materialism.

Feature These Players: Jane Novak; Kathleen Kirkham; Jack Livingston; Monroe Salisbury.

Stunt Suggestions: With a flasher you can make a pair of blinking eyes for the lobby with "'The Eyes of the World' are Upon You. Picturization of Harold Bell Wright's famous novel (date)." Get a card in the libraries and urge the book sellers to display this and other books by Wright with announcement cards. Offer a copy of the book to anyone selling a specified number of tickets good only for this attraction.

Advertising Aids: Full line of paper. Heralds. Slides. Press book. State rights.

FLARE UP SAL.

Thomas H. Ince Presents Dorothy Dalton in a Story of the Early West by the Noted Authority, J. G. Hawks.

Cast.

"Flare-Up" Sal.....Dorothy Dalton
The Red Rider.....Thurston Hall
D. Dave Hammond.....William Conklin
Tin Cup Casey.....J. P. Lockney
Lige Higbee.....Milton Ross

Directed by Roy William Neill.

The Story: Sal was a drudge for the Higbee family, but one night she was sent to the Looloo Bird dance hall to lead Higbee home, and she never came back, for she made a hit and stayed to lord it over the patrons, squaring Higbee's gambling debts. Then one night the famous Red Rider sticks up the saloon, and has a dance with Sal. The next day a new minister comes to town who is none other than the Red Rider, who has come to win Sal. How he does and how they go to start a new and cleaner life is romantic melodrama of the most intense sort.

For the Program: A story of the early West written by a man who knows.

Love comes to all, both good and bad, and sometimes it makes bad men good and good men bad.

Advertising Phrases: Gypsy drudge becomes dance hall queen.

Mock minister reforms mining camp.

Feature These Players: Dorothy Dalton in the title role.

Thurston Hall as the bandit who turns preacher for love of her.

Stunt Suggestions: For a store window display set a dirty gunny sack in the center of a display of silks and satins, with a card, "'Flare-Up Sal' started life in gunny sacking, but soon the best was none too good for the dance hall queen. See how she did it at (house and date)." The sack in such unusual surroundings will prove a strong attractor. Your local druggist will show you how to make a lycopodium flare with a spirit lamp. Set it behind a lobby card for the production, and if you cannot get a small boy to work it have your doorman look after it in spare moments. The flare coming above the frame will attract attention to the display.

Advertising Aids: . Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Rotogravure. Photos 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Ten cuts each on star and production, one to three columns wide. Mats. Slides. Press book.

Released February 4.

THE HEART OF ROMANCE.

William Fox Presents June Caprice in the Adventures of a Rich Heiress and a Struggling Young Writer. Story by Frances Crowley.

Cast.

Eloise Jackson.....June Caprice
Harvey Greyson.....Bernard Thornton
Judge Stafford.....George Bunny
Jerry Gray.....Joseph Kilgour
Mrs. Kibbie.....Lillian Page
Joe Bernheim.....Jack Martin
Jack Dearborn.....Jack Raymond

Directed by Harry Millarde.

The Story: With a budding author's optimism, Harvey Greyson tells the impatient rent collector that he will have plenty of money soon. He means that he is going to sell his manuscripts, but Judge Stafford, Eloise's guardian, decides that he is counting upon her interest in him to make a rich marriage. He persuades Eloise to go through the pretense of bankruptcy to test Harvey, and Eloise, sure of his faith, consents. She carries the deception so far that she gets a job as chorus girl, and if Harvey had not happened along just in time the "angel" of the show might have made the story end differently.

For the Program: The heiress planned the bankruptcy, but Fate managed the rest.

The tragi-comedy of a society heiress and a struggling author.

Advertising Phrases: Test of love nearly ruins young girl's life.

Tastes poverty to test love.

Feature This Player: June Caprice as the heiress.

Stunt Suggestions: Use this window card in a book store, with a few stills, "We sell books. That is more than Harvey Greyson seemed able to do in 'The Heart of Romance' at (house and date), and yet he was happy. See why." For a lobby attractor make a cover for one of your frames about six inches deep and wired for lights. Cover with white paper on which is painted a red heart as large as the space permits. Tear out the center, turning the torn pieces upon themselves, and tacking lightly with glue. Paint this under side red as well. Use no lettering on the heart, but let the opening disclose title and stills for the attraction. The unlettered red heart will attract more attention than one lettered with the title. People will come in to see what it is.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Slides. Mats. Press sheet.

Released January 27.

HER BOY.

Metro Presents Effie Shannon and Niles Welch in an Original Five-Act Story of Mother Love and Patriotism by H. Carey Wonderley.

Cast.

Helen Morrison.....Effie Shannon
David Morrison.....Niles Welch
Virginia Gordon.....Pauline Curley
Charlie Turner.....Pat O'Malley
Col. Gordon.....James T. Galloway
Rev. Mr. Kimberly.....Charles Riegel
Dr. Swift.....Charles W. Sutton
Oscar Schultz.....William A. Bechtel
Gretchen.....Baby Violet Axzell

Directed by George Irving.

The Story: David Morrison is his mother's idol, and when he becomes engaged to Virginia Gordon her last hope seems about to be realized. Then comes the war. David insists upon enlisting, but his mother's pleas at last prevail. The selective draft follows, and once more David sees a chance. The terror-crazed mother seizes upon one last hope. Before the draft board she declares David to be illegitimate—born more than a year after the death of her husband, and therefore not yet twenty-one. Horror stricken, David enlists under another name, but at last the mother sees the light, and confesses her subterfuge, giving her boy to the country he loves so well.

For the Program: A story of mother love that for a time was stronger than honor.

Denied son's legitimacy to save him from the draft.

Advertising Phrases: A rarely intimate picture of cantonment life.

Mother love that feared no shame.

Feature These Players: Effie Shannon as the desperate mother.

Niles Welch as the boy.

Pauline Curley as his sweetheart.

Stunt Suggestions: For window work use real, dried or artificial spiders with, "See the acting spider in 'Her Boy,' an intensely absorbing story of mother love, at (house and date)." Get cantonment pictures and mount several for window cards with, "'Her Boy' is there—is yours? Intimate pictures of camp life are one of the features of this absorbing Metro picture of mother love at (house and date)." For the lobby use flags and any military equipment you can borrow.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Press sheet. Ten-minute novel for newspapers. Lobby sheet. Slides. Heralds. Cuts. Lobby displays 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Press sheet. Filler sheet.

Released January 28.

THE HOPPER.

Triangle Presents a Delightfully Fast Moving Little Play of China, Children and Collectors.

Cast.

Mang, the serpent.....Thomas Kurihara
Wilbur Talbot.....George Hernandez
John Wilton.....Walt Whitman
Muriel Wilton.....Irene Hunt
Roger Livingston Talbot...Eugene Corey
His son.....Peaches Jackson
The Hopper.....William V. Mong
Mary.....Lillian West
Humpy.....Louis Durham

Directed by Thomas N. Heffron.

The Story: Old friendship was not proof against the collector's envy, and when Wilbur Talbot digs up a most unique Chinese vase it costs him Wilton's friendship. But their children marry, and are disinherited. Then Muriel has a great idea. Chance sends her a burglar, and she hires him to steal the vase and a saucer that her father highly values. The Hopper gets the saucer without trouble, but Wilton is before him at the Talbot home, and while the two collectors are fighting the Hopper calmly walks out with the vase. It results in the reunion of the two families, but it looks as though it might mean the police court for them all.

For the Program: The reformed burglar who had to go back to his trade.
While collectors fought thief walks off with prize.

Advertising Phrases: Had to steal to atone for abduction.
Sent thief to rob her father's home.

Feature These Players: Irene Hunt and the resourceful Muriel.
William V. Mong as the Hopper.

Stunt Suggestions: Use a not too large chinese vase for a window display if you can obtain one, with a card state that "This rare vase started a feud between two old friends, and only its theft brought about a reconciliation. See all about it in 'The Hopper' at (house and date)." Attach a vase to a card for lobby display and letter in, "Would you let a little thing like this (vase here) embitter your whole life, lose you your best friend and your daughter, and keep you from your grandchild? See how the Hopper settled the quarrel (date)."

Advertising Aids: Two styles of one-sheets. One each three and six-sheets. Herald in rotogravure. Lobby displays 11x14 (choice of sepia or colored) and 22x28. Slides. Cuts and mats. Press book.
Released February 3.

THE HOUSE OF GLASS.

Clara Kimball Young and Her Own Company Present a Screen Version of Max Marcin's First and Greatest Stage Success.

Cast.

Margaret Case.....Clara Kimball Young
James Burke.....Pell Trenton
Harvey Lake.....Corliss Giles
Lawyer McClellan.....Edward Kimball
Director Atwood.....James T. Laffey
Landlady.....Josie Sadler

Directed by Emile Chautard.

The Story: Margaret Case seeks to live down the errors of the past, and in marriage she finds happiness and security until her ancient enemy again crosses her path, and she realizes that life is like a house of glass in which there is neither security nor seclusion.

For the Program: A play that swept from coast to coast.
Clara Kimball Young in one of the great stage successes of recent years.

Advertising Phrases: The house of glass is built on shifting sands.
She sought to hide in a house of glass.

Feature These Players: Clara Kimball Young as Margaret Case.
Corliss Giles, Pell Trenton, Edward Kimball, and Josie Sadler, all of whom have been starred or featured in other plays.

Stunt Suggestions: With some second-hand window sashes you can build a house of glass in the lobby, displaying a window card with the playing date inside, or using a cut-out. If you have a cracked frame glass use it to cover a one-sheet, adding to the damage if it is not already broken badly enough. Offer a ten-admission ticket for the most ingeniously built house of glass built by a boy under sixteen, and display the entries in some local store window.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one and three-sheets. One each six and 24-sheets. Half-sheet window card. Die-cut heralds. Lobby displays 8x10, 11x14 and three 22x28, including one of star. One, two and three-column scene cuts. One-half, one and two-column cuts of star. Press book.
Released in February.

MISS DECEPTION.

Sterling Pictures Corporation Presents Jean Sothern in Joseph Francis Poland's Story of the Western Girl Who Was Not as Crude as She Tried to Appear.

Cast.

Joyce Kingston.....Jean Sothern
John Kingston.....Jack Newton
Edward Singleton.....Robert Kegereis
Genevieve Hasbrook.....Mary Moore
Tom Norton.....Edwin Stanley
Jim Lennon.....Jack Ellis
Reginald Lennon.....Hal Peel

Directed by Eugene Nowland.

The Story: Joyce Kingston has been reared by an uncle, and has grown up out-of-doors upon her uncle's ranch, but a year at a famous finishing school makes mighty changes. Then her father—whom she has never seen—sends for her through a sense of duty, and Joyce determines to live up to his worst fears. She saves him from the snares of an avaricious woman and from the financial trap of a business enemy, covers herself with glory at her coming out party, and in the end saves her father from bankruptcy with her share of the Western ranch.

For the Program: The story of a rough diamond whose roughness was assumed.
Ranch girl startled friends with her social poise.

Advertising Phrases: Saves her father from bankruptcy and a vampire.
Innocent deception proves salvation of father.

Feature These Players: Jean Sothern as the ranch-bred girl.
Edwin Stanley as Tom Norton.

Stunt Suggestions: For a window display, if your jeweler has no uncut diamonds, get a few small quartz pebbles and place in the window with a sign, "These are uncut diamonds—diamonds in the rough. It pleased Joyce Kingston to appear as an uncut diamond in 'Miss Deception,' but she startled her father at her coming out party. See the play at (house and date)." Use with stills showing the girl in her evening gown and as an uncouth visitor from the West. Dry goods stores might be induced to offer contrasting displays of camping suits and party dresses with a somewhat similar sign. If you can borrow a clothing dummy for the lobby dress it in a party waist and corduroy skirt, with belt and holster, and a sign, "Which is the real Miss Deception? Drop in and find out."

Advertising Aids: Posters, 2 ones, 1 three, 1 six. Lobby display photos 8x10, 12 subjects; 11x14, 12 subjects (hand colored); 22x28, one subject (hand colored). Slides. Single and double-column coarse screen newspaper cuts. Heralds (rotogravure). Press matter.
State rights.

MADAME JEALOUSY.

Adolph Zukor Presents Pauline Frederick in a Modern Morality Play by George V. Hobart, Author of Experience and Everywife.

Cast.

Madame Jealousy.....Pauline Frederick
Valor.....Thomas Meighan
Finance.....Frank Losee
Commerce.....Charles Wellesley
Pride.....Isabel O'Madigan
Charm.....Elsie McCloud
Display.....Ina Bourke
Mischief.....Frances Capelano
Sorrow.....Grace Barton
Treachery.....Edwin Sturgis
Rumor.....Marcia Harris
Good-Nature.....J. K. Murray

Directed by Robert Vignola.

The Story: Though a morality play by the author of two famous stage successes along those lines, "Madame Jealousy" is at the same time a vivid and fascinating drama of the society of today, and with the characters bearing other names would be still a gripping drama. The novel treatment merely gives an absorbing story still greater interest.

For the Program: A modern story in old-time form.
Ages old, but ever new.

Advertising Phrases: George V. Hobart's newest play.
"Everyman" and "Everywife" knows "Madame Jealousy."

Feature These Players: Pauline Frederick in the title role.
Thomas Meighan as Valor.
Elsie McCloud as Charm.

Stunt Suggestions: Run newspaper liners as, "Are you jealous?" "Is your wife jealous?" "Is your sweetheart jealous?" and similar questions. When ready to disclose the title run, "If your wife is jealous take her to see 'Madame Jealousy' (house and date)." The same copy can be used for posted paper if expense permits, and the questions can be bunched on your street wagon with the trailer added on the day of showing. With a little trouble you can show a dressed doll buried to the neck in the quicksands, and an explanatory card, "As she sinks into the quicksands of life; Madame Jealousy, 'I go out of their lives, but others shall call me back.' See 'Madame Jealousy' (with Pauline Frederick) (house and date)."

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Rotogravure. Photos 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Eight by ten photos of star. Ten cuts each for star and production on one, two and three-column widths. Heralds. Slides. Window cards. Press book.
Released February 4.

year later is known as Martin West, handy man in a slum boarding house. There he meets and falls in love with Dorothy, supposing her to be what she seems, though in reality she is there to win a wager of $10,000 that she cannot make her way in such surroundings. John proves his surgical skill in a barroom brawl, and is made the personal attendant of the political boss, who lives in fear of assassination. Dorothy secretly transfers her winnings to John, and returns to her own place in society. There, later, John finds her, but she does not recognize him and when he pleads his love she turns again in search of "Martin West" to find that both her lovers are the same man.

For the Program: She loves two men, not knowing them to be the same.
One woman drove a man into the depths, another raised him to happiness.

Advertising Phrases: How a woman can make or mar a life.
Sought old sweetheart to find more recent lover waiting.

Feature These Players: Harry Morey as the surgeon.
Grade Darmon as the girl who saved him.
Florence Deshon as Lucia.

Stunt Suggestions: For a window display borrow some surgical knives from a physician and display with a patent potato peeler. For the sign use, "Love betrayed drove John Stedman from the scalpel to the 'spud scalper,' but a woman brought him back to better things in Love Triumphant at (house and date)." For a lobby card try, "Could you love the same man twice at the same time? Dorothy Harmon did in 'The Other Man.' It's a fascinating story (date)."

Advertising Aids: One style each one, three and six-sheets. Window card. Lobby displays 11x14 and 22x28. Slide. Herald. Plan book. Press sheet.
Released February 4.

JACK SPURLOCK, PRODIGAL.

William Fox Presents George Walsh in a Screen Version of George Horace Lorrimer's Dashing Saturday Evening Post Story.

Cast.

Jack Spurlock.....George Walsh
John Spurlock.....Dan Mason
Anita Grey.....Ruth Taylor
Professor Jackson.. .....Robert Vivian

Directed by Carl Harbaugh.

The Story: Jack might not have been dropped from Harvard even if he did bring a bear home to spend the night in the bath tub, but when the bear swatted one of the faculty, Jack's fate was sealed, and his father put him to work in one of his chain groceries to learn the business. And this at a time when the Spurlock stores were suffering from onions—onions by the carload and by the trainload. Not knowing this, Jack contracted for another 150 cars, and joined the strike of Spurlock employees that this over purchase brought on. The rest of the strikers went back, but Jack was not invited, yet he sold these onions and made a fresh start.

For the Program: Youth must be served, but not with onions.
Onions got him out of a job and won it back for him.

Advertising Phrases: Brought home a bear as cabaret souvenir.
A romance of college, business, and onions.

Feature This Player: Centre upon George Walsh in the title role.

Stunt Suggestions: You can probably induce some large grocer to get up a Jack Spurlock sale of onions, offering to advertise on the screen and in your newspaper work in return for advertising for the film in the store and throwaways. By making an exceptionally low price a big boom can be worked for both house and store. It may sound foolish, but try it in a town or neighborhood house. Offer a prize (of onions) for the most original receipt for cooking onions, and print the best of the receipts in the program, letting a committee of women do the judging. Use your lobby to work this up in, and display onions for the sale. Also play up the fact that the story was written by George Horace Lorrimore, editor of the Saturday Evening Post.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Slide. Mats. Press sheet.
Released February 3.

LIMOUSINE LIFE.

Triangle Presents Olive Thomas in a Screen Arrangement of Ida M. Evans' Well-Known Story from The Red Book.

Cast.

Minnie Wills.....Olive Thomas
Moncure Kelts.....Lee Phelps
Jed Bronson.....Joe Bennett
Gertrude Muldane.....Lillian West
Mrs. Malvin.....Lottie due Vaulle
Mrs. Kelts.....Lillian Langdon

Directed by Jack Dillon.

The Story: Minnie was a shy little thing from the country trying to make her way in the great big city. And she was such an innocent, timid little thing that Moncure Kelts determined to win her, and incontinently threw over his latest flame for this piquant morsel of femininity. One of the girls in the shop tried to warn her, but it did no good. Minnie kept right on. And when she got through, Minnie had the cash and a pleasant memory, and all Moncure got was a feeling of deep thankfulness that she didn't insist upon marrying him. For once it was the roue who had the narrow escape—he could not know that Minnie never meant it.

For the Program: A country mouse devours the city cat.
Minnie was a shy, young thing, but she wasn't exactly dull.

Advertising Phrases: Trod the primrose path, but she was careful.
His millions could not save him from Minnie.

Feature These Players: Olive Thomas as the country girl who knew her little book.
Lee Phelps as the millionaire rounder who had to run for his life.

Stunt Suggestions: Get your hardware man to make a display of traps of all sorts, and use with a card, "Minnie knew all the traps of a big city, and she was something of a trapper herself. See 'Limousine Life' (house and date). You'll laugh because you cannot help it." For street work have a well dressed man work the street with a trap and a couple of feet of chain on one foot. Letter the sign, "I set a trap for Minnie and she pushed me into it. See all about it in 'Limousine Life' (house and date)." For the lobby get a string of automobile license plates and frame a sign, "If you give a car to a lady friend take off your license number. See 'Limousine Life' and you'll know why (date)."

Advertising Aids: Two styles one-sheets. One each three and six-sheets. Herald in rotogravure. Lobby displays 11x14 and 22x28. Slides. Electros and mats. Press sheet.
Released February 3.

PERSUASIVE PEGGY.

Mayfair Film Corporation Presents Peggy Hyland in the Six-Part Comedy-Drama, Based on the Novel by Maravene Thompson.

Cast.

Peggy Patton.....Peggy Hyland
Ed. Trowbridge.....William Davidson
Belle Newell.....Mary Cecil
Peggy's Mother.....Gertrude Norman
Peggy's Father.....Charles Sutton
Head Farm Hand.....Jules Cowles
Percy Pipp.....Arthur Houseman

Directed by Charles J. Brabin.

The Story: Peggy Patton consents to be the bridge of a young farmer, Ed. Trowbridge, only to discover that he needs "breaking in" before he becomes quite the unselfish husband his lovely girl-wife desires him to be. So Peggy exerts all her arts of persuasion to humanize Ed. and in the end by the aid of some clever experiments and subterfuges suceeds in convincing him that married life is a give and take affair. The appearance of a little baby completes the happiness of the young couple.

For the Program: She made her husband over.
What woman wishes God wills.

Advertising Phrase: The transatlantic star in a famous story of domestic life.

Feature These Players: Peggy Hyland as Peggy Patton.
W. B. Davidson as Ed. Trowbridge.

Stunt Suggestions: Interest all the women's clubs and girls' societies in the picture. Start discussion in the local papers on how to be happy though married. If possible induce a local minister to select the photoplay as a text for a sermon, because the story emphasizes the virtues which are necessary to the perfect enjoyment of the married state. Appeal to the suffragist and feminist sections of the community. Offer a prize for the best essay on the ethical and moral teachings of the story. Induce some prominent woman official or society leader to speak at your theater on the subject of womans' rights.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, two six-sheets, one twenty-sheet. Lobby display, 8x10 photos, 11x14 photos, 22x28 photos. Slides. Heralds Window cards. Press sheets.
State Rights.

A PETTICOAT PILOT.

Paramount Presents Vivian Martin in a Screen Version of Joseph C. Lincoln's Realistic Novel of Cape Cod Life, Mary 'Gusta.

Cast.

Mary 'Gusta .....Vivian Martin
Shad Gould.....Theodore Roberts
Zoeth Hamilton.....James Neill
Crawford Smith.....Harrison Ford
Mrs. Hobbs..... .Helen Gillmore
Rastus Young.....Richard Cummings
Mrs. Young.....Jane Wolff
Edgar Fuller, alias Edwin Smith, Bert Hadley
Judge Baxter.....John Burton
Mr. Bacheldor.....Cecil Lionel
Mrs. Bacheldor.....Jane Keckley
Jimmie Bacheldor.....Antrim Short

The Story: Mary 'Gusta, left a penniless orphan, is adopted by two retired Cape Cod fishermen, who now conduct a general store. They lead her to suppose herself well-to-do that the bread of charity may not be bitter in her mouth. Mary takes charge of the store and puts it upon a new basis of smartness and prosperity, but competition comes and with it the knowledge that she is penniless and she also finds that she loves the son of the man who has nearly ruined her big-hearted foster fathers, but Mary 'Gusta rises to the emergency and pilots her ship into quiet waters.

For the Program: Like a breath of clean salt air.

The story of a capable girl and two simple-hearted old men.

Advertising Phrases: .. "best seller" made even better.

A petticoat pilot with Cupid for skipper.

Feature These Players: Vivian Martin, as the girl.

Theodore Roberts and James Neil as the old captains.

Stunt Suggestions: Work the book stores for displays, and advertise, in turn, upon your screen that the story may be had from the stores named on the slide. Get a card in the library. Use a battered old seaman for street work if you can get a slicker and sou'wester. Decorate the lobby with fishing nets, oars, etc.

Advertising Aids: Two styles, each one, three and six-sheets. Rotogravure. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Ten cuts each for star and production, one to three columns. Slides. Advertising layout mats. Press book.

OUR LITTLE WIFE.

Goldwyn Presents Madge Kennedy in Avery Hopwood's Speedy Little Farce of a Bride Who Planned a Syndicate Honeymoon.

Cast.

Dodo.....Madge Kennedy
Herb.....George Forth
Dr. Elliott.....William Davidson
Mrs. Elliott.....Wray Page
Tommy.....Kempton Greene
Bobo.....Walter Hiers
Angie.....Marguerite Marsh

Directed by Edward Dillon.

The Story: Avery Hopwood, who wrote "Seven Days" and "Fair and Warmer" has conceived another amazingly amusing situation in a bride whose tender heart leads her to take upon her honeymoon three of her discarded suitors. Her husband puts an end o this by means of a faked telegram, but back in town the might-have beens cause a lot of trouble until the events of the first anniversary bring things to a crisis, and Dodo is at last persuaded that one man is enough to look after.

For the Program: A honeymoon of huge delight.

The story of a bride with too tender a heart.

Advertising Phrases: A honeymoon for five.

Don't count on your ex-sweethearts after they're matched.

Feature These Players: Madge Kennedy as Dodo.

George Forth as her husband.

Stunt Suggestions: For a lobby stunt copy the verse at the bottom of the last column of the second page of the press sheet. Do not use anything but the verse itself, and refuse to explain should anyone ask you what it means. Use it ten days before the showing of the picture. Two days before add, "This was just one of the things that made Herb Warren wonder how many men he had married along with his little wife. See Madge Kenney in 'Our Little Wife' (date)." For the showing days decorate with paper wedding bells and white streamers. For window work use the one-sheets with "Join us on our honeymoon with 'Our Little Wife.' Meet at the (house and date). The whole crowd's going, so you come, too." Get jewelers to show four engagement rings and one wedding ring with a card, "Rings worn by Madge Kennedy in 'Our Little Wife' at (house and date). She took all four sweethearts on her honeymoon. Can you imagine it?"

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six and one 24-sheet. Rotogravure one-sheet. Lobby displays, 8 x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Coming and current slides. Advertising and scene cuts. Photographic line-cut copy for ads. Press book.

Released February 10.

THE SHUTTLE.

Louis H. Selznick Presents Constance Talmadge in an Adaptation of Mrs. Francis Hodgson Burnett's Novel by Margaret Turnbull and Harvey Thew.

Cast.

Bettina Vanderpoel..Constance Talmadge
Rosalie Vanderpoel.....Edith Johnson
Reuben Vanderpoel.....E. B. Tilton
Mrs. Vanderpoel.....Helen Dunbar
Sir Nigel Anstruthers....George McDaniel
Lord Mount Dunstan.....Albert Roscoe
Penzance.....Thomas Persse
Ughtred Anstruthers.....Edward Peil
G. Selden.....Casson Ferguson

Directed by Rollin Sturgeon.

The Story: A fascinating international romance of which a quarter of a million have been sold. Bettina visits her sister, who has married an English nobleman, and finds her broken in health and spirit and with empty purse. Bettina briskly sets her sister upon her feet again, physically and mentally, and in between finds time to win the love of a neighboring nobleman of a finer type.

For the Progras: A story of the shuttle of love which spins across the wide waters of the Atlantic.

A tale of love across the seas.

Advertising Phrases: Bettina was not afraid of a titled brother-in-law.

American girl bests British peer.

Feature This Player: Constance Talmadge as the sprightly American girl.

Stunt Suggestions: Get your book stores to make a display of the book with a window card for a centerpiece. Letter your street wagon, "If you are a brute, don't marry a girl with an energetic sister. See what happened in The Shuttle (house and date) with pretty Constance Talmadge." For the lobby use a large shuttle between British and American flags. If you can rig a motor to cause the shuttle to vibrate between the two flags, the display will be much better. Letter a card, "The shuttle of love spins across the wide waters of the Atlantic in The Shuttle (date)."

Advertising aids: Two styles each, one and three-sheets. One each six and 24-sheets. Half sheet window card. Die-cut herald. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and three 22x28, including one of star. One, two and three-column scene cuts. One-half, one and two-column cuts of star. Press book.

Released in February.

REAL FOLKS.

Triangle Presents a Story of Real People in Real Doings from the Story by Kate Corbaley, Done Into Scenario by Jack Cunningham.

Cast.

Jimmie Dugan.....Francis McDonald
Mrs. Dugan.....Alberta Lee
Pat Dugan.....J. Barney Sherry
Joyce Clifton.....Fritzie Ridgway
Lady Blessington.....Marion Skinner
Margaret Van Arsden.....Betty Pearce
Van Arsden.....George Pearce

Directed by Walter Edwards.

The Story: Pat Dugan puts his last penny into oil prospecting and finds the oil. He deserts the old shack for his idea of what a palace should be and sends Jimmie to college. Jimmie promptly thrashes three of the students and polishes off the policeman who interferes. Then he leaves college for a partnership in a nursery business with a young Italian. Pat moves east and settles next door to Lady Blessington, but supposes the placid old lady who fraternizes with his wife to be the housekeeper. Jimmy turns up and falls in love with Joyce, Lady Blessington's god-daughter and marries her in spite of his father's commands, but when Pat sees how it all comes out he takes the full credit to himself.

For the Program: The doing of the Dugans.

Sincerity won where millions failed.

Advertising Phrases: Millionaire gives oil well to Belgian fund.

Pat struck oil, but Jimmie found true gold.

Feature These Players; Francis McDonald as Jimmie.

J. Barney Sherry as the oil millionaire.

Fritzie Ridgway as the little dancing teacher.

Stunt Suggestions: Get out small four-page folders. On the front print, "How to make money in oil." On page three print, "See how Pat Dugan did it in Real Folks at (house and date). It's the only safe way." Borrow a set of gardening tools and place in a lobby frame with "Could you win a man's heart with these? Joyce Clifton did in Real Folks (date)." You may repeat the display in the windows of stores handling similar sets, particularly in the spring and early summer.

Adveristing Aids: Two styles of one-sheets. One style each, three and six-sheets. Heralds in rotogravure. Slides. Lobby displays, 11x14 (choice of sepia or tinted) and 22x28. Electros and mats. Press sheets.

Released February 10.

THE SONG OF SONGS.

Artcraft Presents Elsie Ferguson as Lily Cardos in Sudermann's Widely-Discussed Play, Taken from the American Stage Version by Edward Sheldon.

Cast.

another the love denied herself that he may sing the song in all its divine melody.

For the Program: Elsie Ferguson in one of the most famous characters in modern fiction.

The story of a search for love.

Advertising Phrases: Sudermann play makes vivid screen drama.

The story of every man and woman.

Feature These Players: Elsie Ferguson as Lily Cardos.

Cecil Fletcher as Stephen.

Craufurd Kent as Dick.

Stunt Suggestions: Get the music stores to make a display of love songs of as many titles as possible, with a picture of Miss Ferguson as the attractor and this copy, "The Song of Love is the 'Song of Songs.' All of these songs are the 'Song of Songs'—learn them, then see Elsie Ferguson in the play at (house and date)." The same idea can be worked with phonograph records. For newspaper work use the catchline, "Do you know the 'Song of Songs' when you hear it?" An effective lobby attractor can be made with the five bars of the musical staff running across the entrance, notes, each bearing a letter of the title, being set in place to suggest the opening bar of some love song.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts for star and production from one to three columns wide. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

THINK IT OVER.

Sterling Pictures Corporation Presents Catherine Calvert in an Unconventional Little Comedy-Drama Written Expressly for Her by Herbert Blache.

Cast.

Alice Rowland.....Catherine Calvert
Henry Whitworth.....Richard Tucker
George Baring.....A. Lloyd Lack
James Baring.....Eugene Borden
Mrs. Martin.....Auguste Burmester

Directed by Herbert Blache.

The Story: Alice Rowland is left an orphan, with George Baring for a guardian. Henry Whitworth, a man of forty, has promised her mother to look after her, and to him Alice turns for support when Baring seeks to marry her to his graceless son. To remove her from Whitworth's influence, Baring takes Alice to his home, and Alice promptly escapes and makes her way to Whitworth's lodgings, arriving at three in the morning, with the cool suggestion that he solve her troubles by marrying her himself, which precipitates a series of lively and unexpected situations ending in the defeat of Baring.

For the Program: Catherine Calvert in a story you cannot help liking.

A sparkling comedy that bubbles with originality.

Advertising Phrases: Proposed marriage to a man twice her age at three a. m.

Didn't care for the conventions—she wanted freedom.

Feature These Players: Catherine Calvert as the ward.

Richard Tucker as Whitworth.

UNDER SUSPICION.

Metro Presents Francis X. Bushman and Beverley Bayne in a Five-Act Adaptation of the Story by Hugh C. Weir in the Saturday Evening Post.

Cast.

Gerry Simpson.....Francis X. Bushman
Virginia Blake.....Beverly Bayne
Mrs. Alice Woolworth.....Eva Gordon
Rogers, the valet.....Hugh Jeffrey
Sweeney of the Central office, Frank Montgomery
Murphy, plain-clothes man, Sidney D'Albrook
Chief of detectives.....Franklyn Hanna
Red Hogan.....Arthur Housman
Cassidy.....Jack Newton

Directed by William S. Davis.

The Story: Gerry Simpson is not to blame because he is a millionaire; he was born that way, but when he finds that Virginia Blake has a socialistic hatred for the "idle rich" he pretends to be a poor man, and gets a job on the same paper with her. But Virginia suspects Gerry of a big jewel robbery, and so does Sweeney, of the Central office. She goes to his rooms, and finds the loot just as Gerry's valet, the real culprit, returns with more plunder to cache. That gets Gerry out of one trouble, but he is in bad with Virginia until he buys the paper and announces he is going to be a hard-working editor.

For the Program: The story of a millionaire who went to work.

Girl reporter makes working man of idle millionaire.

Advertising Phrases: Missing coat button nearly gets millionaire in jail.

Jewel thief lays blame on millionaire.

Feature These Players: Francis X. Bushman as the millionaire who was willing to work.

Beverley Bayne as the girl reporter.

Stunt Suggestions: Distribute cards reading, "A button missing from his coat nearly got a millionaire in jail. If you have a button off your coat bring it to the theater any morning this week and we'll sew it on free. If you want to know more see 'Under Suspicion.' (House and date.)" Have a girl ready to sew on any buttons brought in, and get a press story out of the stunt before its use and after. In a small town coax in some well known men to make the story more interesting. If the lobby is inclosed establish the girl in the lobby, and use signs outside, "Come in and have that coat button sewed on. Then see 'Under Suspicion,' and you'll know the reason why you should."

THE WIFE HE BOUGHT.

Bluebird Presents Carmel Myers in a Story Based on Larry Evans' Story, One Clear Call, in Hearst's Magazine, with Kenneth Harlan.

Cast.

Janice Brieson.....Carmel Myers
Steele Valiant.....Kenneth Harlan
Hutch Valiant.....Howard Crampton
James Brieson.....Sydney Dean

Directed by Harry Solter.

The Story: Steele Valiant returns from the far north wealthy and eager to face the great world anew. He finds his father dying, his life and fortunes wrecked by James Brieson, whose daughter Steele had been denied. He promises his father to avenge his wrongs, and in time he compells Janice to beg mercy for her father, and then makes Brieson ask him to marry Janice. He does, though he now loathes her—it is a part of his revenge, but each hears the clear call of love at the end of many dreary days.

For the Program: The story of a marriage for revenge.

The strange ending of a loveless marriage.

Advertising Phrases: Married girl because he hated her father.

Love came when danger called.

Feature These Players: Carmel Myers, last seen in "My Unmarried Wife."

Kenneth Harlan as the man who married for revenge.

Stunt Suggestions: For window work display small heaps of sugar and coal, and between them a red heart of cardboard or stuffed cloth. Letter the sign, "Three things that Money cannot buy—sugar, coal, and love. See how Steele Valliant won the love of 'The Wife He Bought' at (house and date)." If you get a grocery window add, "but talk to use about sugar." For a lobby display place a picture of Miss Myers behind a barred frame, with cardboard S's so sized as to form dollar marks with each pair of bars. Letter the card, "Steele Valiant made 'The Wife He Bought' a prisoner behind bars of gold. She escaped, and he won her back with love. (Date.)"

Advertising Aids: One style each one, three and six-sheets. Stock one-sheets of star. Colored and black and white lobby displays. Slide. Player cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two columns. Heralds. Press sheet.

Released February 4.

THE UNBELIEVER.

Thomas A. Edison Studios Present Marguerite Courtot and Raymond McKee in a Screen Version of Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews' "Three Things," Produced in Co-operation with the U. S. Marine Corps.

Cast.

Philip Landicutt.....Ray McKee
Margaret Landicutt.....Kate Lester
Uncle "Jemmy".....Frank de Vernon
Virginia Harbrok.....Marguerite Courtot
Eugene Harbrok.....Mortimer Martini
Madam Harbrok.....Blanche Davenport
Pierre Harbrok.....Harold Hallacher
"Lefty".....Darwin Karr
Marianne Marnholm.....Gertrude Norman

Cast from U. S. M. C.

Major Thomas Holcomb, Major Ross E. Rowell, Captain Thomas Sterrett, Lieut. J. F. Rorke, Sergeant Moss Gill, Sergeant Percy Webb, Corporal Bob Ryland, etc.—Fourth Battalion U. S. M. C.

Directed by Alan Crossland.

The Story: Class pride, unbelief in God, and race predjudice were Phil Landicutt's chief faults, and his mother let him enlist in the marines in the hope that upon the field of war he might find himself. Fighting for the democracy of the world, Phil finds democracy himself, and class pride and race prejudice are swept away, while in his great hour comes the knowledge of his Maker, and he is invalided home to justify his mother's faith and to find a greater reward than he had dared to hope for.

For the Program: Produced in co-operation with the U. S. Marine Corps.

Pride and unbelief were buried in the trenches.

Advertising Phrases: War scenes by men who know.

Society leader enlists under former chauffeur.

Feature These Players: Marguerite Courtot as the Belgian refugee.

Raymond McKee as the society leader.

Stunt Suggestions: The windmill, the sails of which are used to signal to the Belgian troops, offers a good stunt foundation. If you lack the mechanical skill to build the mill you can at least construct the four sails, and set up in the lobby with a card, "The sails of the Belgian windmill were used to signal the position of German guns. To the right means a dot, to the left a dash. Can you send a message as well as Virginia did in 'The Unbeliever.' See her (date)." Beside the sign place the Morse code, and let the public experiment and provide you with a ballyhoo. The same idea can be worked in store windows without invitation to a trial. If you can contrive a fairly large mill on a float send it through the streets with a boy inside to work the sails.

Advertising Aids: One, three, six and 24-sheets. Lobby displays 11x14 and 22x28. Heralds. Two slides. Single and double-column half tones. Press book.

Released in February.

WAR PRICES—Going Down
The well-known "Orpheum Collection" consists of melodramatic music almost exclusively, and is one of the best collections of agitatos, hurries, mysteriosos, short plaintives, etc., on the market. Particularly useful in serial pictures for bringing out the dramatic points. My last edition is printed from the same plates as the first, on a good quality of paper, and sells for these reduced prices: Piano (solo), 1st, 2d or 3d series, 35 cents each; Violin (1st, 2d or 3d series), 25 cents each; Cornet (1st, 2d or 3d series), 20 cents each; Flute, Clarinet, Trombone, Drums (1st or 2d series), 20 cents each.

HAVE YOU AND HAVE YOU
Ever stopped to consider why a splendid film subject is sometimes killed in projecting to the screen?
Ever stopped to consider why a poor film subject has many times been improved in projecting to the screen?
The answers are—the OPERATING EQUIPMENT and the SCREEN. Watch your screen results and the box results will take care of themselves. CONSULT

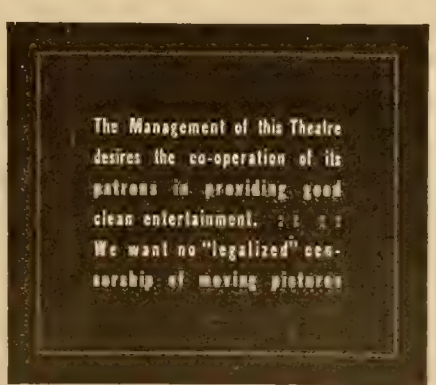
Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship!

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.



The Management of this Theatre
desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good
clean entertainment.
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00

REAL SERVICE

IS NOW SUPPLIED WITH

SPEER ALTERNO CARBONS

Perfect Projection Immovable Arc
Noiseless Operation Brilliant Illumination

A bright, flickerless, eye-resting light
No changes required in booth equipment.

By the adoption of special materials, both in the body of the carbon and the core, the Speer Carbon Company is able to offer to the exhibitor and operator a carbon with intensely bright, white light producing qualities. The illuminating qualities of the SPEER "ALTERNO" CARBONS bring out the minute details of the film and yet have a most pleasing effect on the eye.

The operators' difficulties, which included a wandering light, ghosts in the picture, sputtering of the arc, and a noise almost intolerable, have all been relegated to by-gone days. This entire condition has been changed by the introduction of the SPEER "ALTERNO" NOISELESS CARBONS for alternating current.

The exceptional advantages and possibilities now afforded for alternating current counteract the arguments formerly used for the installation of elaborate and expensive apparatus for the changing of alternating current to direct.

Write today for the folder describing SPEER "ALTERNO" CARBONS.

Foreign Buyers

This old and well established concern, wishing to extend facilities to the foreign buyers in their relations with American Film Products, has recently opened a special department for the purchasing and exporting of Moving Picture Films. Through this special department it will be possible for you, on a very reasonable basis, to purchase your films and other articles in the moving picture line to much better advantage than could be done directly yourself.

For this very complete service, backed by our thorough knowledge of American conditions, you pay us only a commission.

Saving Owing to the fact that our purchases are very large, we can give to you the benefit of the lowest prices. We are holding out no profit for ourselves on the purchase prices—whatever we save is for our customers.

Satisfaction Our main object is to satisfy our customer in every possible way, not only to be able to save money for him, but to buy the best the market affords; and keep him posted regularly as to what is going on in the film industry as regards new productions.

Shipments In connection with the film department you will also have the advantages of our well operated shipping department, thus you are assured of the careful and proper handling of all goods, which means for you Prompt Delivery.

Confidence You will deal with a concern with unquestionable financial standing.

Save Current—and Improve Your Projection

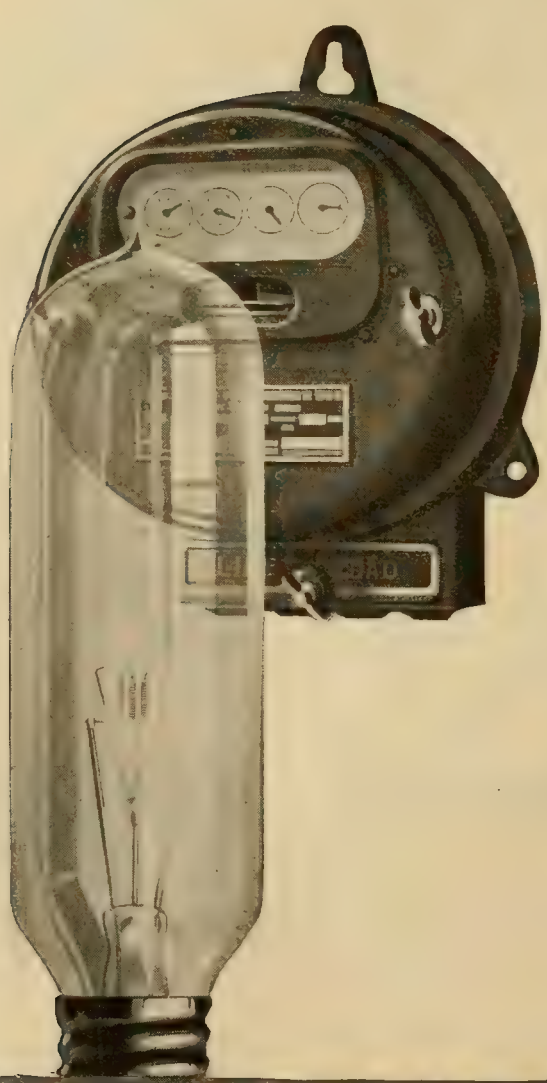

Figure 600 watts per hour against your present current consumption. That tells you something of what NATIONAL MAZDA lamps will save you in projection cost. But it tells only part. Add to this saving several dollars a month of repair expense, total elimination of carbon-jaw breakage, and a considerable reduction in damage to condensing lenses. Against these savings is what? Only the cost of rebuilding your apparatus to accommodate the lamps. This expense comes once. The savings are continuous. The preliminary expense will be repaid to you out of the savings in a few months, and after that the savings are net profit. And, besides—and most important—incandescent lighting BETTERS THE PICTURES. The light is without flicker, and the lamp, once focused, requires no further attention. SO MUCH BIG NEWS is breaking nowadays, that it is impossible to keep abreast of the times with only one News Weekly. That's why we are issuing THREE-A-WEEK.

The smartest, biggest and most successful exhibitors in the world are making the news reels as big a feature as their 5-reelers. Another reason for THREE-A-WEEK.

When people leave picture theatres these days, they talk about what they saw in the news reel more than they talk about the dramas. Another reason for THREE-A-WEEK.

We get enough live material for seven news reels a week. When you need that many we will supply them. Meanwhile we are packing all this live news into our THREE-A-WEEK.

"The Co-Respondent"

A power-packed drama of New York newspaper life, featuring Elaine Hammerstein in the great Ralph Ince version of the stage play by Alice Leal Pollock and Rita Weiman. $50,000 dominating publicity in the country's seventy biggest papers guarantees you capacity business on this brilliant Broadway Theatre success.

"Come Through"

Herbert Rawlinson in George Bronson Howard's mightiest melodrama of Society and the Underworld. Played at the Broadway for two weeks straight—at Los Angeles for two and then repeated for another—at Seattle, to more money than the Liberty Theatre ever took in before. Hailed by the Critics as the best suspense drama of years.

"Sirens of the Sea"

Louise Lovely and Carmel Myers in a Twentieth Century enchantment of female loveliness. Fairy scenes of beautiful diving nymphs. A daring combination of fantasy, realism and beauty's revelations.

"Pay Me"

Dorothy Phillips—Idol of Millions—in a great Western drama as rugged as the Rockies. A picture of lawless passions at flood-tide—of Love springing up like a lily out of ashes—of retribution. Made by Joseph De Grasse.

"The Man Without a Country"

The greatest patriotic picture ever screened—the surest money-maker. Recommended everywhere for you by the American Defense Society. Boosted by every soldier's family that sees it. The N. Y. American said: "Immense—a thriller—a raiser of the dead." Made by Thanhouser. World Rights bought on sight by Jewel Productions. At the Broadway, two weeks. In Minneapolis, thirteen days.

MABEL NORMAND
in "Dodging A Million"

by Edgar Selwyn & A.M. Kennedy

GEORGE LOANE TUCKER'S brilliant picturization of "Dodging a Million," which signalizes the triumphant return to the screen of this star of world-wide popularity became—as we knew it would—a box-office event for exhibitors everywhere. Every picture that this master of production touches at once becomes a profit-maker. These remarkable indorsements tell the story.

WID GUNNING: By Telegraph from Albuquerque, N. M.: Congratulations on Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million." It will surely clean up for every exhibitor. Cannot remember ever seeing before such an enjoyable combination of mystery, farce, speed and class, with touches of pathos and romance.

BOSTON RECORD: Tamar Lane: Mabel Normand's return in "Dodging a Million" is more than triumphant. There is no one who could take her place as a star; she's the queen comedienne of the screen.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD Louis Reeves Harrison: "Dodging a Million" is a genuine photodrama—swift, with plenty of zip. A new Mabel Normand indeed, and a joyously surprising one.

N. Y. TELEGRAPH: Frances Agnew: Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million" registers an entertainment value of 100 per cent. plus. George Loane Tucker at his best; Goldwyn exhibitors have a treat in store.

EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW: Geo. T. Pardy: One of the brightest mystery dramas the screen has known in a decade is "Dodging a Million," which launches Mabel Normand as a Goldwyn star under happy auspices. This is a picture destined to go down in film history as one of the most brilliant offerings on record. George Loane Tucker's direction is an exhibition of perfect craftsmanship. Exhibitors will find this unique picture a valuable attraction.

VARIETY: Sime: The combination of star, director and story in "Dodging a Million" is irresistible. George Loane Tucker never lost a chance in making this splendid picture, which proved pure entertainment to capacity houses at the Strand. "Dodging a Million" will be liked all over.

CHICAGO HERALD: Welcome, twice welcome to Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million." This Goldwyn production is of George Loane Tucker's make, which is as big a boost pictorially as Worth was when applied to a Paris frock twenty-five years ago. This production has brought the crowds flocking to the Orpheum.

DRAMATIC MIRROR: "Dodging a Million" is a splendid production and a novel mystery drama which serves as a wonderful medium for bringing Mabel Normand back to the screen. It will delight her legion of admirers.

BRINGS CAPACITY BUSINESS to the Theatres of America

—winning Unanimous Praise

EXHIBITORS, newspapers and the motion picture trade press unanimously agree in hailing Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million" as one of the sensational screen successes of the year. Capacity business resulted instantly in New York, Chicago, Boston—in Goldwyn's sixty odd first-run cities. Only a money-making production arouses enthusiasm like this:

STRAND THEATRE, Harold Edel, Managing Director: "Dodging a Million is one of the finest productions The Strand has ever had. There is magic in Mabel Normand's name; we were crowded all week.

ALHAMBRA THEATRE, Toledo, O., H C. Horator, Manager: In the face of zero weather Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million" opened to splendid business. We have had a remarkable week with this popular star and unusual production.

N Y GLOBE "Dodging a Million" is one of the most entertaining pictures ever presented at the Strand Theatre Mabel Normand's return to the screen after a year's absence is a veritable triumph. At once she resumes her place in the very foremost rank of screen stars

N. Y HERALD Why Mabel Normand's grace and beauty remained for three or four years concealed under grotesque comedy make-up is a question that would puzzle anyone seeing her in "Dodging a Million." This is one of the most splendid and popular productions seen in a long time.

N Y EVE. SUN "Dodging a Million" shows Mabel Normand as an actress of unsuspected emotional range. Her good looks and vivacity combine at once to give this photoplay wide popularity This corking good mystery drama has brought crowds to the Strand.

N. Y. TRIBUNE: Once upon a time we may have seen a picture that we liked better than we did "Dodging a Million" but, if so, we cannot recall what it was. There is something new under the sun in motion pictures and it is "Dodging a Million." It is to be hoped that Mabel Normand will never again see fit to stay away from the screen again, and the only trouble with "Dodging a Million" is that it is going to make everyone dissatisfied with just ordinarily good pictures. Never once does your interest relax.

CHICAGO NEWS Mabel Normand is still irresistible. Surprising things follow in rapid succession in "Dodging a Million," in which all of the detail is typical of Goldwyn productions — another way of saying "excellent."

CHICAGO EXAMINER "Dodging a Million" is a cleverly devised mystery drama filled with complicating incident and it keeps an audience on edge every minute.

CHICAGO POST: Mabel Normand's return to the screen is an item of tremendous interest to many. The combination of Mabel Normand George Loane Tucker and "Dodging a Million" is an unbeatable trinity.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE: With George Loane Tucker directing, Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million" has a vehicle that suits her down to the ground and has come back with a flourish, the same captivating star as when she disappeared. This is one of those "sure things" that the gang will all be there to see. A surprise packet picture. . . . H'raay for Mabel.

This picture is a big, sensational, gripping "thriller." It has a rushing, wonderful melodrama and a big love story. It is the greatest production made thus far about the World War. It sends thrills along the spine. It appeals to everyone's love of and loyalty to their country. It shows mothers, fathers, sisters, sweethearts how their missing ones battle for the glory of the nation. To date all of the thousand and more exhibitors who have played this in their houses have made a profit and in most cases it has broken every existing house record for attendance. What critical New York newspapers think of "LEST WE FORGET"

Now breaking records at the Lyric Theatre, New York

Presented by SCREEN CLASSICS INC.

THE NEW YORK HERALD. "Most impressive and elaborate photoplay seen in New York this season. The action and arrangement of the photoplay are particularly excellent, and the title is really significant, as no motion picture drama yet presented reminds the spectators more clearly of the reasons why this nation is at war."

The Evening World. "Affords onlookers more excitement in ten minutes than the average film thriller does in an hour. Holds interest from start to finish. Replete with stirring incidents. Jolivet admirable as the heroine."

THE EVENING MAIL "Splendidly acted throughout. Miss Jolivet carrying off the honors."

The Evening Call "Logical and sane. Dignified, unbiased indictment of German militarism."

NEW YORK COMMERCIAL "Calculated to give lovers of military pictures all the thrills they require. Jolivet most capable actress that could be chosen for part of heroine. Equal to any that have been shown."

The Morning Telegraph "Public will go in force to see this production."

TRIANGLE

"THUMBS DOWN"

Picture one of those magnificent, barbaric, gladiatorial combats of ancient Rome!

A gladiator has just downed his opponent. With foot planted on his vanquished foe he rests a moment, sword in hand, to await the Emperor's decision. Shall it be "thumbs down" for death, or "thumbs up" for victory?

The motion picture exhibitor, confronted by the dangers to his business has indicated "thumbs down" to those producers and distributors who are not giving proper consideration to his problems.

He wants a clean-cut, open and above-board proposition from the distributor or producer.

The exhibitor wants to make his profit. He wants to place his confidence with those producers who will study his problems, look at his business from the box office standpoint, cooperate with him, sympathize with his efforts to make a real and lasting success and give him every reasonable advantage that can be extended.

Triangle is the company with which the exhibitor can place his confidence—fully, freely and always successfully. And that is because Triangle has indicated "thumbs down" to evils and methods that have been practiced in the motion picture business.

Triangle recognized the evils of the inflated star system and put a curb on its excesses. Obtaining the best actors, because of genuine talent, pleasing qualities and consistent drawing power, Triangle inaugurated the system of paying salaries that were within reasonable bounds—a fair and sane policy which met with the instant approval of exhibitors.

TRIANGLE

Consequently Triangle indicated "thumbs down" to the policy of charging impossibly high prices on films.

"Thumbs down" was the policy on the war tax. Triangle cheerfully shouldered the burden of the tax instead of placing it on the already overburdened exhibitor.

"Thumbs down" is the Triangle policy on "just ordinary" service. Every month a special seven-reel feature of unusual merit is issued to Triangle exhibitors at no extra cost. This is a part of the regular program.

"Thumbs down" is the policy on waste, hackneyed stories, ordinary production, and everything which tends to keep the business from entering at the box office.

If you are one of those exhibitors who have not yet looked into Triangle service, suppose you write or call at one of our exchanges. You are a business man. You are always anxious to learn something new. You want to know why Triangle might be of value to you—might show you a bigger profit—a larger audience—and greater satisfaction. We are certain after a careful investigation that, like thousands of other exhibitors enjoying Triangle service, you will say

"THUMBS UP" ON TRIANGLE.

W. H. CLIFFORD

THE BLACK BOOMERANG

An Answer to

The Birth of a Nation

By

D. W. GRIFFITH

This is a great big, red-blooded story in seven reels that will smash its way to the hearts of the most blasé among humanity.

What "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was to literature, "The Black Boomerang" will be to the Motion Pictures. It is founded on the prophecy of our own President Thomas Jefferson:

"When I Realize God Is Just, I Tremble for the Future of My Race"

Truth

Powerful

Compelling

The story is not intended as propaganda. It preaches no solution of the negro problem, one of the most vital in America today. It will offend neither Northerner nor Southerner, as the questions involved are handled with delicate and masterful skill. The narrative runs the whole gamut of the human emotions, with its raids in the heart of Africa; the slave chase in the Southern Seas; the auction block in Virginia, and other thrilling spectacles. Running through the whole is a powerful and soul-stirring love tale that will thrill the most hardened misogynist in the audience.

This will be the greatest money making film ever offered to the trade

CROWD DECLINED TO BE STRICKEN WITH A PANIC

"Lonesome Luke", on the Screen, Fought to Keep Crowd in Theatre

A panic and possibly the loss of lives and injury of many persons was averted last night at the Palace Theatre by a young chap named Harry Lloyd, who was somewhere in Jersey City at the time and who even now is unaware of what he accomplished.

Fire was discovered in the jewelry store of William B. Joseph at 466 State street at 8:20 o'clock last night and about a half hour later the smoke began to seep into the Palace Theatre three doors from the scene of the fire. The big exhaust fans were put in operation by the management in the hope that the spectators who filled the large auditorium would be kept in ignorance of the fire nearby. At about this time a "Lonesome Luke" comedy was thrown on the screen. Lonesome Luke is the Harry Lloyd mentioned above, and the spectators were laughing at the escapades of Luke in the barber shop when Manager Frank Frayne, fearing a panic appeared near the screen and addressed the house. Mr. Frayne said that he didn't want to worry the people present but merely to calm any fears that might arise. There is a slight smell of smoke in the house due to a fire down the street, he said, but there is no danger.

Only Few Left.

A few women got up and went out in an orderly manner but inasmuch as the operator in the booth kept grinding away on the "Luke" machine and Pianist Rubens kept beating away on the piano, interspersing the piano numbers with a few organ melodies no one took the affair seriously.

In less than five minutes however it was seen that it was an even break between Lonesome Luke and the fire, for up between an orderly dispersal of the spectators or a panic. The auditorium filled with smoke, which billowed in the rays of light projected from the machine to the screen. Lonesome Luke was getting funnier as the smoke grew thicker and the spectators laughed between fits.

Theatre Emptied Slowly.

Finally the smoke became so thick that the fire marshal directed Manager Frayne to empty the theatre. The announcement was made and the crowd proceeded to don coats and hats, slowly and hesitatingly for the operator kept on grinding Lonesome Luke and Luke was getting funnier by the minute. The people left their seats and instead of jamming the aisles in a frantic stricken mob everyone began reaching the open air the spectators lingered in the aisles. Some even went back and took their seats again, for the operator in the booth kept grinding away and Lonesome Luke kept getting funnier. Half the people in the house had to be forced out by police and firemen and the police and firemen might have forgotten what they had been ordered to do if somebody hadn't told the operator that he'd better get out of the booth before he choked to death.

It is only a slight credit where credit is due to say that Harry Lloyd averted a panic by absent treatment.

A Smashing Answer to the Outrageously-priced Star Feature

CRYSTAL THEATRE
Wayne, Nebraska

January 2, 1918

Gentlemen:

Last night I had Carmel Myers in "The Lash of Power" and this is the remark I heard the President of the Commercial Club make:

"I just love to sit and see a Bluebird play because it is not a one star picture, it is not a one-sided play; each player plays his part and they sure are good actors."

Bluebirds are the best drawing card I have, although I run all the big stars and big attractions on the market and pay a good deal more for other features, yet I feel that Bluebirds on the average run will out-draw any other producing company productions, and you know the class I am running.

One thing that I like about Bluebirds is that they sell their features in such a way that the Small Exhibitor has a chance to make a living and I have always found them reliable, which you can't say about all exchanges.

If all your New Star Series are like the ones I have shown to date I predict that Bluebirds will be the big attractions in 1918.

Yours truly,

(Signed) M. B. NEILSON

Did You Play "The Whip"

If you did you know what a box office bear it is.

Well, there is a companion picture to "The Whip" in the making.

Over $100,000 has already been spent on it.

The last reel alone remains unfinished, and it shows a battle in mid-air between a monster Zeppelin (not a model—a real one) made on government lines at a cost of over $25,000, with a war hydroplane, over the real ocean.

The real actors go in the clouds, not faked—the real thing.

ITS TITLE

"STOLEN ORDERS"

Founded on the Drury Lane play, "Sealed Orders," written by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, authors of "The Whip," which ran at the Drury Lane longer than "The Whip" did. The title, "Sealed Orders," was appropriated by a Danish picture some years ago, hence the change of name to "Stolen Orders."

Directed by Harley Knoles, George Kelson and William A. Brady

ACTED BY 6 STARS

CARLYLE BLACKWELL, KITTY GORDON, MONTAGU LOVE, JUNE ELVIDGE, GEORGE MacQUARRIE, MADGE EVANS

Guaranteed bigger than "The Whip."

It's in 8 Reels, just jammed full of Love, Sport, Passion, Jealousy, Crime and Thrills. No war.

A picture with a solar plexus in every reel.

For sale the world over on a territorial basis.

Facts and Comments

DEATH has taken high toll in the picture fraternity. Joseph Kaufman, a director of rare ability associated with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Leander Richardson, newspaper and publicity man of long service, more lately with the World Film Corporation, died last week of pneumonia. Both have left a discernible mark upon the records of their respective callings and their memory will long be retained by those who knew them and their works.

* * *

THERE is something hopeful in the announcement made this week on another page that the old Lubin plant at Betzwood is to be rehabilitated and that the click of the camera and the raucous voice of the leather-lunged director are again to be heard within its classic precincts. While the company is financed by wealthy Philadelphians, Ira Lowry, who built the plant at figures we hesitate to repeat here, is to be the technical director of its activities under the new ownership. Betzwood is a wonderful institution, and with its facilities Mr. Lowry has a wonderful opportunity. His knowledge of picturemaking, supported by a really capable staff of writers and directors, ought to produce marketable results to a most satisfactory degree.

WILLIAM A. BRADY, the dynamic, has severed his directorial connection with the World Film Corporation, renounced a salary of $100,000 a year because, he said, no company could afford to pay so much under present conditions, and will devote his time to motion picture production on his own hook. It is well. There is little matter how Bill Brady employs himself so long as he remains in the picture business. The particulars are not at hand, but we believe that he has accomplished some notable reforms in studio management. At a dinner given by another general manager of the World Film some time before Mr. Brady was called to the same position he made some very pertinent remarks on the subject of studio waste. His was the one hopeful speech of that evening. He may be induced to tell what he has accomplished, and, if he does, it will be an interesting story.

Another thing: he has held the N. A. M. P. I. together longer than any similar body in the motion picture trade has been able to exist—and that's a lot for one man to do, if we may be permitted to remark. In that time he has had difficult questions to answer, some knotty problems to solve, but his eminent fairness on all such controversial matters has challenged the admiration of his associates, and the N. A. M. P. I. still exists and is a considerable benefit to the trade.

*

No, Bill Brady should not quit the motion picture business yet. His term as president of the N. A. M. P. I. does not expire until August, at which time he should be re-elected for the good of the business.

* * *

THE list of attractions at the moving picture houses in New York and also at the regular theaters, for the week of February 4, indicated that the amusement seeking public is still in favor of the lighter forms of entertainment. Of the five leading Broadway screen theaters but one showed a picture of serious purpose. The features at the four other theaters ranged from melodrama to comedy, farce and a story of adventure. Out of forty regular theaters four ran serious dramas, twenty-one housed comedies or farces, twelve had musical shows, two spectacles, and one straight melodrama. It is worthy of note, however, that the piece which far exceeded the others in length of popularity was a morality play which has already enjoyed half a dozen engagements in New York and has duplicated its metropolitan success all over the United States. This condition holds good with the moving picture. The solid successes will always be made with the dramas of real purport.

* * *

A GOOD habit is its own reward. The regular patrons of the New York motion picture houses who have been in the habit of attending their favorite screen theaters every week have not been discommoded during the newsdealers' strike, which prevented the theater "ads" from reaching the public. Without taking sides in the matter or dwelling upon the importance to the public of receiving the news at such a time as the present, it is worth while to recall that news reels have been shown daily in the moving picture theaters of the city, and many of the more important happenings have thus been learned.

Deep Veins Untouched

Louis Reeves Harrison

WHEN you were a kid, when mamma first took you to the theater how beautiful it was, just like fairyland! Now you are a scoffing materialist, some of the pleasures of your life have gone. You may not sigh for credulous youthtime, but it would not be entirely amiss for you to feel some of the thrill you once knew, the ardor of appreciation which lifted you sensuously and spiritually out of this dull old world into some vague foreshadowing of life on the thousands of bright other worlds shining out in evening skies.

The child sees beauty on every hand from true perception, but without appreciation of causes, an intellectual enjoyment to come later in life, but at no time during our superior maturity are we insensible to beauty conveyed to us from the mind of creative genius when it is done with such skill that we are unconscious of the workmanship involved, when we are not thinking of the author and the director and the actor, but only of the beautiful composite work of art as a whole, of its significance, of its appeal to our emotions, of its effect on soul consciousness.

How can any such powerful effect be produced under present conditions? There are some astonishingly good attempts, and it may be taken for granted that good intentions are not lacking, but the discovery of gold in moving pictures has led to a lot of eager surface scratching by those who feel impelled to get all they can in the shortest possible time, while great solid veins of pure gold lie beneath the surface unmined. True artistry is being developed in all departments, but it is scattered, whereas it must be unified and encouraged to work like a piece of machinery where there is no friction, before splendid results can be expected.

Methods of distribution are a law unto themselves just at present, but a little reflection will easily convince anyone that present methods of distribution may not always obtain. No secret is made of the fact that they are not entirely satisfactory to the exhibitor. One can hardly go astray in believing they will improve, and improvement means change, yet, for all that, they have imposed conditions upon production which are almost intolerable. This is because men of undoubted ability as distributors, where system and business organization count most, have assumed leadership in production where artistry should dominate.

There are men so dumb as not to understand what is meant by the term "artistry," even on trade journals, though the word plainly implies the highest quality of workmanship. It involves more than doing beautiful things, more than doing them beautifully when an art of expression is concerned. It means that the art must be so conceived and expressed as to communicate fully to thought and feeling. It is a good job when we enjoy every moment of it in our minds and hearts without knowing it is a good job. The highest skill of workmanship conceals itself for the sake of the impression to be made on an audience.

Such is the charm of illusion, a rich vein of gold almost untouched in the scramble for glittering stars and the pay gravel of old plays and defunct novels. Those first in the field are after what is in plain sight. It is a hurry-up scramble of bitter struggle now and then for contested claims, with occasional attempts to stake out the entire property, while just over the hills, in the valley beyond, spreading beyond the reach of mortal vision, are inexhaustible veins and rich nuggests of true metal, buried beyond the reach of careless and superficial methods. It is only a question of time when they will be discovered.

No man has the effrontery to deny that avarice is back of human effort to make big money, and it is almost unbelievable that all men are not avaricious. It may come as a refreshing surprise, therefore, that no man ever succeeded as a great artist who was in a hurry to make money. Fine workmanship implies care, and great pains taken to do the best possible work in any art imply leisure. It takes time to turn out the right kind of a moving picture, just as it took time for Raphael and Angelo to express their genius at Rome. The rush of eager distribution may be all right in itself, but it is irreconcilably opposed to fine production.

Question which has arisen in many minds—why not separate the two? One of the first releases of ten reels to succeed in this country was made in Italy, where the producers concentrated upon every department of artistic workmanship, wholly unembarrassed by the American distributor. He had no idea what they were doing, no idea of interfering with their tremendous effort, but this did not prevent him from attaining a large and profitable sale of the completed product, to which he devoted the energies of a mind trained to the department of distribution only.

On one side was a union of creative and constructive talent, wholly unadvised by the business end. On the other a composite of talent to market the artistic creation. Is that not the scientific way to mine pure gold? Is that not the largest and best way to get big results? Let us not question for a moment the honesty of intention when the business man goes into a studio with a line of what seems to him "practical" suggestion. His idea is to fit the pictured story to what he deems to be the capabilities of a company he has engaged to interpret stories, but he is only pouring sand into the bearings of complicated machinery.

The man who is financing a producing company feels that he is entitled to an opinion as to what should be done and how it should be accomplished. Very true, but his opinion is not a mere suggestion. It is bound to affect those who draw their pay from him. He may feel justified in saying that certain things in a pictured story may suit one audience and not another, but that is not the question at all. No one doubts the innumerable kinds of human taste, but there is at least one truth for all audiences of all kinds and at all times, the truth in the story which carries conviction and holds interest while it drives home that great truth as its reason for existence.

On the horizon of minds of many in a moving picture audience there has never dawned some of the greatest and most beautiful truths known, appreciated and enjoyed by the more fortunte members, a tiny minority. The lives, experiences and moods of the great majority are narrow. Yet they know there is a wonderful world beyond their own. They feel a sense of deprivation when they are shown what is commonplace and makeshift imitation. To give them a long series of meatless and wheatless pictures is to deprive them of mental nourishment.

By all means make money, but there is nothing inconsistent with that end by mining deeper than we have, by enriching the lives and cultivating the tastes of those who go to lowly places of entertainment, by responding to millions of imulses in all parts of the world for improvement in all that pertains to existence.

Keeping Close to the People

By Robert C. McElravy

MOVING pictures at the present time undoubtedly enjoy the unique distinction of being just a little closer to the people than either literature or the drama. It is the good fortune of the screen at the moment, and perhaps has been ever since the beginning of the war, to bring its messages to eager and enthusiastic observers, while this same public is inclined to look askance at much of the best the other forms of entertainment have to offer.

This may seem odd at first thought, for both literature and the legitimate drama are old, established forms of amusement, which may rightfully be considered indispensable to the people. They are indispensable, beyond a doubt; nothing can be greater than literature when it is great, and no one can seriously doubt the perpetual claim of the spoken word upon the affections of the masses.

Why, then, are moving pictures exerting the greater appeal at the present moment? Why is their message of greater consequence just now than that of either of the others? Their's is certainly not a finished art; even the most enthusiastic friend of the silent drama must admit that only occasionally do the pictures touch real excellence in every department of presentation. Any stronger claim in the present state of development would be complacent and unjustified. Yet the continued fascination of the screen, even under the most adverse conditions, can not be denied.

The first answer to such a query is that moving pictures are a cheaper form of amusement, and it is an answer that seemingly rings true. But making a thing cheap does not make the public anxious to see it, and it would be impossible to fill up a hall night after night at an entirely free admission if you had nothing to offer that answered a genuine public need. In fact, the reverse is nearer the truth; if you have something vital to offer you can ask almost any price within reason and the public will clamor at your doors.

It is doubtful if the question of price has a great deal to do with the popularity of moving pictures. Their closeness to the people is due to the fact that they are of the people, by the people and for the people. They have been from their inception a product of the masses and have grown up and flourished under the nurturing care of plain, common folks.

When moving pictures were first invented, they were exploited by ordinary showmen, who exhibited them as simple curiosities, like circus freaks, or trained fleas or any other thing that was new or startling. Then merchants and business men, looking for fresh opportunities, rented empty store rooms and began showing a few reels at night. Gradually it became evident that little stories could be enacted on the screen which interested and amused spectators. Then came the scenario writer, an untrained and undisciplined individual, who wrote out the wierdest sort of episodes for "the movies." The scenario writer knew no more about the business than did the average exhibitor; he didn't even know whether he was to get paid for his work. Very frequently he got ten dollars per reel and quite as frequently nothing at all. But he got the glory and he was doing something that interested both himself and the public intensely.

The early scenario writer knew nothing of art, but he had an honest passion for telling stories. He carved out his tales as roughly as might a crude artisan of the stone age; he literally hammered his situations into shape and plastered them together with mud created of dream-dust and tears.

The writer remembers an occasion several years ago when he saw a two-reel offering at one of the Broadway houses, which is exactly a case in point. The story was one of humor and sentiment, pure and simple. It was honest sentiment, not sentimentality, and while the plot was obvious in character, it got a tremendous hold upon the observers. There was sniffling in all parts of the house and handkerchiefs were applied freely to moist eyes. At the close the picture was applauded, the audience signifying in this manner that it had been having a perfectly gorgeous time. Now the scenario for this simple, but highly effective, story was written by a young man who but a short time previously had been a shoe clerk in Chicago, as the writer afterward took pains to learn. He became interested in moving pictures and, through patient experiment, had learned the trick of putting a scenario together. He knew little of writing, outside of school composition work, but he had the inborn talent for telling stories. He succeeded so well with his scenarios that he was able to give up his work as a clerk and supported himself at the new occupation, if not magnificiently, at least perhaps in the style to which he was accustomed.

Could this young story-teller have found an outlet for his newly discovered talent through literature or the stage? It is very doubtful, at least without several years of preparation, in which time he would have had to tone down his riotous gift of sentiment. He would have had to part with most of the fresh, unsullied enthusiasm which made his moving picture scenarios so successful with the public. And even if he had happened to succeed, what of the thousand and one other scenario writers who found their vent through the medium of the film?

The moving picture today remains close to the people because it has never been taken away from the people. The making of pictures has advanced wonderfully and scenario writing is no longer a mere trick, as it was formerly, but the time has not yet come when new ideas, fresh sentiment, free emotions and deep feeling are elbowed aside in favor of mechanical artifice. When the door is closed upon these things, then the moving picture will have its own struggles for survival.

What is to be the future of the moving picture, in relation to literature and the drama? It is not likely to usurp the functions of either of them, so long as the latter continue to make themselves valuable to the people. The invention of the automobile has not disturbed the essential uses of the bicycle, the trolley car or the railway train; it has merely afforded another means of travel.

The moving picture is simply another means of entertaining and informing the public. It may supersede both literature and the drama in certain phases, notably in travel and description and stories in which action predominates. It may also curtail considerably the literature of "explanation," for the moving picture is tremendously effective in exploiting new inventions and discoveries.

What the moving picture is most likely to do for literature and the drama is to drive them back to their normal functions; in other words, to bring them once more into the hands of the people. They will be forced to deal with and sympathetically interpret real life and character, to take up sincerely and honestly the real problems of the people. Mere cleverness and mechanical perfection of form will pass out before the aspirations and ideals of the new times.

The ultimate effect of the war upon this country is difficult to determine, but there is bound to be some sort of a return to deeper feelings and spiritual consciousness. Despite fears expressed in some quarters, it is doubtful if there will be a return to Puritanism; only an obtuse refusal to see the new light could bring on such a tremendous reaction. The problem is perhaps not a moral question at all, save in a remote and not displeasing sense of the word, but rather a necessity for setting up higher artistic standards in recognition of the new era in which we are living.

The moving pictures, through their quick touch and devotion to the best interests of the people, are already pointing the way. There is every reason to believe that literature and the drama will soon be stirring with new impulses in the right direction.

Censors After Virginia

By Sam Spedon.

THE plaint which was raised by the exhibitors of Virginia the week of January 21, reminded us of the Civil War slogan: "On to Richmond."

A bill was introduced in the Virginia Assembly by a number of clergymen and Welfare League representatives favoring a state board of censors for motion pictures. This was so secretly done that the exhibitors did not know it was even thought of until it had been favorably reported from the codes committee. It came up in the Senate Chamber on January 25, when the committees on moral and social welfare of both houses of the General Assembly met in joint session for a hearing of the bill. So suddenly and surreptiously was the bill introduced the exhibitors were almost entirely unprepared to contest it. Making the best of the situation, Jake Wells and a handful of other exhibitors were there with their attorney to combat it.

After reading the arguments of both sides as printed in the Richmond papers, we must say that the introducers of the bill seem to have been better prepared with arguments in their favor. Besides the adherents of the bill were present en force and made a stronger impression.

Poor Response.

From several letters we have received the one hundred and sixty-six exhibitors of Virginia did not respond to the S. O. S. telegrams and letters sent to them urging their presence in Richmond on the day of the hearing. One letter informs us that only four exhibitors responded to the call, while the bill was reported upon favorably and will probably be passed upon in a few days. A second call was sent out to all exhibitors for a mass meeting at Murphy's Hotel, Richmond, on Tuesday, January 29, to gather data and prepare themselves for another hearing with a fair representation and presentation of their cause. At this writing we have not heard the results of that meeting.

Warnings Unheeded.

Almost every week we have pointed out in the columns of this publication the necessity of being prepared for just such "snap" tactics being sprung on the exhibitors in the introduction of censorship, tax and Sunday closing bills. We even advertise anti-censorship slides to run in the theaters. As usual the majority will not heed the warning nor the call to arms until some one is hurt or the attacking bodies are upon them and they find themselves in the hands of the enemy. Or else they are content to let a few do battle while they sit idly by.

Enough has been said about boards of censors in other states where they have been instituted to make us all familiar with what they mean to the motion picture industry. How these censors are paid a salary way beyond services rendered, and unnecessary tax upon the public, a means of political graft and spoils to favor a chosen few with sinecure jobs. What has occurred in Virginia is only a precedent of what is apt to happen in any other state. Be on the alert. Keep your ears to the ground. If you hear the slightest rumbling, get busy, get together and be ready to meet the approaching danger. It will do no good to lock the stable door after the horse is stolen.

Always the Eleventh Hour.

C. C. Pettijohn told a story appropos of the indifference of most exhibitors to things that concern their welfare. It was something like this: In a small town in Indiana they had a chemical fire department, instead of the modern fire apparatus and all that goes with it. They kept in a barn a lot of fire extinguishers filled with a liquid chemical. One night a fire occurred and all the volunteers rushed to the barn, grabbed the fire extinguishers, went to the fire, to discover that the chemical had dried up and the extinguishers were of no use. The citizens held an indignation meeting to discuss the negligence and unpreparedness of the authorities and to devise ways and means to combat future fires that might mean the destruction of the whole town. One old fellow arose and said: "I'd like to make a motion." Being granted the privilege of the floor he proceeded: "I move you, Mr. Chairman, that hereafter we make a thorough examination of our fire extinguishers three days before a fire takes place."

Doing All We Can to Help.

While we write these words of admonition we wonder if we are just doing it for our own satisfaction or because it is expected of us. If that is all, then our labor is in vain. If they are read and heeded then our effort will have fulfilled the purpose for which it was made, to arouse the co-operation of all exhibitors and the whole industry in the cause for which the exhibitors of Virginia are fighting.

Noted in Passing

By Sam Spedon.

PRESENT conditions are unquestionably an excellent laxative for relieving business congestion. It is a remedy for overproduction and adjusting the industry to its better establishment on a more stable foundation.

Startling Words.

The statement made by a manufacturer of state rights features that he was through with the states right man and personally he didn't want to take money from him, would indicate that he had a qualm of conscience or something. He went further and stated that dealing with him and the middle man had brought the percentage of profit up to 200 per cent, which was excessive and uncommercial. Another producer went so far as to state that such a system of profit had depopulated the theaters —that is, the bigger part of them. These remarks were supplemented by another producer who said: "By our plan the cost of distribution can be reduced to a maximum of 10 per cent. These announcements were startling news to us and rather disturbed our idea that state rights men and distributors are essential to the industry.

Our Own Censorship.

The advent of school teachers and principals as exhibitors of motion pictures should be still more convincing evidence that the pictures are rapidly overcoming the prejudices that some "truly goods" and "high brows" have tried to instill, that they were not the proper mediums of transmitting education and enlightenment to the minds of the public. With the educators and clergy in the industry state censorship is unnecessary.

State Censor Boards Cost and Unnecessary.

Out of 4,766 pictures censored in the state of Maryland only 19 were rejected, subjected to an appeal to the courts. There were 659 eliminations from the 4,766 recommended. In many instances the eliminations were questionable as to their advisability. This censorship cost the exhibitors, and indirectly the public, $22,000. This same censorship costs New York City comparatively nothing, being handled by the National Board of Review and the local license commissioner by special request on complaint of any citizen. Any exhibitor found guilty of showing an objectionable picture loses his theater license. With this form of local censorship it practically prohibits a producer making and the exhibitor showing an objectionable picture.

Another On Its Way.

The independent moving picture theater operators and employees union of Brooklyn and Long Island, which is unaffiliated with the central union, known as 306, has been so successful that the independent New York City theater operators and employees are thinking seriously of organizing a branch of their own. The Brooklyn union claims that it has been instrumental in eliminating boycotts, strikes, demands and other interferences from the central union.

Censorship Threatens Virginia Exhibitors

Drastic Bill Establishing an Official Board Is Supported by the Virginia Picture Men

RICHMOND, Va., January 31.—A bill for a proposed Censor Board in the state of Virginia has already been reported favorably by the House committee, and the hearings have been brought to a close by the Senate committee. This bill calls for the drastic fines and imprisonments of the Maryland measure which is now being fought so strenuously by the Maryland exhibitors with, it is claimed, good chances for defeat. It calls for a tax of $2 a reel for original prints and $1 a reel for each additional print; exempts none of the pictures that have been played in Virginia in the past; and aims to appoint three censors who shall receive an approximate salary of $2,400 a year—this at a time when the Virginia exhibitors are paying their reel taxes, their income tax, their ticket taxes, etc.

One man well versed in conditions in this state estimates that the passage of this measure would place upon the 166 exhibitors of Virginia an additional burden of $30,000 to $35,000 per annum, and reasoning from the number of houses that have recently gone out of business in neighboring states, he figures that this entire burden will have to be borne by a constantly decreasing number of motion picture theater owners.

Strangely enough, the exhibitors of Virginia, headed by Jake Wells, president of the American Exhibitors' League of Virginia, at the meeting held this week at Murphy's Hotel, Richmond, Va., came out openly for censorship. Mr. Wells in his opening remarks to the exhibitors declared: "We favor censorship. We want it. We believe it will save reputable exhibitors from the fly-by-nighters," and the exhibitors of Virginia, following their president's lead thereupon not only indorsed his remarks, but memorialized the Virginia Legislature to this effect both as an official decision and through the remarks of both president and secretary before the Senate committee on the floor of the Senate chamber.

True it is that Mr. Wells qualified his statements by asking for a substitute which requests that no film shall be shown in Virginia unless it shall have first passed some other legalized State Board or the National Board of Review.

Adherents of the measure promptly knocked the Wells amendment full of holes by showing that it would leave the State in statu quo—that in reality Mr. Wells' proposal was really no censorship at all for Virginia, but meanwhile Dr. Cannon, leader of the adherents of the bill, emphasized the fact that both Mr. Wells and his secretary had distinctly said: "We favor censorship," and they therefore considered it a final argument that since the exhibitors wished censorship the only other step to be taken was to give Virginia a state board that would decide for Virginia what Virginians should see in the way of film.

C. F. Senning, Fox Film representative, who with men from the World, Metro, Paramount, Artcraft, First National, General Film, and other companies had journeyed to Richmond to present the manufacturers' side of the case, asked the Senate committee for time in which to prove to the committee, by petitions and expressions from motion picture patrons and from the great mass of the people, whether this measure was founded n a popular demand or upon the demands of political reformers whose interest might lie either in publicity for themselves or in political jobs for their adherents. He openly stated that Dr. Cannon had solicited telegrams and expressions from his friends and cohorts throughout the state. He wished the same privilege.

Mr. Wells jumped to his feet exclaiming as follows, quoted from the Richmond-Virginian of today: "The exhibitors in the organization I represent," he said, "want you gentlemen (the members of the Senate committee), to understand that we will have nothing to do with any effort to agitate this question in that manner. We have said here this afternoon all that we wish to say (referring to his declaration for censorship), and we do not propose to annoy you with petitions."

In this manner Mr. Wells not only closed the door on his own case through declaring for censorship, but he closed the door for his opponents by openly putting himself on record as being against getting his public's real voice on this legislation.

At a late hour this evening it was felt that the Senate committee would report the bill out of committee at any moment. If this proves to be the case a hot fight may be looked for upon the floor of the House and the Senate in an effort to prevent the bill from passing. Advocates of the bill declared that putting this statute on the books of Virginia would be only the starting of a chain of similar legislation through the efforts of Dr. Cannon and his cohorts, extending through the Carolinas and further South where the rulings of the National Board of Review have previously been considered sufficient.

SUBSTITUTE BILL OFFERED.

Since receiving the foregoing information an effort has been made by Mr. Wells and the Virginia exhibitors to secure a modification of the drastic measure originally proposed. The substitute bill reads as follows:

A BILL.

To regulate the exhibition of moving pictures, and of advertising matter in connection therewith, and to provide penalties for the violation thereof.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia:

1. That the word "film" used in this act means what is usually known as a motion picture film. The word "view" in this act means what is usually known as a stereopticon view or slide, but is not to include legitimate advertising announcements, or news bulletins. The word "persons" includes an association, co-partnership, or corporation.

2. It shall be unlawful to sell, lease, lend, exhibit or use any motion picture film, reel or view in the State of Virginia, unless the said film, reel, or view has been first approved by the association known as The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, or by some Board of Censors or Review created by the laws of some State of the American Union.

3. In the case of motion pictures, a statement of such approval shall be shown on the screen to the extent of approximately four feet of film; and in the case of slides or views, each set shall have at least two slides or views showing such statement.

4. No banner, poster, or other like advertising matter shall contain anything that is immoral or improper.

5. Any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than fifty dollars for the first offense; and for any subsequent offense he shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars.

Every effort possible is being made by the Virginia exhibitors to procure a favorable consideration of this substitute as the only way out of a desperate situation.

W. A. Brady Quits Producing for World Film

Will Conduct Propaganda for Better Business Conditions—Also Will Make Pictures After His Own Ideas

WILLIAM A. BRADY has resigned as head producer for the World Film Corporation. Mr. Brady will continue as a member of the board of directors. This action on the part of the veteran theatrical man, which incidentally means the passing up of a salary of $100,000 a year, marks his dissatisfaction with present conditions in the industry. Chief among these are uneconomic distribution and the unbusinesslike methods prevailing in the operation of studios. Mr. Brady announces he will continue as president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry until August and that immediately he will begin a propaganda for the betterment of the conditions of which he complains. At the same time he will produce independently and on lines which to him seem to be dictated by the present business situation.

William A. Brady.

Early in the week the following statement was issued by Mr. Brady:

"After two years of the most intensive application to the production of a regular program of weekly releases, at the same time carrying on my many theatrical and other enterprises, I have decided, in justice to my own interests and the demands upon me at this time, to withdraw from my active responsibilities in the World Film Corporation, retaining my seat upon the directorate and my interest in the company. I shall, of course, expect as well as strive that the success of World Pictures may be continued and the company prosperous, as heretofore. Production and other plans for the future are in good shape in the World Organization, and in due course exhibitors may expect to hear good tidings. The company will make further announcement in respect to its own intentions and plans in a later statement.

"I am happy to announce that the stock of completed pictures on hand with World is not only ample in quantity but in quality to satisfy the most exacting and to make entirely unnecessary and unjustifiable any intimation that there could be or would be any interruption in regular service of dependable pictures.

"Finally, I wish you would express to the trade my deep appreciation of the great cordiality that has been extended to me and of the reception that has been given my productions and to say that in the future, as in the past, I shall always be keenly interested personally in watching the development and doing what I can to help in the safeguarding of the interests of the producer, manufacturer, distributor and exhibitor alike.

"What my motion picture plans for the future are has not as yet been decided. For the present I shall devote myself to the completion of my big picture—'Stolen Orders.'

Mr. Brady Amplifies His Statement.

"Yes, I am going to continue to produce unrestricted by any rules or precedents," said Mr. Brady Friday at his office in the Playhouse when a World man asked him as to his future plans. "A man said to me today: 'You say in one breath that things are wrong and can't go on and in the next you say you are going to continue producing. How do you reconcile the two statements?' My answer is that I am going to continue producing but on an equitable basis. I don't want or I don't propose to stand around a studio and see a star come in at 11 o'clock, do a couple of scenes, go out at 12 o'clock for lunch, stay away for a couple of hours more, come back and put in an hour or two and then have an engagement which requires immediate departure.

"I have been supposed to install an efficient system and I have got tired of trying to put up with such things as I have outlined. If a man or woman is to be paid five hundred or a thousand dollars a week by a company for whose expenditure I am responsible the player must deliver the goods.

"I took the job as president of the National Association and have tried to make good. I found all the people arguing about conditions, but nobody ever approached the producing condition. Asked to get at the root of things they sidestepped. I have traveled over the country talking to exhibitors, spending my own money, trying to get them to harmonize. You know those efforts have been successful. But it is different with the producers and distributors. At a dinner the other night at which all the heads of the business were present I talked about the fundamental wrongs of the trade. When I got through I was alone.

"I have resigned a position paying $100,000 a year because as conditions are I don't feel that I can earn it. You know if a stage producer puts on a play and he feels that it is not going to be a success at first he can explain the situation to his players and obtain a temporary concession in the way of salaries. Do you think anything like that can be done in the picture business? Conditions mean nothing to motion picture players; they will tell you they cant' cut salaries.

Reconstruction or Bankruptcy, Says Brady.

"As head of the industry I am supposed to represent the exhibitor as well as anybody else. The exhibitor doesn't believe that. The only way I can prove I am in earnest about my public job is by throwing up my private job. I know that this business needs reconstruction. If you don't have reconstruction you are going to have bankruptcy—just as sure as we are sitting in this room.

"For the past eighteen months I have been in a studio working with my coat off, and I know what goes on in studios I have seen with my own eyes what some of these people do. I am going to wake them up. I know many industrious and conscientious directors, actors and studio employees—people who really work. I am not referring to these, because their honest efforts are blocked by the incompetents and ingrates who refuse to give value received. Howard Kyle is one of the foremost figures and a man of influence in the Actors Equity. Recently I put Mr. Kyle in a picture—the first he has appeared in—and did it with the particular purpose of giving Mr. Kyle the opportunity to observe at first hand in the studios the deplorable conditions which the producer is forced to stomach in his relations with many overpaid actors, who hardly earn their salt.

"The exhibitors got together. Now I am going to make the producers get together. I am going to try to lick producing and distributing conditions.

"I am leaving the World Film in excellent shape. The product is provided for up to June 1. I know of no other company in the country that is twenty-four pictures ahead of its schedule.

"'Stolen Orders,' on which I am working, is not to be a World Film production. It is an all-star subject on the lines of 'The Whip,' comprising in the cast the best players in our studio. I have met the expense of the subject out of my own pocket.

"I shall continue as president of the National Association until August, and I am going to work along the same lines as in the past regardless of who is hurt."

Mr. Brady left for Detroit February 2. He said possibly he might also visit Chicago, but that in any event he would be back in New York February 6.

FRANKLYN RITCHIE KILLED IN ACCIDENT.

The many friends of Franklyn Ritchie will learn with deep regret of his death, the result of his automobile turning over on the Santa Barbara road. Mr. Ritchie was a well-known screen player, his last work having been with the American Company. Prior to that he was for a long time with the Biograph, playing leading roles. Two years ago Mr. Ritchie retired from studio work and entered the automobile business. He was fifty-two years old.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Manhattan Local Meeting

New York Exhibitors Hold Long Session on a Variety of Subjects.

A SPECIAL meeting of the Manhattan local of the Exhibitors' League was called at its rooms in New York City on Tuesday, January 29. There were at least one hundred in attendance. Preliminary to the regular order of business, Grant Anson, chairman of the law and legislative committee, introduced Senator Peter Dailey of the Borough of Queens, who addressed the meeting. Mr. Dailey had been instrumental in the defeat of the Wheeler tax bill and cast the deciding vote against the Sunday opening bill at last year's session of the legislature. He warned the exhibitors to beware of the introduction of similar bills in this year's legislature. John Manheimer then introduced John J. Goldstein of Goldstein and Goldstein, who has been retained as attorney this year for the league. Mr. Goldstein said he simply wished to become acquainted with his future clients and give them a chance to look him over. He also said "While I have been retained as your counsel for the year, I do not wish you to feel obliged to continue my services if they are not satisfactory. If, at the end of a week, month or three months, you feel that I am not worthy of your hire, you are at liberty to cancel our agreement. I do not want to take money I do not earn."

The music license question of the Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers was introduced by Lee A. Ochs. He said that he was just in receipt of two or three contributions of $3 each, from recent and non-members of the League, which he had refused to accept. He explained that exhibitors generally had got the impression that he and the paper with which he is connected were raising a fund to defend any exhibitor who might be summoned to answer complaint against him by the Society, could send $3 and he would see that their case was taken care of. This impression is all wrong. The facts are these: The National Exhibitors' League of America passed a resolution at Chicago in convention assembled that every member of the National League would pay $3 each, to make a test case of any exhibitor who might be brought into court for trial. Such a test case had been tried before Justice Goff in New York City and his decision was being awaited. Mr. Ochs went on:

"Already the National League has expended $800 on this case and this was only part of the cost. As is well known, only a small percentage of league members had paid their $3, and those who haven't expect me or the paper I represent to answer every summons they receive from the attorneys of the music society. This would be impossible, as it costs $10 to file answer to those summons and the $3 fund does not provide for the care of them. If an exhibitor disregards the advice of his league president not to use restricted music until this test is decided one way or the other, then it is up to such exhibitor to take care of his own summons."

The secretary of Manhattan local was instructed to send notice to all its members who had not done so, advising them to contribute in accordance with the action of the Chicago convention last July. Many members at the meeting came forward and paid their contributions to the treasurer, without receiving notice.

Representatives of the "Manufacturer to Exhibitor Direct" who were there to present their plan to the league members were introduced. Joseph A. Golden, of the Triangle, was the first speaker. He laid briefly before them the plan, in outline. He said among other things: "When we deal with you boys we are through with the state rights purchaser. I personally want to break away from the state rights man and deal with the exhibitors direct, to eliminate excessive profits and get down to a stable basis of business operation."

C. C. Pettijohn, general manager and promoter of the plan, was next introduced as a member of the American Exhibitors' Association. He admitted it, but said the allied convention of exhibitors at Washington last February had brought the two organizations closer together and made their differences only a question of time before they would be forgotten. He emphasized his belief in the direct to exhibitors' plan and advised them to accept it as the only solution of waste and the excessive cost of distribution.

I. E. Chadwick, of the Ivan Co., was the last speaker. He went into a detailed explanation of the plan as set forth in the published statements and explained the great cost of production made necessary by the middleman in distribution and the enormous salaries paid stars, many of whom were overpaid. By the direct plan the cost of distribution would not be over 10 per cent. The selection of stars, he announced, would be governed by the choice of the exhibitors who would be represented on the board of selection, in choosing the kind of plays they preferred, the stars and the directors. He also announced that already 1,700 of the 2,700 days needed to perfect the plan had been signed by the exhibitors and two more producers had joined the plan, namely, Herbert Brenon and Shubert, Hammerstein and Ince. "If the exhibitors," he said, "want Mary Pickford or Douglas Fairbanks, there is nothing to prevent you getting them or any other star. Anyone of them, if the exhibitors do not want them, aren't worth a plugged nickel." In answer to a question, he said that the books of the plan would be open to inspection and a certified accounting on each feature of expenses and profits would be given to the members. A motion was made and carried that the Manhattan local indorse the plan and a committee of five be appointed to confer with the seven manufacturers comprising the plan. The following were selected for the committee: Sydney Cohn, Ike Hartstall, S. Moross, I Eidelstein and Mr. Gollingino.

The question of closing on Lincoln's Birthday, Tuesday, February 12, was discussed as to possibility of gaining permission to remain open that day. It was decided that it would do no harm to write Fuel Administrator Garfield and others in Washington, requesting permission, but it was thought that there was little hope of receiving an exception to the general ruling of the Administration.

It was reported by Sydney Cohn, chairman of the selection committee, that at the next meeting of the league, they would have some definite information on selection of the new home for the Manhattan local exhibitors' league.

On motion to adjourn one of the most interesting exhibitors' meetings was brought to a close 5:10 P. M., after a four hours' session.

OREGON LEAGUE TO HAVE PROJECTION ROOM.

Cocks Addresses New England Men

Board of Review Official Pleads for Care in Selection of Pictures in Soldier and Sailor Communities.

A DELEGATION of exhibitors attended a meeting of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island branches of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, which was held at the headquarters of the organization, 127 Pleasant street, Boston, Tuesday afternoon, January 29. Several guests also were present, including Orrin G. Cocks, secretary of the National Board of Review; John M. Casey, motion picture censor for Boston under Mayor James M. Curley, and Miss Rose M. Tapley, who is touring the United States under the auspices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Michael J. Lydon, of the Hamilton theatre, Dorchester, who was elected president of the league at its annual convention Tuesday, January 22, presided.

A motion for action was made by former president Ernest H. Horstmann, who announced the receipt of a letter from National President Lee A. Ochs, stating that the latter had sent a telegram to Fuel Administrator Harry A. Garfield at Washington, requesting that motion picture theaters throughout the country be allowed to remain open on Lincoln's Birhday, February 12, and close on the following day. Mr. Horstmann moved that the league members embody a telegram along the same lines and wire it immediately to the National Fuel Dictator. The motion was passed.

"I am very much against New England exhibitors giving the long shows they are now doing," said Miss Tapley in a short address. "You should not and cannot afford to give your patrons double programs. No other territory is doing it and there is no reason in the world why you boys should do it. You can remedy this evil only by organization. One man can't say he will play one feature, one reel of comedy and a news reel and then the other exhibitor say he will present a double feature bill and several single reels."

Miss Tapley declared that the men who could not see the shorter program will be the ones to lose out in the long run. The people get tired of pictures when the show lasts so long.

Jacob Lourie, manager of the Beacon theater, took issue with Miss Tapley in the discussion. He said the moving picture houses were forced to give the long shows in order to compete with the vaudeville houses, which put on pictures in addition to their acts.

In his introduction of Orrin G. Cocks, secretary of National Board of Review, as the principal speaker of the afternoon, President Lydon paid a high tribute to the moving picture censor when he declared he had done a great deal in helping to make the industry what it is today.

Mr. Cocks declared that he had always tried to do his best to aid the motion picture industry and that he would continue to do so. "I come today as a representative of the Government," he said, "to see that motion pictures get their proper recognition in the United States."

Mr. Cocks gave the members an interesting talk on ways in which every exhibitor may further improve conditions with which the soldiers and sailors are bound to come in contact.

"I am here today to talk to you gentlemen as American to American on a standpoint of military efficiency," continued Mr. Cocks. "Many persons don't realize the leisure time of the soldier and sailor is the crucial time. But it is. The question of conditions in the vicinity of training camps and naval statons is a paramount one and must be looked into. There are a number of ships and camps here in Greater Boston. As soon as the soldier or sailor gets leave of absence he hurries to the centers to enjoy himself among the crowds of people.

"Please use the same care you have already done in the selection of pictures where the soldier and sailor is. This is the same appeal I am making from Portsmouth, N. H., to Norfolk, Va. You men have it in your hands to help the Government to send the fighting men to France 98 or 99 per cent. efficient.

"You are a great potential power. Your assistance is absolutely necessary. I have no criticism to pass on Boston picture houses. The pictures all right for families might not be all right for the soldier.

"I expect you to look far more intelligently at the pictures than I do. You should get the reviews from the trade papers."

Mr. Cocks stated that to his knowledge no pictures were new being put out of a salacious or suggestive character. "Of course," he said, "there are many fine pictures that should not be shown to soldiers and sailors because of certain scenes in them."

Mr. Cocks cited the Fox production "Cleopatra." "I think that picture is one of the finest pictures I have seen in a year or so," he said. "From a dramatic standpoint it is wonderful. But there are certain sections of the picture that should be taken out for the soldiers and sailors, though."

He also pointed out "The Daughter of the Gods," which, he said, was another wonderful picture, but that certain scenes in it were harmful to the soldiers and sailors and might lead the boys on. He stated that he would not book the picture for a soldier or sailor community.

On the topic of aiding the young men who are not supplied with money to pay for amusements out of camp, Mr. Cocks said that, though people generally thought the soldiers and sailors had no expenses because their clothing, food and shelter were given them by the Government, it should be remembered that they subscribed to the Liberty Loans and for war insurance and for other things, and that many of them who had dependents had but little left when it came time for them to seek recreation away from camp or ship. These are the men and boys he wants exhibitors to aid. Mr. Cocks continued:

"Some arrangement should be made to take care of detachments of, say, twenty men selected by the chaplain of the ship or division. The proposition of having blocks of troops sit in one section of the theater had failed in other sections of the country, because the troops will not sit in the seats. A plan of letting the men come in and sit down anywhere is much better. If as individuals you exhibitors are willing to do this some plan could be affected."

Leon Dadmun presented a motion that the league accord Mr. Cocks and all others every possible support.

Those present included M. J. Lydon, president; B. H. Cornell, secretary; Harry I. Wasserman, Mrs. Marcella Ayer, Mrs. Alice Rice Carroll, Stanley Sumner, E. H. Horstmann, Charles Mailley, Elmer R. Daniels, Leon Dadmun, Charles Hodgdon, Jacob Lourie, Samuel Grant, John M. Casey, Al Allen, Joseph Mack, P. J. Lydon, A. Montague, Al Somerby, George Bendslev, Charles Ross and Frank Brown.

Rainey Working for Exhibitors

Illinois Congressman Believes Picture Men Not Using Coal Should Be Exempt From Closing Rule.

THE exhibitors of those sections of the country that draw light and power from hydroelectric plants and who are not dependent upon coal for the heating of their houses have a champion in Congressman Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois. In Mr. Rainey's congressional district is a large number of motion picture theaters which come in this class, and on their behalf he has gone to the United States Fuel Administration in an effort to secure a modification of the Tuesday closing order.

In commenting upon the situation there, Mr. Rainey expressed the thought to the Moving Picure World Washington correspondent that something should be done to assist the motion picture theaters at this time in view of other circumstances which are curtailing their business. "In my district," he said, "some of the houses are heated with wood; some use coal, but all could use wood if necessary. Further, they get their light and power from the hydroelectric plant operated with the Keokuk Dam.

"These theaters, therefore, do not use coal for lights. They do not use coal for the production of power. They do not need to use coal for heating purposes. They do not produce merchandise and therefore have no freight to further clog up the railroads.

"The fuel administration officials promise consideration of this matter and I am in hopes they will view the matter as I do and treat individual cases on their merits, not bulking all together under a general ruling."

Kentucky Court Hits Sunday Shows

Decides Sabbath Opening Is Illegal—Leading Exhibitors Say Many Houses Will Have to Close.

EXCHANGEMEN are much disturbed over the decision of the Kentucky Court of Appeals recently handed down to the effect that under existing Kentucky statutes it is illegal to operate on Sunday.

The matter has been hard fought by exhibitors in the Blue Grass State for several years, and both the exhibitors and the interested film men had hoped that in spite of the existence of the old "blue laws" theaters might continue to operate on Sunday. They point to the case in Ohio, where appellate courts have been compelled to hold that under an old statute no amusements may operate on Sunday, but where, none the less, the law is regarded as a dead letter, and is not enforced.

As there are over thirty houses in Covington and Newport, all securing their film supplies from Cincinnati exchanges, these exchange men will feel the loss of business, although it is believed that the larger houses, running two programs a week, will still run two programs. The smaller houses, however, and all of those running a nightly change of program, will, of course, cut out Sunday films, which have ordinarily been the best of the week, and this is an actual loss of business.

Several leading exhibitors on the Kentucky side say that many houses will be compelled to go out of business entirely, as they have been relying on their Sunday business to keep profits at a living level, the rest of the week generally showing a loss, or, at best, an even break. B. D. Griffith, of Covington, and George Strotman, another veteran exhibitor, both took this view, stating that the only possible salvation for many exhibitors will be a liberal view of the law and its non-enforcement, especially as it is believed that there are very few communities where public sentiment will favor Sunday closing of the theaters.

MARYLAND HAS BILL TO STOP CENSORSHIP.

Officials of the Maryland Exhibitors' League at their headquarters, 210 West Lexington street, Baltimore, appear to be keeping silent on the question of censorship. From other sources it has been learned, however, that the bill to repeal the censor law and abolish the moving picture censors has been introduced at Annapolis in the House by Representative Edward S. Delaplaine of the Frederick delegation.

Regarding the financial end of the Censor Board of Maryland, according to Governor Harrington's budget sent to the Legislature, one of the controller's items making up the increased income is for moving picture censors, $8,000.

One of the items is shown: Motion picture censors, amount expended, 1917, $13,229; Governor's allowance, 1919, $13,500; 1920, $13,353.

Pictures Released by Uncle Sam

Committee on Public Information, Division of Films, Gives List of Subjects Already Made and Making.

IN its report to the President for the period from April 14 to December 31, 1917, the Committee on Public Information gives detailed information of the work of the Division of Films which had been organized to make and distribute moving pictures to inform the American people about the purposes and progress of the Government's war activities. At first, the division had its own staff of operators to take its photographs. Later arrangements were made to have this work done by the photographic division of the Army Signal Corps.

Distribution is carried on through the councils of defense in the various states; wherever the councils of defense are unable to take on the extra work of the distribution it is done by various patriotic committees or societies in the different communities. The films are shown at public meetings of all sorts to half a million people a week.

There are two kinds of service: First, the weekly service that distributes one new subject a week of educational or propaganda value; second, the feature service, whose pictures, comprising an evening's entertainment, are wholly of a propagandist character.

The films thus far distributed in the weekly service are:

The 1917 Recruit, 2 editions (training of the National Army).
The Second Liberty Loan.
Ready for the Fight (Artillery and Cavalry maneuvers).
Soldiers of the Sea (Marine Corps in training).
Torpedo Boat Destroyers (naval maneuvers).
Submarines.
Army and Navy Sports.
The Spirit of 1917 (the largest maneuver staged in America; an attack by the Jackies at Lake Bluff upon Fort Sheridan, Ill.).
In a Southern Camp (general Army maneuvers).
The Lumber Jack (showing the growth of the Lumber Jack Regiment for reconstruction work in Europe).
The Medical Officers' Reserve Corps in Action (showing the development of the Medical Corps and training).
Fire and Gas (showing maneuvers of the new Thirtieth Engineer Regiment).
American Ambulances (complete display of ambulance work).
Labor's Part in Democracy's War (labor-union activities in the war).
Annapolis (naval officers in the making).

There are now in process of manufacture the following:

Ship Building (construction of all types of ships).
Making of Big Guns.
Making of Small Arms.
Making of Uniforms for the Soldiers.
Activities of the Engineers.
Woman's Part in the War.
Men Who Are Doing Things (portraying upon the screen, as far as possible, every person who is mentioned in public print as being active in war preparations).
The Conquest of the Air (airplane and balloon maneuvers).

The large-picture service has three pictures in the process of making:

(1) The Immigrant, to be released January 1, is a direct appeal to the immigrant, not only to become an American citizen but to feel his responsibility as a citizen.
(2) Columbia, portraying historical events in America and the growth of the democratic spirit of America that is now fighting the militaristic spirit of Germany.
(3) German Spies, to expose the methods of German propagandists in this country, to teach the public to refrain from talking carelessly, and to watch for those who are circulating rumors and false news.

The scenario department is in charge of Dr. George Pierce Baker. It is located at Harvard University, which institution has turned over all its facilities, and has given Dr. Baker leave of absence on pay. Radcliffe College, with which institution Dr. Baker is also associated, has extended a similar courtesy to the division. Associated with Dr. Baker are Dr. Worthington Ford, head of the history department of Harvard University; Professor Carver, head of the economics department; and Messrs. Hollywood and MacAlarney, of the Pathe and Famous Players scenario departments.

Thus far, the pictures have been quite generally used for the purpose of giving benefits for the various war activities, particularly to raise money for the war camp community fund. Young Men's Christian Association funds, and local camp funds. At one showing alone, in Boston, at Symphony Hall, with only three days' preparation for the meeting, over $16,000 was raised for war camp community fund.

All films are turned over to the Foreign Picture Service and sent to all countries.

The Division of Films is not in competition with members of the motion picture industry, but endeavors to co-operate with them wherever possible. Its pictures are not put in motion picture theaters except where these are especially engaged for the purposes of some war benefit. They are shown free, except where they are made use of for such benefits. Producers are encouraged to enter the field of making patriotic pictures, and many are taking advantage of the advisory functions of the scenario department.

Chevrons on Edward J. Langford

Edward J. Langford is a corporal in Company K of the 107th Infantry, and is stationed at Camp Wadsworth, near Spartanburg, S. C. Actor Langford was with the World Film Company and made his first appearance on the screen with Clara Kimball Young in "The Dark Silence." He was afterward featured with Alice Brady in "The Woman Alone" and "A Hungry Heart." Later he played with Gail Kane in "As Man Made Her" and with Ethel Clayton in "Yankee Pluck" and in "A Stolen Paradise." He worked in his last picture, "The Dormant Power," even after he had enlisted. He writes that he is finding the work very interesting and is anxious to get a chance to do his bit "over there" in France.

Edward J. Langford.

Corporal Langford is one of the hundreds who are showing the mettle of the young motion picture makers. Many have already made glowing records in the actual work on the battlefields. Some have been decorated for valor and many more will probably be. Best wishes and good luck to them all.

Betzwood Film Co. Buys Lubin's Betzwood Plant

New Company Acquires All the Lubin Patents —Ira McLowry Will Have Charge of Production—Players of Great Promise Engaged

OFFICIAL announcement of the organization and purposes of the Betzwood Film Company is made by Clarence Wolf, the president of the company, from its fiscal headquarters in the banking establishment of the Wolf Brothers & Co., in the Empire Building, Philadelphia.

The importance in financial circles of the incorporators and the extent and character of the equipment acquired by the company together with careful selection of department heads entitles the new organization to compete at the start for a leading place in the motion picture industry.

The initial step in the enterprise was the purchase outright and for cash of the Betzwood plant from Siegmund Lubin. The plant covers over 400 acres with three-quarters of a mile fronting on the Schuylkill river, about a mile from Valley Forge and twenty miles from Philadelphia. There is a Pennsylvania Railroad station on the grounds with a Philadelphia and Reading station several hundred feet from the gates.

Daylight studio buildings with room for productions of any size and equipped with up to the minute lighting systems; separate dressing buildings for companies and storage structures crowded with elaborate scenery are conveniently located on the grounds.

For moving picture purposes Betzwood is unique in respects aside from spaciousness. It is situated in a region famous for picturesque scenery. Within its own walls are many buildings to gladden the eye of an artistic director. There is a many towered mansion with great rooms and paneled halls and carved staircases which could be duplicated only in a European chateau.

There is a conservatory covering a third of an acre with a roof frame in which the copper alone represents a value of $25,000. The boathouse on the river is a turreted edifice of three stories. One of the several barns will accommodate two hundred head of stock. There is a natural lake and a deer park and groves of old trees and shrubbery of every native variety and imported from every quarter of the globe. There is a western village which looks as if it might have been transported from Arizona and planted here.

Of more practical import, however, is the series of factories comprising the film developing and printing plant, which, so far as size is concerned, is not only the largest, but larger than any two other plants in the world combined. More notable is the patented machinery for film printing employed exclusively at Betzwood.

These patents acquired from Siegmund Lubin constitute one of the extraordinary facilities of the new company. Beautiful in construction the machines operate with wondrous automatic precision. In fact, eighty per cent. of the Betzwood printing process is accomplished mechanically, a point that will be appreciated by experts. There is one machine that will automatically detect and stop itself on a variation of a thousandth of an inch.

Certain perfections in the revealed print on the screen can only be achieved through the Betzwood patent process. As the plant has not been in operation since the withdrawal of Siegmund Lubin from the industry the new company has decided to employ a staff of inspectors qualified to review exhibited pictures and make report on apparent indications of infringement of any of the processes covered by the Betzwood patents. It is the determination of the company to vigorously protect itself in this direction.

With enclosed studio grounds covering over 400 acres, completely equipped with every conceivable requirement, the Betzwood Film Company possesses an additional and essential advantage in item of capital. In the making of pictures their financial resources are practically without limit. Briefly, the company is able to dispose instantly of the financial end of picture propositions of any magnitude.

The entrance of sound capital in conjunction with other exceptional qualifications cannot fail to be welcomed by all who have at heart the welfare of the motion picture industry.

At the technical end, the affairs of the plant are under the general management of Ira M. Lowry qualified by long experience and recognized ability in every detail of picture making. Just before the formation of the Betzwood Company Mr. Lowry scored an individual triumph in his production of "For the Freedom of the World" for the S. & M. Film Company, of which he was the projector. No one has a greater circle of friends among stars, producers and directors and other motion picture workers than the energetic general manager at Betzwood.

That the company has another important asset in the membership of Leonard A. Blumberg will be instantly endorsed by the theatrical world in which he has long been conspicuous by reason of his abilities and remarkable acquaintance with members of every branch of the profession. With apologies for the mixing of mechanical metaphors, Mr. Blumberg may best be described as a dynamo with the switch always wide open. Another member of the company who has been allotted active duties is Norman Jefferies, a former Philadelphia newspaper man whose interests during recent years have been in the vaudeville department of theatricals.

Having put the printing factories into perfect order for immediate operation the Betzwood Company is now devoting attention to its plans for producing. In this particular it proposes to reach for quality instead of quantity. With no schedule demanding hurried releases it will seek the exceptional and novel in screen material. The story or play that offers no more inducement than the fact that there is no reason why it could not be made into a picture will have no chance with the Betzwood Company.

Nor does the company contemplate the game of bidding against other producers and the dummy for the services of stars. In fact, with ability to go into the market with practically unlimited capital, it is deliberately and confidently selecting to feature in its initial productions two artists who are new to screendom.

Louis Bennison, now leading in the western comedy drama, "Johnny Get Your Gun," and Tsen Mei, a full-blooded Chinese girl, at present a Keith vaudeville feature, are the trump cards with which the Betzwood Company will lead off.

Mr. Bennison, of course, will be featured in parts permitting his delineation of western character type which as revealed in "Johnny Get Your Gun" has been one of the biggest hits of the present theatrical season. In real life Mr. Bennison has had the experience of a rancher and is adept at the work and play of life in the open.

Standing over six feet in his socks and wearing the smile that will not come off until his friends are being crowded, Mr. Bennison during his present tour of the West is being described by critics as America's foremost exponent of western character.

Katherine Richardson in the St. Louis "Star" writes:

"Louis Bennison plays the role of 'this here cow-puncher' with all the trimmings. He's got the soft drawl down all right, he walks with a limp because he's used to wearing spurs and has legs rather bowed from so many long nights in the saddle. He is shy when he meets a woman and he has divinely blue eyes. He always is innocent and quiet in manner, but, oh, boy, when he's mad, those eyes shoot fire. Even Bill Hart hasn't a better steely glance than our hero."

Carlos F. Hurd in the St. Louis "Post Dispatch says:

"Picture Douglas Fairbanks, his stature increased and his features very much improved, transferred from the movies to the talkies and you have the measure of Bennison's ability as an entertainer."

Albert C. Weyman writes in the St. Louis "Times":

"Louis Bennison to the person informed as to who's who on the American stage means the man who has scored the biggest personal success of the season. He is that rare specimen, an actor by profession, but an actor in the best sense of the word. He is all personal magnetism, good looking in a wholesome way and he has a friendly all-embracing smile that wins from the start."

And in the inevitable competition and comparisons that will follow his first step into the screen, Mr. Bennison will have another potent asset: Youth, a quality that cannot be denied.

In Tsen Mei, a beautiful and gifted Chinese girl, the Betzwood company is confident that it has a sure card, one that cannot fail to be recognized as a star at its first twinkling on the screen. Born in Canton, China, twenty-four years ago, Tsen Mei has been learning something new every day. She is a marvel of versatility. An accomplished linguist, her English is a triumph in correctness. Completing her musical education in an American conservatory she is appraised by critics as a vocal wonder with a range from baritone to lyric soprano and including male tenor. Her vocal imitations cover every known variety of bird or animal.

She took a law course at Columbia College in New York and has her diploma. Bitten by the uplift germ she determined to investigate woman's experience in the business world and held down for six months a stenographer's job in a Wall Street broker's office.

Humoring the wanderlust she started a year ago on a concert tour of Australia and New Zealand from which she returned recently and signed for a tour of the Keith vaudeville circuit, until entering on her contract with the Betzwood Company in May.

Tsen Mei is an expert although reckless horsewoman. She excels in swimming and other sports. Were she locked out of a third or fourth floor apartment she could go hand over hand up a rope and laugh at locks. And, what is more to the purpose, she is a proficient actress, and in screen tests shows a cameo photograph.

The rare gift of wearing bewildering gown creations is also hers. Before departing for Australia Tsen Mei appeared at the Palace Theatre in New York City. Her number on the program immediately followed the Fashion Revue. The "Sun" remarked that after the revelation of the artistry of the combined New York modistes it remained for a demure Chinese maiden to walk out and step about a year ahead of their efforts.

The task of preparing original stories for Louis Bennison and for Tsen Mei has been entrusted to J. Allan Dunn, who with the work well in hand has gone into seclusion at his summer home at Lennox. The delivery of the scripts will be the signal for the starting of the wheels at Betzwood.

The business offices of the company are in the Empire Building, Philadelphia.

Death of Leander Richardson

Famous Dramatic Writer and Publicity Man Dies of Pneumonia After Brief Illness.

LEANDER RICHARDSON, widely known as a writer on dramatic subjects, editor of dramatic papers and an author of no mean ability, died Saturday morning, February 2, at his home, 30 West 47th street, New York, after an illness of but twelve days, the cause of death being bronchial pneumonia. The deceased was sixty-two years of age and leaves a widow, two sons and two daughters.

The funeral services were held at 10:30 o'clock Monday morning, February 4, at St. Malachy's church, Eighth avenue and 49th street, where requiem mass was celebrated. The pall bearers were Daniel Frohman, William A. Pinkerton, Henry Dixey, Edward E. Rice, Alf. Hayman, A. O. Brown, Robert McIntyre, Charles Stone, Joseph Low and Frederick McCloy. Interment was made at St. Raymond's Cemetery, Westchester County, New York.

Leander Richardson was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, February 28, 1856, and was therefore 62 years old this month. His father was Albert Dean Richardson, a newspaper editor, who became one of the most distinguished men of his time in the profession of journalism.

The younger Richardson was educated in the schools of Cincinnati and came to New York with his father when Albert Dean Richardson was made editor of the New York Tribune. Leander's first connection with a newspaper was as a reporter on the Tribune. Subsequently he joined the staff of the Boston Herald and became European correspondent for that newspaper. He was also a general writer and dramatic critic on the staff of the New York Times. Probably Mr. Richardson's best work was during the several years he was attached to The Morning Telegraph as a writer on current topics of the stage.

Mr. Richardson was intimately and prominently concerned with theatricals both as a business and as a profession for the greater part of his career and held high rank in the field of newspaper achievement.

Among Leander Richardson's works were such novels as "The Dark City," "Lord Dunmersley" and "As Ye Sow." Others were adapted for the American stage, including "Olivette," "The Snake Charmer," "Anselma' and "The Nominee." He also wrote the plays "Under the City Lamps" and "The Millionaire."

He wrote a prodigious amount of copy as a "free lance" in the newspaper profession, and it was his fortune to be in that region when General Custer and his men were massacred. His description of the scenes of Indian fighting on that historic occasion are among Mr. Richardson's most graphic writings.

During his later years Mr. Richardson devoted his energies to theatrical publicity, at which he was a past master. At the time of his death he was publicity manager for the World Film Corporation.

Steger May Succeed Brady

Proposal to Take Charge of World Film Productions Said to Have Been Made to Oldtime Theatrical Man.

IN CONNECTION with the rumor that Julius Steger is to be the successor of William A. Brady as Director-General of the World Film Corporation, a representative of the Moving Picture World called on Mr. Steger to verify the report.

Mr. Steger was reluctant to volunteer information, neither denying nor affirming the rumor. He did admit, however, that negotiations to that effect were pending, and his decision in the matter will largely depend upon Joseph M. Schenck, who is Mr. Steger's friend and business associate.

Julius Steger.

Mr. Steger feels that nothing could induce him to assume the great responsibilities of that position if, thereby, his partnership with Mr. Schenck would have to be severed, as he desires at all times to have the privilege, if only in an advisory capacity, to serve the interests of Mr. Schenck, thereby insuring for himself in return the valuable cooperation of Mr. Schenck in fulfilling the great responsibilities as Director-General of the World Film Corporation. Mr. Schenck is taking an active part in the negotiations now pending.

Mr. Steger, for many years, has been one of the best known figures on the American stage. As an actor-singer, and later on as a headliner in high-class vaudeville, his extraordinary success is well remembered by theatergoers from the Atlantic to the Pacific. His achievements on the screen as a star and producer are the following productions, made under his personal supervision:

"The Fifth Commandment," starring Julius Steger; "The Master of the House," starring Julius Steger; "The Blindness of Love," starring Julius Steger; "The Stolen Triumph," starring Julius Steger; "The Prima Donna's Husband," starring Holbrook Blinn; "The Libertine," starring John Mason and Alma Hanlon; "The Law of Compensation," starring Norma Talmadge; "Redemption," starring Evelyn Nesbit and her son Russell Thaw; "Just a Woman," starring Charlotte Walker. He is at present preparing for the screen debut of Miss Anna Case, the celebrated young prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera House. Mr. Steger is associated with Joseph M. Schenck, president of the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation and the Roscoe Arbuckle Comedies Company, in the production of state right feature pictures under the firm of S. & S. Photoplays.

LELAND OPENS MAINE BRANCH.

The Leland Theater Supply House of Montpelier, Vt., in order to accommodate the large number of its Maine customers, has opened a branch office in Portland, at 515A Congress street.

WILLIAM RUSSELL GOES BACK TO COAST.

William Russell after a visit of several weeks has left the dimmed lights of New York to take care of themselves and has left for the west coast to start work on a screen play.

Keeney Engages Players

Assembles a Notable Cast to Support Miss Calvert in "A Romance of the Underworld."

WHEN Frank A. Keeney organized the moving picture corporation which bears his name he declared that he would spare no expense to make its productions up-to-date and artistic in every particular. That he is making good his promise is evidenced by the manner in which he is proceeding with the production of his first picture. He has surrounded his star, Catherine Calvert, with an all-star cast, including Eugene O'Brien, David Powell, Edwin Forsberg and Sybil Carmen.

Eugene O'Brien.

Mr. O'Brien is one of the great favorites among the leading men of the screen. He is perhaps best known for his work with Norma Talmadge in her most important productions. Mr. Powell has a distinguished career on the dramatic stage with Beerbohm Tree, Ellen Terry and Forbes-Robertson. His first appearance in films in America was as leading man for Mary Pickford. He has also played opposite Edna Goodrich, Ann Murdock and Olive Tell in Empire All-Star Picture Plays. Mr. Forsberg is known in the film world for his excellent work in "Madame X" and other important productions. He is now appearing in a leading role in "Seven Days' Leave," the Park Theater success. The witching personality of Sybil Carmen as the "Moon Girl" in Ziegfeld's "Midnight Frolics" has been the talk of the town. Few stage beauties in recent years have gained such celebrity as she.

Sybil Carmen.

Ben Kutler, Mr. Keeney's scenario editor, has assumed the added responsibilities of studio manager. He has had a good deal of experience in studio work, having directed a number of important pictures, and therefore will prove a valuable coadjutor to Director Kirkwood.

The adaptation of "A Romance of the Underworld" for screen production by the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, with Catherine Calvert as star, is the work of Mildred Considine. Miss Considine made the screen version of "Ghosts of Yesterday," Norma Talmadge's latest and most successful picture, from the play "Two Women," by Rupert Hughes. She has just finished an adaptation of "Common Clay," in which Fannie Ward will be starred by the Pathe Company, and an original scenario, "All Wrong," for Bryant Washburn, of the same company. "Damnation of Doubt," also her work, is to be the first picture released by the Harry McRae Webster Company.

S. S. HUTCHINSON RETURNS HOME.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., has returned to the Chicago offices after an extended trip to New York and Washington, where he was in conference with George Creel, relative to important motion picture developments.

New Shipping Regulations

Inter-State Commerce Board Approves Amendments Made By Bureau of Explosives.

FILM shipments will go forward under revised regulations submitted, last week, by the Bureau of Explosives to the Transportation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, when the proposed amendments to paragraph No. 43 are submitted to and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington.

The new sections, c, d, e and f, refer to shipment of unexposed motion picture film, non-inflammable film and shipments of film with advertising matter and should be given careful attention by distributors, exchanges and exhibitors.

The amended paragraph No. 43 as revised to date by the Bureau of Explosives follows:

43. (a) Motion picture films must be packed in spark proof metal boxes or cans complying with Specification No. 32. Not more than eight reels (approximately 1,000 feet each) may be packed in one such outside container.

(b) Motion picture films may also be packed in outside wooden boxes complying with Specification No. 19, provided each reel is placed in a tightly closed inside metal container. The gross weight of such a package must not exceed 400 pounds.

(c) Unexposed motion picture film in tight rolls must be packed in interior metal cans not to exceed five rolls (approximately 2,000 feet) in one inside can; the cover of each inside can must fit tightly and be held in place by a strip of adhesive tape or paper. The interior cans must be securely packed in outside wooden boxes complying with Specification No. 19. The gross weight of one outside container must not exceed 400 pounds.

(d) Non-inflammable motion picture (cellulose acetate) films may be accepted without other restrictions when securely packed in strong packages of sufficient strength to carry to destination without rupture or leakage of contents; each outside container must be plainly marked "Motion Picture Film" and in addition must be market "Not Dangerous" as prescribed by paragraph 34 (c).

(e) When non-inflammable motion picture films are packed in the same outside container with inflammable motion picture films, the outside packages must bear the yellow label and the total contents of the outside container must not exceed the quantity or gross weight permitted for inflammable films.

(f) Shipments of motion picture film with advertising matter attached to the outside container, must not be offered for shipment. Shippers desiring to include advertising matter with their shipments of moving picture films must place the same inside the outside box containing the films.

Note—Shipping containers complying with rule 43 (a) effective October 1, 1914, and purchased prior to February 1, 1918, may be used for the shipment of motion picture films until September 1, 1918, provided they are securely closed and in good condition; and provided, further, that if fitted with telescopic covers, the covers fit tightly against the shoulder of the box body. Leather or web straps, if used, must be in good condition and tightly fastened. String or rope must not be used.

Fairbanks Asked to Make Army Picture

Invited by Surgeon General to Provide Real Entertainment for Soldiers and Sailors.

THAT Douglas Fairbanks is a prominent representative of the motion picture industry is evidently the opinion of the United States Government, which has requested the acrobatic actor to prepare a propaganda film for distribution among the men of the army and navy, in their camps and stations, here and abroad.

Major William F. Snow, of the Surgeon General's office, in a letter to Mr. Fairbanks said it was the desire to have him prepare, under the auspices of the surgeon general of the army, a motion picture designed for educational work among the military forces of the United States.

"The consensus of opinion," continued Major Snow in his letter, "among a number of the surgeon general's staff is that it is most desirable to have you as the prototype of the doctrine, as the protagonist of the drama. Will you do this for the United States Government as a patriotic contribution? This form of educational work constitutes an important part of the surgeon general's office and of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities. Your participation, therefore, would be a valuable and far-reaching service.

"What we want to put across to the men is the idea that clean living and physical fitness are, after loyalty and obedience, the prime requisites of the soldier. This picture to be most effective in presenting its propaganda must be intermixed and sugar-coated with unalloyed entertainment."

Immediately upon receipt of Major Snow's letter, Mr. Fairbanks wired Washington that he is prepared to undertake suggested film and requested further details. In the meantime the player, with his director, Allan Dwan, is at work on a scenario, which they will submit in the near future to the office of the surgeon general.

Government Organizing Film Bureaus

In the Last Month Eleven Offices Have Been Established in As Many States.

THE Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, announces that there have been created, during the past thirty days, eleven new distributing bureaus in as many states, making a total of sixteen distributing points in the United States organized by this division.

The most important of these bureaus is the New York Bureau, which was created last week by the New York State Council of Defense, at a meeting presided over by Governor Whitman. A motion picture committee was created consisting of J. Hamblen Sears, chairman; Robert A. MacAlarney and Lewis G. Kaufman, the last named representing the Mayor's Committee on National Defense. This new committee will absorb the functions of the former motion picture bureau of the Mayor's Committee and will expand the distribution of the Government's films throughout the entire state. The new committee will inaugurate plans for effective film distribution in the state.

In Pennsylvania a new bureau has also been created, with Edgar S. McKaig, of the publicity bureau of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce as chairman. A council composed of Pennsylvania's foremost film distributors and exhibitors is being organized to supervise the exhibitions of official films in that state. Herbert Quicksall, editor of the Photoplay World, will direct the publicity for the Philadelphia bureau.

In Indiana, George Ade, the author, who is giving most of his time toward keeping public sentiment alive in his state on war activities, has organized a motion picture bureau for the State Council of Defense, placing Richard Lieber, of Indianapolis, a practical film man, in charge of the distribution.

In Connecticut the distribution of the Government's films has been put effectively under way by W. D. Ascough, manager of the Palace theater at Hartford, who was selected by the State Council of Defense. Mr. Ascough and his committee now have two shows running daily, featuring the official films.

Other distributing bureaus organized during the past month include the states of Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota, Montana, Utah, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Missouri.

LASKY PLAYERS GIVE A BENEFIT.

As a benefit for the Hollywood Studio Club, the Lasky Players recently gave John Masefield's artistic if melancholy drama, "The Tragedy of Nan," with Helen Jerome Eddy in the title role. To say that the Lasky Thespians covered themselves with glory at the initial performance would not be exaggerating.

Helen Jerome Eddy made Nan live—the pathetic, helpless yet somehow triumphant figure that one mentally creates from the reading of the play. Laurence Tibbitt was a striking character as the gaffer Pearce, while Lillian Leighton as the shrew, Mabel Van Buren as the evil cousin, Clarence Geldart as Mr. Pargetter, Cecil Irish as Dick, George Hackathorne as Artie, Harry Glazier, Irene Wiley, Leota Lorraine, Horace B. Carpenter and Wharton Jones in respective roles were individually excellent. The music was supplied by Max Fischer and J. Parks Jones during the entire act.

A considerable sum was realized for the organization.

THORPE GOES TO AERIAL SCHOOL.

Harry Thorpe, of the Douglas Fairbanks Photographic Staff, while in the midst of filming "Headin' South," received a notification from Washington, commissioning him to report immediately to the Aerial School of Photography, San Antonio, Texas.

Chief Cameraman Hugh McClung is training three new students, Glenn McWilliams, Len Powers and Connie De Roo, to turn extra cameras on the scenes in which Fairbanks does a difficult stunt or when a great number of "extras" are employed. Fairbanks and supervising director Allan Dwan arranged a dinner as a tribute to Thorpe's joining the colors. Every member of the organization was present.

MOROSCO BORROWS BELLE BENNETT.

Belle Bennett, Triangle favorite, has been borrowed by Oliver Morosco for his coming production of Ashton Stevens' new play, "Mary's Way Out," which will soon be given its premier in Los Angeles. Miss Bennett, who has just completed "A Soul in Trust," is now rehearsing for the part of the second woman and is rejoicing in a chance to return to the spoken drama.

To Novelize Chapin Subject

Albert Payson Terhune Will Write Story of 30,000 Words on "The Son of Democracy."

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE, the writer, has commenced a novelization in serial form of "The Son of Democracy," based on the Paramount series of the same name, written, directed and produced by Benjamin Chapin. Mr. Terhune will present a fiction article of some 30,000 words which will appear from day to day in the New York Evening World, commencing February 4. This novelization will be syndicated to other newspapers throughout the country.

In connection with its publication of this story in serial form, the Evening World will conduct an extensive exploitation campaign in which thousands of dollars will be spent boosting "The Son of Democracy." One sheet posters of the film will be used on delivery wagons, news stands, etc.

One of the foremost contributors to newspapers and magazines throughout the country, Mr. Terhune is widely popular among the American public. His serial stories have been read throughout the land.

Besides the foregoing publicity a special advertising campaign has already been started on Paramount's film series by Chapin. This drive is aimed particularly at the man, the woman and child who is not a regular patron of the motion picture theater. Advertising will appear in twenty-two magazines.

This advertising will be backed by a direct-by-mail campaign to several hundred thousand clubwomen, teachers, librarians, etc. Miss Rose Tapley, special Paramount traveling representative for this series of film, has already started on a tour of the country to address schools, women's clubs, etc. The first three installments will be released in February.

SMALLWOOD HEADS METRO'S CAMERA FORCE.

Ray Smallwood, one of the most efficient practical men in the industry, has been engaged by Metro as head of the camera and photographic departments of the Metro studio, 3 West Sixty-first street, New York. Mr. Smallwood formerly had his own producing company, organized for the releasing of industrial pictures. Later, with Ethel Grandin as star, he produced one two-reel picture a week for the United program, also producing for George Kleine.

Mr. Smallwood was cameraman for the old Imp company when Tom Ince was director and Doc Willat superintendent of laboratories. He was at the 101 Bison with Ince, and the two left the company together. For three years he was with Universal, being director all but one year of that time, in company with Herbert Brenon and Frank Crane.

TOM GIBSON GOES TO DENVER.

To take charge of the Comedy scripts for the National Film Company, which has recently opened its new studio in Denver, Tom Gibson has been brought from Los Angeles. His first story, the production of which has just started, is being directed by Allen Curtis, with Bud Duncan, Dot Farley and Kewpie Morgan playing the leading roles. Tom Gibson and Allen Curtis, writer and director respectively, as a team make a good combination.

Disillusionment Thy Name is "Personal Appearance," or

Why Is a Personal Appearance?

Why is it that a person who will drop ten cents into a moving picture theater box office to see a certain star in pictures will amputate ten bones from his bank account if necessary to see the same star in "real life" appear in his favorite picture house? Not being an editorial writer we can't answer our own question. However, we have a hunch that if the star's employer could absorb the general line of whispered conversation and "asides" from the audience who climbed over each other to get a peek at said celebrity he might return to his hearth fire a sadder but far wiser man.

Mystery stimulates the imagination.

A Divine Providence endowed each of us with a more or less active imagination on which fancy might paint the pictures concealed from the human eye.

We show the actor on the screen leaving a scene. Physically he has passed from our vision. The title reads, "John leaves for the big city." Thereupon we build a mental picture of our own showing John hot-footing it for the big burg. On the other hand, if after reading the above title John is shown leaving the room and sitting on a trunk waiting his next scene the little old illusion suffers an awful wallop. I am digressing slightly to get to the point. Why are most persons connected with the industry made the butt of interrogation concerning the personal side of a particular star? The "Answer Man's" column in the movie magazines contain dozens of questions pertaining to the stars' private life, such as the color of his hosiery, his pet breakfast food, whether it is true that he has two freckles on the end of his nose and the number of his children, if any.

They are curious. They want to go behind the scenes, so to speak. They have surrounded the player with certain mental conceptions which by means of "personal appearances" the producer proceeds to tear down.

Some one says "Popularity."

How in the world it increases the popularity of a star to drag him or her before the footlights away from the atmosphere of the picture is beyond us.

"I thought he was tall. Shucks! He's short."

"I thought he had a deep voice. Fudge! It's squeaky."

This is not to write in disparagement of the personal qualifications of those who are doing the splendid work in our pictures. You can't please everybody.

But you say, "The people want it."

That's just it. Make them want it. Continue to shroud the pictures and the stars in a certain mystery. Keep them in their play-world.

Let them think of the star only as they see him or her in the pictures.

Give them the pictures they want, if you are lucky enough to know what the public like, but don't bust up that perfectly good little illusion.

Besides, the personal appearances always falls on a night when the actor has a dinner engagement scheduled.

If you want an honest opinion of everybody around the studio, ask the studio boy.

No, Theophilus, a "happy ending" doesn't mean what the audience feels when the last reel of an uninteresting picture is finished.

How It Is Done at the Strand

A Discussion of Methods Which Have Actually Been Worked Out Successfully.

By Harold Edel, Managing Director.

PATRIOTISM, like charity, begins at home. Exhibitors everywhere throughout the country have come forward in perfect unison in a big effort to do their "bit" for the country since it has become such an important factor in the world war. Patriotic films and slides have been shown to help the Red Cross, the Liberty Loan and other national causes. In his letter to exhibitors recently, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo has stated his appreciation of what they have done and has asked their assistance in the new War Savings Stamps drive. That he will receive the continued support of exhibitors everywhere is readily apparent.

But now comes a situation in which exhibitors are faced with an act of patriotism which will directly affect the expense sheet. For a period they must close on Tuesdays every week. On this day their houses are dark and their employees are not able to fulfill their obligations. The question of whether or not these employees should be paid for this day each week, when no receipts are evident at the box office and the employees are not attending to their duties has caused the exhibitor to pause and ponder. President Wilson has urged the payment of salaries to employees for this day. To my mind, this is an acute patriotic item. The first few "workless Tuesdays" have passed and I understand that some exhibitors are still wondering whether or not they should pay their employees for these days. In lieu of their decision they are not doing so.

Surely it is an act of patriotism to pay employees for these days in view of the present situation. Aside from this it is an act of appreciation on the part of the manager to pay his faithful and loyal employees in that it is not due to any fault of theirs that they are unable to fulfill their duties on this day. The Strand management is paying its employees full salary for the week, despite the fact that this is a large item, which might be avoided. In every industry everyone is called upon to make sacrifices at this time. It has been said that to pay employees for this one day each week is an act of patriotism. Let it not be said that exhibitors are not patriotic when it affects the bank roll.

In speaking with a friend who recently returned from a tour of the country in which he visited many film theaters, I am told that gaudy lobbies with big poster displays are still quite evident, particularly in the smaller towns. We at the Strand have realized long since that the lobby is the show window of the theater. It is just as important for an exhibitor to display his wares in an attractive manner as it is for the department stores or any other form of commercial business. The lobby of the Strand theater resembles an art gallery and people might be seen at any hour while the theater is open, examining the watercolors in the frames. Easel frames on the floor make a lobby look a great deal smaller than is the case where the frames are placed on the walls. While many theaters may not be in a position to present paintings as the Strand does, neat one and three-sheet posters in glass covered frames are acceptable substitutes. Besides, practically every large film distributor has in stock imitation paintings, photogravures and other attractive lobby material that offer the patron a good sample of what may be expected inside the theater.

The exhibitor who still plasters the front of his theater with twenty-four sheets, which fly in the wind, is far behind the times, which fact he ought to realize. No matter what neighborhood he may cater to, neatness will attract; it is only human nature. If his patrons demand red-hot films, with red hot posters to lure them in, give them such posters, but give them in such a way that they will be most effective. A person does not have to travel outside of the metropolis of New York to see careless lobbies. I have seen cases of exhibitors who will go out of their ways and means to obtain big attractions and present lobby displays that would tend to turn away, rather than pull in, the passerby. No matter what he can or cannot afford in his entertainment or in his presentation thereof, the exhibitor should look to his lobby with continued carefulness. If he will only keep in mind that his lobby is the showroom of his institution, the place where his best efforts are mirrored to his patrons and those whom he wishes to become his patrons, he will readily appreciate the importance of this part of his theatre.

Crandall Now Owns Metropolitan Theater

With Harry and R. W. Bulkley He Purchased Title in Company Bearing His Name.

HARRY M. CRANDALL, head of the Crandall Circuit of Theaters in Washington, D. C., spent the greater part of the past week in New York busily engaged in sewing up important film contracts. Incidentally he brought with him word of the consummation of the biggest deal of the year in Washington theatrical and real estate circles. Mr. Crandall, Barry Bulkley and R. W. Bulkley purchased all right and title in the Crandall Theater Company controlling the Metropolitan theater, now nearing completion at F and Tenth streets, N. W., Washington.

The new officers of the company are Harry M. Crandall, president; Barry Bulkley, vice-president and secretary, and R. W. Bulkley, treasurer, who together with Peter A. Drury and Michael J. Keane, of the Merchants' Bank, constitute the board of directors. In the transaction Peter A. Drury conveyed to Harry M. Crandall nineteen parcels of real estate for a consideration of $175,000. The capitalization of the new Crandall Theater Company is placed at $700,000.

In addition to the Metropolitan theater, Messrs. Crandall, B. and R. W. Bulkley and A. E. Beitzell have purchased outright the recently opened and finely appointed Crandall's Knickerbocker theater, at Columbia Road and Eighteenth street, Washington. The capitalization of Crandall's Knickerbocker Theater Company is placed at $250,000.

"The addition of the Metropolitan theater augments and properly cements the Crandall circuit of theaters in Washington," said Mr. Crandall, "and gives me one of the strongest chains of motion picture houses in the country. Each and every one of these theaters is a representative house and is absolutely owned by myself and my associates. The Crandall Theater Company is not a mere booking organization; it absolutely controls every house booked by it. The Metropolitan, the Knickerbocker and Crandall's give me three fine first class first run theaters, enabling me to stage and play any motion picture production no matter how large it may be and in the various neighborhoods of the city I control the largest and finest theaters in the Savoy, the Avenue Grand, the Apollo and the American. Each of these houses is the largest and best in its particular section and shows only first run pictures in its immediate neighborhood. My chain of theaters has an aggregate seating capacity of approximately 8,500 and the houses are in the exclusive residential sections as well as in the heart of the capital city of the nation."

Mr. Crandall manages to find time to take a healthy interest in the film affairs of the country. He is president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia, is a director of the American Exhibitors' Association of New York and is the District Chairman of the National War Cooperation Commission recently established by President Wilson. Mr. Crandall is also president of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange of Washington, owning film rights extending from Delaware to Florida, and owning one of the Southern franchises in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. He is also actively interested in the recently formed Allied Exhibitors' Circuit.

SCREEN TELEGRAM OFFERS FREE LANCE OPPORTUNITY.

"Screen Telegram," the twice-a-week news reel issued by the Mutual Film Corporation to supplant the Mutual Weekly, is in the market for negative on news and short feature subjects suitable for news reel purposes. It offers an unusual opportunity for the "free lance" cameraman to submit negatives for purchase on a footage basis.

All negatives should be submitted undeveloped, mailed to "Screen Telegram," 6235 Broadway, Chicago. Packages of important news film should be mailed special delivery. Each tin of news negative should contain an explanatory caption setting out in detail the description of each scene. A duplicate caption should be mailed separately to Blaine McGrath, editor of "Screen Telegram" at the above Chicago address.

Frame lines of all negatives submitted must be between the sprocket holes and special mention must be made on captions of the light conditions under which the film was exposed. All unused negative and cut parts of used negative will be returned.

Cameramen may obtain further information by writing Blaine McGrath.

J. Searle Dawley

President Eastern Branch of the Motion Picture Directors' Association.

THE broad aims of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, which has developed during the past year into perhaps the strongest organization in the producing field, have been outlined for the World by J. Searle Dawley, the newly-elected president of the Eastern studios.

"For a long time," said Mr. Dawley, "the directors had felt the great need of an organization which could be considered the real center of the industry, and which would establish the same high standards for motion pictures as an art, as have been established for other arts and sciences by the leaders in them. In building our organization, we have sough to lay a ground work which we hope will eventually accomplish for motion pictures what the Academy of Fine Arts has accomplished for painting and sculpture.

J. Searle Dawley.

"Necessarily a secret organization, there has been some misconception about the nature of our association. There have been rumors that it has been designed solely as a protective order. Nothing is further from the facts. Instead, we aim to work with the producers, to help them in every possible way, not only to maintain the high standards of production that have already been attained, but to improve them.

"For that reason we have sought to bring together the directors from all the studios in the country into bonds of closer fellowship and helpfulness. Our membership includes every director of prominence in the Eastern and Western studios, regardless of affiliations with various manufacturers and releasing companies.

"This catholicity of membership allows us to be a clearing house for the industry as a whole. It is invaluable for the exchange of ideas and the discussion of problems which arise from day to day. It also allows us to be of mutual assistance in some of the more practical details of making productions. Any director may call upon any other for suggestions for locations of scenes and the names and addresses of actors. This of itself is a small matter, but it indicates the spirit of cooperation in obtaining the best results that animates our organization.

"We are arranging frequent conferences with men of imagination who can assist us in developing moving pictures into a fine art, and at our meetings we are inviting men of national prominence to address us, that we may exchange ideas and viewpoints about the uplift of the industry. Upon the directors, perhaps more than upon any others, devolves the great task of maintaining artistic standards and stimulating artistic progress, and we are merely uniting with that end in view."

Mr. Dawley is one of the best known producing directors in the motion picture field, and for the past five or six years has been associated with the Famous Players, save for a brief interim when he had his own company. He directed the first Mary Pickford feature to be released by the Famous, "The Bishop's Carriage," and produced thirteen of the first sixteen releases of that company. The most notable of these was Miss Minnie Maddern Fiske in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles." Others of the Famous Players stars whom he led through the mazes of its first feature productions were Carlotta Nielsen, Cissy Loftus, Henry E. Dixie, Mme. Kalish, H. B. Warner, John Barrymore, Ann Pennington and Billie Burke.

During the past two years or more, Mr. Dawley has been identified with the Marguerite Clark productions, having directed the best-known successes of this world-famous star, such as "Helene of the North," "Still Waters," "Miss George Washington," "Molly Make-Believe," "Snow White" and "Bab's Diary." He is both the adaptor and director of her latest feature success, "The Seven Swans." At present he is directing Miss Elsie Ferguson in Henry Arthur Jones' "The Lie."

Mr. Dawley has been one of the most active leaders in the movement for finer and more artistic productions, ever since he entered the picture field as director for the old Edison Company, eleven years ago. Previous to that he had been a theatrical director, playwright and producer, also having spent five years at stock producing, and was perhaps the first of the well-known stage directors to see the possibilities of motion pictures as a form of dramatic amusement. This has placed him among the best of the greatest motion picture directors of the world today.

Farrell Heads Select's Boston Office

Hub Exchangeman Has Had Nearly Nine Years' Experience in New England Territory.

AN important change in the personnel of the Select Pictures Corporation branch in Boston became effective February 4, when E. J. Farrell, late manager of the Metro Boston Exchange, becomes Select's Boston Branch Manager. Mr. Farrell has been secured by Select Pictures to further the management of the corporation's growing business in New England. He enjoys the distinction of having been the first traveling representative of the picture distributing organizations in the New England field. He was employed in this capacity by George Kleine, when Mr. Kleine established his "Kosmic Film Exchange" in Boston, in 1909. When George Kleine sold out his business to the General Film Company in June, 1910, Mr. Farrell was retained by the latter concern, working first in the capacity of a traveling representative, then as assistant manager, and finally as manager. Mr. Farrell ably administered the affairs of the General Film Company's Boston branch for three years. During a short part of this period, however, he left the Boston office to become southern division manager, traveling the Southwest.

In July, 1916, Mr. Farrell resigned the managership of General Film's Boston branch, and two months later became manager of the Pathe Freres Exchange in the same city, in which position he continued for the next thirteen months. Leaving Pathe last October, Mr. Farrell took charge of Metro's Boston Exchange, which position he has held for the last three months, and which he is now relinquishing.

C. E. Shurtleff, sales manager of Select Pictures Corporation, has gone to Boston on business incident to the change of management of Select's Boston office. Mr. Shurtleff is accompanied by Myron Selznick, son of Lewis J. Selznick, president of Select Pictures Corporation, who is also going to spend several weeks in the Boston territory. Mr. Selznick will devote his time to the exhibitors' service department, giving special attention to the manner in which branch exchanges are making use of accessory advertising material furnished them. Boston is only the first stop for him on a trip which is expected to embrace practically the entire country.

British Notes

By J. B. Sutcliffe.

THE Kinematograph Trade Council, the joint body for trade defense, has been approached by the government with a direct invitation to co-operate in the manufacture and handling of government films in allied and neutral countries. This includes all propaganda films for circulation at home and abroad, the responsibility of a special branch of the Department of Information, and does not interfere with arrangements already in operation for disposing of the topical productions of the War Office or Admiralty. This, as pointed out in the first letter to the Council, has been the subject of some misconception. The kinematograph branch of the Department of Information is solely concerned with the production and distribution of propaganda films in allied and neutral countries and for the arranging of their production. Even within these restricted limits the work involved is sufficiently onerous in character to demand the expert advice of the leaders of the industry, and to this end an advisory committee, equally representative of the constitution of the Council, has been appointed. Messrs. A. E. Newbould and F. Goodwin (exhibitors), Captain Paul Kimberley and J. Joseph (exchanges), Will Barker and C. Hepworth (manufacturers) are the first members. Following the appointment of this committee the Trade Council suggested the desirability of some arrangement for securing unity of effort and avoidance of waste in the task of handling the films of the government. It has been a prevalent misconception in the trade that the kinematograph branch of the Department of Information was created for the purpose of dealing with all the government's moving picture affairs, whereas the War Office, the Admiralty and other departments work independently. The Council's suggestion for a single department to conduct the moving picture affairs of the state is sensible and reasonable, and one that has already promise of consideration.

The acquisitions of Jewel Productions, Inc., are to be exploited on the British film market by the Universal Film Company, Ltd., and among the first releases will be the dramas "Come Through," "Sirens of the Sea," "Pay Me" and "The Man Without a Country." The last named is specially in demand, mainly by virtue of its patriotic flavor; a type of picture probably overplayed three years ago, but now undergoing promising revival. Another line secured for this country is the Century two-reel comedies, starring Alice Howell, which the Universal Film Company, Ltd., propose to release on the old open-market plan. The Universal company is allied and housed with the Transatlantic Film Co., Ltd., at 39 Oxford street, London.

"The Scottish Moving Picture News" has arrived. It is not an addition to the industry's journalism, but the name of the first regular news reel to be issued north of the Tweed. The contents of No. 1 are not exclusively of Caledonian interest, and the photographic quality is commendable. It is published by Greens of Glasgow.

At a recent branch meeting of the United Irish League the Triangle drama, "Castles for Two," was the subject of severe castigation. The president, proposing its condemnation, said that in the film Irish people were depicted as drunken, dirty, mean and altogether despicable.

Herbert Pouting, the photographer to the Scott Antarctic Expedition, has accepted an American offer of a year' tour through the States with the official films of the fateful adventure. He leaves England early in the new year.

The Middlesex County Council, the licensing authority for moving picture theaters in the greater part of suburban London, has consistently repressed all overtures of the trade organizations for an understanding on the Sunday opening question. I hear on good authority that at its next meeting the matter will be discussed more favorably; that is, from the exhibitors' side. Military charities in the London County Council area have drawn thousands of pounds from Sunday performances at kinemas in that area, and, so rumor has it, there are a few similar institutions in the Middlesex County Council's administrative district which have plainly indicated the restriction as the only barrier to their participation.

The education authorities of Bradford have requested the local licensing committee to prohibit children from attending the second evening performances at moving picture exhibitions upon the very original complaint that it causes late attendance at school next morning.

A constantly recurring grievance among exchangemen throughout the country concerns the treatment of working copies of films by inexperienced or careless operators. Admitting that the exigencies of the army and navy have left behind few operators of pre-wartime experience mere professional incompetence is a poor excuse for the lacerated condition in which an increasingly large number of films are being returned to their owners. Five or six recent instances have found a sequel in the courts, but only two had definite judgment against either party. The difficulty every time is in the evidence. The exchangeman says he despatches the print in good condition, but cannot furnish corroborative evidence. The exhibitor swears he receives it, probably from another theater, in shreds. Between the contending parties is another exhibitor, who usually "knows nothing" on either side. A simple procedure, which has located, if not obviated, the damage, has been hit upon by one provincial exchange. A way bill is made out for every film leaving the office, a sort of traveling history sheet of the copy, its condition, exact length, leads and trailers, place, date, time, route and train of despatch, with corresponding spaces for the endorsement of the exhibitor on receipt. Should the exhibitor be requested to forward the print to another theater the way bill is made out in triplicate. He observes the condition of the film as it leaves him and encloses the sheet with the film for the guidance of the next exhibitor. One counterfoil he retains himself, the other he mails to the exchange.

Ernst Glantzberg, Inventor

GENERATION after generation, since the Reformation swept through Sweden, had seen a Glantzberg on the state's list of Lutheran ministers. Such was the destiny planned for Ernst Glantzberg, only son of the Herr-Pastor Christian Glantzberg and his wife Hilda, as they talked of the future of their little son. But the "best laid schemes o' mice an' men gang aft agly." As he grew up, Ernst's little fingers were ever making mysterious things, wheels and curious boats. Recognizing the mechanical trend of his son's mind, the herr-pastor sent the youth to the Royal Institute of Sweden, where he was graduated in 1892.

Ernst Glantzberg.

The same year Ernst Glantzberg came to America to the World's Fair in Chicago, and, liking American institutions and inspired by her wonderful opportunities, he decided to become naturalized and settled in Boston to practice his profession.

On November 13, 1917, the United States Government granted to Ernst Glantzberg, inventor (1909) of the Typhoon multi-blade blower, his third patent, covering a recent improvement to the base of the fan blades. Nine years' experience had shown Mr. Glantzberg that the bases of the blades were carrying the heavier burden of wear and tear, and, content only with the nth degree of efficiency in his product, Mr. Glantzberg got buys and his new patent is the result.

When questioned as to future improvements, Mr. Glantzberg smiled and said: "Well, I can't think of a possible improvement on a product the Government calls practical, efficient and economical, but who knows?"

"Rocamadour and the Valley of Lot" (Pathe).

IN THE half-reel Pathe scenic "Rocamadour and the Valley of Lot" can be seen a number of interesting views of an ancient French city fortified and beautiful in its architecture. The city is surrounded by deep, rocky ravines traversed by the Road of the Virgin. An old castle and the Bridge of Valentie are also among the interesting scenes of the picture, which is in tints.

"The Horse in Action" (Pathe).

On the same reel with "Rocamadour and the Valley of Lot" is an unusual subject entitled "The Horse in Action," which gives an amusing analysis of a horse's leg in action—walking, trotting, cantering and galloping. In taking the picture the camera was run at rapid speed, producing slow action on the screen, and making the horse look as if it were floating in mid air.

"Young America in Winter Time" (Paramount-Bray).

In the Pictograph No. 105 are some pleasing scenes in which most of the winter sports common to certain parts of America are exploited. These include tobogganing, skiing and skating. The pictures are well photographed and exhilarating in quality.

"Magic for Home Use" (Paramount-Bray).

For those interested in parlor tricks there will be found considerable entertainment in viewing in Pictograph No. 105 the demonstration of how certain sleight-of-hand tricks are done. The tricks shown are the placing of white handkerchiefs in a roll of paper and taking them out again apparently changed to colored ones, and the breaking of eggs in a double boiler and placing them over a fire kindled in the crown of a silk hat and then drawing from the utensil a pair of pretty white rabbits. Well illustrated and entertaining.

"Our Animal Friends" (Universal).

The particular number of this series appearing in the Screen Magazine No. 60 is unusually interesting. It shows the entry of cats, dogs, and even a small donkey at a London hospital for dumb animals. The scenes in the hospital where animals with all sorts of ailments are being treated is very interesting. This subject has been exceptionally well sub-titled and is largely entertaining.

"Florida Oyster Fisheries" (Pathe).

In the seventh issue of the Argus Pictorial will be found some interesting and instructive scenes showing the Florida oyster fishing fleets at work in the Gulf of Mexico. The picture shows the manner in which the oysters are secured by means of tongs and drag nets. There is also shown the opening of oysters, the sorting and preparation for shipment.

"A Day with Our Future Admirals" (Universal).

In the sixtieth release of the Screen Magazine are a series of enlightening views showing the training given the men at one of our naval schools. We see them at work in the laboratory learning about the action of high explosives, and we see them training to keep the body in shape. They also learn how to knock out a Boche and other useful tricks. They learn, among other things, the simple art of tieing a sailor's knot, and must also drill like the ordinary soldier. The handling of big guns is of course included in their training. There are also views of the men at a meal in the dining room.

"Physical Culture Screen Magazine No. 3 (General Film).

This reel opens with a demonstration by Bernarr Macfadden in which three-fourths of the weight of the body is raised by the muscles of one arm. Miss Roehm then takes up a subject which should be of interest to women, and illustrates how, by a variety of methods, they can easily overcome the most persistent "masher." Next, the well-known long-distance swimmer, who has also established records while swimming in shackles and otherwise handicapped, illustrates various swimming strokes, such as trudgeon, breast, plain side, English side, Australian crawl, porpoise, and swimming backward. Another interesting section shows a baby, aged sixteen months, under the care of a nurse, indulging in athletic exercises. Professor Grupp shows the similarity between boxing and fighting, giving a demonstration of shadow boxing and then using almost identical movements in bayonet exercise. Various exercises for the legs and arms as well as for strengthening the digestive organs and abdominal walls are illustrated by Miss Roehm, who also shows the correct method of breathing while exercising. This subject concludes with a demonstration of jiu jitsu.

Educationals Predominate at Rialto

"Throwing the Bull," "The Ridge Roamers" and "Salmon Fishing on the Columbia" Interesting Features of Program.

THE week of January 20 marked another of those daring efforts of the Rothapfel management in which the educational picture occupies the central position in the program. No less than three subjects of this class appeared on the program and were thoroughly enjoyed. In fact, intense interest throughout the audience was noticeable.

"Salmon Fishing on the Columbia," one of the Finley Nature Studies which are being released by Universal, was the featured article in the Rialto Magazine. Through this picture the spectator learns that salmon fishing on the Columbia river is worth while, and that it is plied not as a sport but as an industry. The picture is tinted and clearly photographed, and shows first the setting of the trap nets and the "haul" when a multitude of fine, fat salmon are removed into a small boat. Some of these, we are told, are returned to the hatcheries for propagation purposes. The fish wheel method is also shown, and the very interesting method of the seine net, which being 1,500 feet long requires a crew of twenty-one men and nineteen teams of horses to manipulate.

The other educational numbers were releases of the Educational Films Corporation of America, both belonging to the Bruce series. "The Ridge Roamers" is a delightful scenic in which two high livers go into the wilderness to search for the high spots. As they climb and climb past rushing mountain brooks and waterfalls, through timbers big and little we catch glimpses of the delightfully silent places where there is little to be seen but snow and mountain tops. Old Mount Ranier is glimpsed sitting in his usual place with his feet wrapped up in a cloud of vapor. Then there is that moment when the very tip top is reached "where the silences brood and the vast horizens begin" when we would fain be with the climbers.

"Throwing the Bull" is quite different in character from the two other subjects and takes us to the Pike County Fair, where the chief sports are broncho busting, the horse race that has no stop, the chariot race which "proves that Ben Hur has nothing on this bunch," the standing ride, and finally throwing the bull. This picture presented in true Bruce style apparently fascinated the audience.

PREPARING SCHOOL COURSES.

It is almost a year now since the Lincoln & Parker Company of Worcester, Mass., producers of edited motion pictures and motion picture apparatus for schools and colleges, started a course in United States geography. This course we understand has been filmed and edited by educators of national repute, and during the past year has been leased to many schools throughout the country.

Other courses which this company has in preparation are physiology and hygiene, agriculture, domestic science, English and classics, nature study, etc. An expedition recently sent to South America is filming subjects to be used in their course in world geography.

Perils of Prussianism

Remarkable Illustration in Paramount-Bray Pictograph Showing Why German Peace Proffers Cannot Find Favor.

A REMARKABLE illustration of why peace without annexations or indemnities cannot be looked on with favor at this time by the United States and her Allies forms part of the 104th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph. Professor Douglas Johnson, of Columbia University, a student of international affairs, furnished the Bray Studios, Inc., with the data upon which this film is based, and the revelations which are brought forth make it startlingly clear that Prussianism must be crushed and in the words of President Wilson "the world made safe for democracy."

The film, which is done entirely in animated diagrammatical drawings and maps, shows that Prussianism had its start in Berlin in 1477 and occupied then what is known as the "Hohenzollern tract," a tiny bit of German territory lying about Berlin. For six successive generations the Hohenzollerns continued to wrest land from their neighbors until in 1640 they had reached out and by conquest and political influence, extended their holdings over a considerable portion of Germany.

A century later Frederick the Great invaded Poland and wrested Silesia from the then helpless Empress of Austria. The next step in expansion was accomplished in 1846 by William Hohenzollern the first and Bismark through the seizure of Schleswig-Holstein from Denmark. Next came the seizure of Alsace-Lorraine from France and the Germanic empire then extended over territory hundreds of times its original size.

In 1911 the plan known as the Pan-German plan was formulated. This was the famous "mittle Europa" idea of German domination and by it Germany was to control the backbone of Europe and to hold the balance of power in her hand.

The picture goes on to show that should peace be declared now on the basis of no annexations or indemnities and German troops withdrawn from the territories they occupy and have occupied since the beginning of this great war, Germany would still have attained practically the control she set out for and planned to hold in 1911.

Industrials of New Brand

Films of Business Corporation Gives Private Showing of a Couple of Well-Made Industrials.

THE Films of Business Corporation, of which Camilla Donworth is president, gave a private showing of two interesting and well-made industrial films on Thursday afternoon, January 24, in the Joseph Miles projection room. The films exhibited were on the making of an auger bit and "One of the Departments of a Great Industry," showing the manufacture of spaghetti.

These pictures, made under the personal supervision of Miss Donsworth, with Mr. Charleton acting as camera man, are clearly photographed, and in each case the subject is presented with a successful attempt to lucidly portray the methods used. In the making of the auger bit excellent close-ups of the cutting of the steel and the making of the tools are shown. It seems that no detail has been forgotten, and at the close of the picture we feel that we know more about the converting of steel into tools than we ever did before.

The spaghetti subject shows first the exterior of the manufacturing plant with members of a convention which has just been held dispersing. Following this is the introduction to the spaghetti department, where we see the sifting of the flour and the mixing of it with distilled water. The pressing of the mixture through a die into the shape in which it comes to us, and the cutting, drying, cooking and the automatic placing of the spaghetti in cans into each of which is put the proper portion of cheese and tomato sauce by young women stationed there for the purpose is interesting.

USING FILMS TO AMERICANIZE ALIENS.

The University of South Dakota, which some time ago installed a bureau of visual education, has extended its influence into Wyoming. The films supplied by the South Dakota institution are playing an important part in the Americanization of employees of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company at Sunrise, Wyoming. The films are supplied free, with the exception of the payment of express charges and upon the condition that no admission fee is charged. Men in the mining camps are particularly interested in industrial subjects, such as those dealing with automobile manufacturing, railroading and trips to industrial centers of the United States.

Niles Welch, Metro Leading Man

NILES WELCH, popular leading man, is co-starred with the well-known actress, Effie Shannon, in Metro's new patriotic picture, "Her Boy," adapted for the screen by Albert Shelby Le Vino from H. Carey Wonderly's story, "Conscription," and directed by George Irving.

This is not Welch's first appearance under the Metro banner. His initial engagement with Metro was in a small part in "Always in the Way," starring Mary Miles Minter. He made so much of the role that William Nigh, the director of the production, wrote him a part in "A Royal Family," starring Ann Murdock, which was being produced at that time. From that he stepped into the leading male part in "Emmy of Stork's Nest," starring Mary Miles Minter. Then he supported Ethel Barrymore in "The Kiss of Hate." He left Metro for a time, playing leads with Mary Fuller and Violet Merserau, and was also leading man for Kitty Gordon in "The Crucial Test." With Pearl White he appeared in "The Blossom and the Bee."

Niles Welch.

He returned to the Metro forces to appear with Frances Nelson in Arthur James' Metro production, "One of Many." Among Welch's recent pictures may be mentioned "Miss George Washington," starring Marguerite Clark; "The Gulf Between," in which he was featured with Grace D'Armond; "Shame," in which he shared honors with Zena Keefe; "The Gates of Gladness," with Madge Evans, and "The Secret of the Storm Country," starring Norma Talmadge.

Welch started his motion picture career with Vitagraph, where he remained about a year. He is a graduate of Columbia University, and before entering that institution took a special course at Yale. He is an enthusiastic college man in every sense of the word and an all-round athlete of considerable ability. He made his "theatrical debut" while a freshman at Columbia, playing the leading role in the annual varsity show.

In Metro's "Her Boy" Niles Welch is seen in the role of David Morrison, a typical young American within the draft ago who joins the fighting forces of Uncle Sam.

WARNER BROTHERS LOSE CASE.

A decision was handed down by Justice Thomas F. Noonan on January 22 of interest to the motion picture trade. Warner Brothers sued Bernard Loewenthal for a deposit on a print of a negative formerly owned by him. Robert Spear, the attorney who represented the defendant, claimed Loewenthal was not legally responsible for the debt, claiming that he was only acting as agent for the real owner, and that Warner Brothers had notice of the fact that he was not the real owner. Warners claimed that they did not know who was the owner until after suit was begun. The court sustained Mr. Spear's contention that an agent could not be held responsible for the acts of his principal when it appeared that the plaintiff had notice of the true owner's name, and dismissed the complaint.

Hats Off for Miss Spurr.

NEVER again say that a good-looking girl never has any brains. We've printed pictures of Miss Dolly Spurr, of Marion, Ind., and you know she is good looking, and we know a writer chap down in Marions who says she is better looking than her pictures. A few weeks ago the out-of-town correspondence announced that she had taken over the Lyric and Indiana theaters. She did that. She tied a directory of husky, mean-minded men into bow knots. Some time ago some capitalists saw that she was making money with the Royal-Grand, rather a tumble-down place in spite of its grandiloquent title. They bought the lease out over her head. Miss Spurr promptly got backing for a new house to be built, and now, seeing how the land lies, the men have let her have it all, having had enough for themselves. Miss Spurr gave the town clean amusement and good amusement. By sheer force of personality she built up a following she could have moved over into the next county had she so desired. She beat capital with brains. She did what every other exhibitor in a small town should do. She made friends and held them. She gave the town the idea that unless it was a Spurr house it could not be a good picture show, so now she has three houses to run, and because she has a monopoly we are willing to bet that she will treat them nicer than ever. The local paper gave her half a column of double measure, bold-faced editorial, and we'll say "amen" to the introduction, which runs:

> To Marion belongs the distinction of having produced the most enterprising and successful woman moving picture manager in the country. Miss Dolly Spurr began her career in connection with the movie business in this city about eight years ago. She has applied herself to it with an intelligence and a directness that has enabled her to master its details to the very last item. She goes about the work as one "to the manner born." The fact that she has grown up among us and has under our very eyes made her attainments in the moving picture field has to a great extent prevented us from perceiving the extent of her success. We all know that she puts up a show that is mighty fine, and that she has made a success of the enterprise. We have scarcely realized that her success has put her in the very front rank of the people who are engaged in the business.

Miss Spurr is in a class by herself, and she is a lesson to others, for she has won through grit and a policy of honesty and courtesy, not merely because she is a woman. She is man-size clear through.

The All-Family.

The Movie Fan, Greely, Colo., refers to a recent offering as "An all-family photoplay." This beats the kid matinee, and the parents' and children's nights. Make a note of it.

Really Good.

E. H. Montagu, of the Selig London office, sends over a special book for "The Garden of Allah" that is good to look at—extra good. The cover is stiff black card, 12½ inches high and 8½ wide. The front has a narrow border of gold arabesque, the title and author's name in the lower right hand corner and a gold frame in the upper left hand corner. Within this frame is pasted a loose panel pastel picture of a desert night scene, with the wonderful tropic sky well reproduced in color, and against the lighter hue of the horizon a camel caravan crosses the brown desert sands. It is a fine piece of color work and it sounds the keynote to the contents of the book. Within is a sixteen page booklet, cut slightly smaller than the cover, to provide the fashionable overlap. Each page is outlined with an elaborate arabesque top and sides, done in purple, with an oasis in green at the bottom, the pages, except for the first and last, being treated as doubles. Each page carries cuts and text in green, the color of sanctity in the Moslem faith. The story is well told, interestingly and yet with a dignity that does not demean the subject. It ranks with the best work of its sort, and "Monte" is wise to be proud of it. It's worth bragging about.

Philadelphia Programs.

Before we take up the latest batch of Philadelphia programs we let Jay Emanuel have the floor to remark that:

> I feel that if anyone wants to know what is playing at the Park or Jefferson they should turn to that department. I feel that by classifying both theaters it makes it simpler for the person to find what is playing. If you look at a full page add in the papers of Wanamaker's, and you want a certain article you must hunt all over before you can be successful. The way I have it arranged keeps the patrons from each theater from going over the many different attractions which, while desirable, keeps them hunting and thereby causing annoyance.

There is much to be said for Jay's argument, yet we still think that to print the program for the Park and Jefferson on facing pages will give the average attendant a better idea of what he has to look at on a given night. It's purely a matter of opinion, and Jay's ideas are generally good. In this last program he lifts this from the Evening Ledger of his home town:

> A million dollars sounds like a lot of money to be contributed every day of the year by one industry, but that is the amount which the Government expects to receive from the patrons of the motion pictures throughout the United States. A five-fold tax is imposed upon the picture theaters:
> First, the graduated tax obtained from the theater, according to the seating capacity; second, a tax per foot on raw stock or unprinted film; third, a separate tax on positive or printed film ready to be shown to the public; fourth, a percentage tax on the income of the theater, and, fifth, the direct tax of one cent on every ten cents or fraction thereof of admission prices.
> Then comes the city, Government and state licenses.
>
> A music tax is now also threatened.
> The picture theaters are instructed by the Government to collect all of these taxes from the public, and it is therefore frequently necessary to increase the cost of admission five cents.
> The increase of prices brings no profit to the exhibitor himself—every penny of it goes to Uncle Sam's war chest.
> This is another way to show your patriotism—attend the motion picture theaters, as this helps Uncle Sam to collect $1,000,000 daily from this source.

That is good stuff for your own program if you have not already had something like it, and coming from a newspaper, it will carry more weight than if you had written it yourself. And there is this one big fact to keep driving home. The Government must have the money with which to prosecute the war. If it does not come as a tax it will mean added taxes on other things that will reach the general public just as surely as the amusement tax. This is not a case where avoidance of this tax will throw the burden on the plutocrat. It doesn't matter whether you pay a tax on your amusements or pay four cents letter postage, you must pay some way.

The Ridge Avenue runs a well-designed four-page program. It is clean and attractive. There is also a Ridge Theater, seven blocks away. Possibly it is not an effort to trade on the popularity of the Ridge Avenue, but it looks bad. The program is poorly framed and badly written. It sounds as though the features were written about because it was expected, but there is no enthusiasm in the lines. "Zaza," for an example, is "Adapted from the famous novel which was such a brilliant success on the American stage." It was also a brilliant success in London and Paris, for that matter, but this is not so important as the fact that it presents a colorful picture of the stage and its people. The function of the program lines is not to fill space, but to fill the house through an adroit use of space.

The Ideal offers a well laid program with a novel division of the middle pages to get a display for the chief attraction of the week, as is shown in the reproduction. This is apt to slur the program for the early part of the week, but if you have an attraction on which you must get your money back, this form is capital. The front page carries a group cut for the feature, with the prices below, the times of showing appearing above. The front page, as it stands, is a sufficient advertisement for the play. The back page also carries a useful paragraph that should be saved. The suggestion that a big bill is offered instead of a small souvenir almost suggests the bestowal of that souvenir as well. The text reads:

"IDEAL" PATRONS:

The management feels that there should be a few words of explanation accompanying this program.

We wanted our patrons to feel and be thankful during this big holiday week.

Everything was taken into consideration—a small gift, a Thanksgiving card, etc., but we feel we struck the right keynote in giving you that which you will be most thankful for—A GRAND SHOW.

We have arranged a week of big features that only capacity houses can nearly pay for. Shows that will live long in your memory. We trust you will give them the hearty support they deserve. The Management.

About the only thing we don't like about the Ideal is the type in which the house name is set on the front page.

The Belmont and Locust theaters have an odd joint program. Page one gives the front for the Belmont and this is continued on page two. Page three gives the same frame front, but with the name of the Locust inserted and this house gets page four. For safety's sake the name of the house is printed at the tops of pages two and four. It is virtually two one-sheet programs issued as a four-page folder. Presumably the patrons most likely to patronize the Locust get their programs with the Locust folded to come on the top. The idea is handy for any two houses under the same management.

The Becker Brothers' Theater uses a good form, but the printer uses the wrong ink and it spreads and looks unsightly. The back page should be used for a little house talk. It is wasted in perfunctory underline advertising as it stands.

The Olympia also suffers from poor press work. It uses a cheap brown stock and it may be that no ink will work well on the surface. The portrait cut on the cover is almost wholly lost.

Most Philadelphia programs follow one of two general types. The difference is largely a matter of text.

For a Change.

Gordon F. (100%) Fullerton, of the Greater Theaters Co., Seattle, Wash., writes that, inasmuch as they have used practically every expression and angle of Bill Hart's face, front and side, they have nothing left but the rear view, forming the basis of a four column advertisement in the newspapers and a window card. The card and newspaper advertisement are shown together for the purpose of comparison. The card (on the left) is 14 x 21. The lettering in the black block is in red, as are the alternate circles of the bullseye. Outside the cut the field is a fawn color with a white "Liberty" shaded in black. The cut is the same as is used for the newspaper work, save that a second block is made for the red, those parts being cut out for the color on the black block and printing white in the newspaper advertising. This is a good example of the double use of a cut and may carry a suggestion to others. Mr. Fullerton writes that the turnaway began shortly after opening, at eleven in the morning, and was continuous until the start of the last show in the evening. Of course "Hart drew them," but remember, you have got to let the people know that Hart is there, and we think those window cards helped a lot. But if novelty is what Mr. Fullerton is after, we think that a picture of Hart with his gun in the holster would be still more novel. It might lack action, but it assuredly would be something new.

Jay Has Some Bargains.

Jay Emanuel has some stock cards, rather dark in color, but very good stock, that he can lay off to brother Exhibitors at a price that won't happen again. He also has several hundred pounds of light brown stock good for program work that he can sell for what good news costs nowadays. Send him a stamp for samples if you are interested and are near enough to add the freight without hurting the bargain. His address is Park Theater, Ridge avenue, at 33d street, Philadelphia.

McCormick's Samples.

S. Barret McCormick, of the Circle, Indianapolis, did what every other live wire did with those corking good poses Goldwyn supplied for "The Auction Block." He realized the value of those poses in conjunction with the titles and took extra space. Most of the displays that have come in on this subject took panel shapes. These worked up well, with the cut above leading down to the title and text, and some of Mr. McCormick's samples run the depth of the page and two and three columns wide, but in some ways we like still more his adaptation of one pose to an original drawing. The cuts show two advertisements. The larger is a Sunday display and the other was run through the week. The same cut was used, but after the Sunday display it was cropped to go into the new space. The larger is five tens and the smaller is but three columns wide, but the five and three column widths were served by the same cut. And here's something that may interest you. Note that Mr. McCormick uses slightly more text in the smaller advertisement than he does in the large. He knows that he can throw more type into the smaller space and get it read. He does not use too much, but he knows that too much type in a larger space will destroy the suggestion of bigness. What Mr. McCormick does not know about working cuts doesn't amount to much. He seems to be up to all the tricks. Here are two advertisements seven inches by three columns.

Both use the top cut. The line cut at the left is also used at the bottom of a two column advertisement, for it was made two columns wide and will work as such, or, with the house block, look like three. The vignetted half-tone in the right hand advertisement is used alone as the foundation for ten inch space and the same copy was used for a three column cut. We are sorry we cannot reproduce the entire set of drawings, but there are too many, and no two are alike, though two or more may employ the same cut. Throughout the week the readers got new combinations, and new interest was aroused. We are going to show two more, because they both emphasize the fact that you can use considerable type in a small space, provided that you leave the big facts so clearly displayed that without the small type it would still remain a good advertisement. These two displays advertise a split week. That on the left appeared on the Saturday before the opening. The one on the right was run Wednesday evening to announce the Thursday change. In each advertisement, you will note, the current bill gets a panel in the lower right hand corner. One is four and the other five-eighths.

Christmas Trimmings.

This cut shows the Christmas decorations of the lobby of the Arcade Theater, Paducah, Ky. They are simple, yet bright and attractive, and give the impression of good cheer without overcrowding. It would be pretty much of a wholesale order to over decorate the Arcade, but it could be done and without much material, at that, by bunching the decorations. In using bright colors such as reds and greens, the touch of color is generally better than the mass, and this offers just about enough.

From S. C.

Lately we reproduced the postal card program used by the Temple Theater, Hartsville, S. C., and moved the town over into the state of Georgia. We apologize to Mr. Cobb and the rest of his fellow-citizens. Mr. Cobb sends in a three sevens and wants to know what we think of it. The advertisment is not as poor as Mr. Cobb seems to think it is, but it is not good in some minor details. It needs a little more color. Since the space is largely dependent upon the quoted speech for its attraction, this should have been run in a bold italic. Then the lines that follow should have been in a light italic of similar face, but a smaller point; a clean, easily read line. It all could have been pulled up a little toward the top to allow for a larger point for the title. This is a 24 point. Another pica, or even two picas, should have been used, but a single twelve points added would have made a big difference in the looks of things, if it did not have to fight bold type directly above. At the bottom of the space the line, "A Masterpiece of the Silent Drama," which means little, should have been sacrificed to gain six points of leads between the lines above, making them stand out better. Setting the lines in upper and lower case would have helped. With these changes we think the ad would be a sightly one, and a business puller, but with so well known a title, the name of the play should have been thrown into far greater prominence, not so much through the use of larger type as through the proper handling of the other type masses.

Well, Anyhow.

Benjamin Shindler, of the Ridge Avenue, Philadelphia, takes exception to the fact we used one of his programs and credited it to Jay Emanuel. The cut in the issue for December 22, headed "Jay's Program," really is Mr. Shindler's, and it is good enough for him to want the credit for it. We are sorry we stole credit from Mr. Shindler, but anyhow we are glad to know that there is another Exhibitor in Philadelphia who has a typewriter and a three-cent stamp.

Takes a Page.

The Academy of Music, Selma, Ala. (R. B. Wilby's old house), sends in a copy of the local paper in which, apparently, H. F. Kincey, the manager has taken a full page and has broken it up into news and display ads. If we remember, the Selma paper does not give much free reading, so they take the entire page and get readers and display according to their desires. In many ways this is better use of a page than all display. People will read the news where they will not wade through a heavy page of boxes, and the suggestion that it is reading matter and not advertisement is always helpful. The only trouble is that most houses cannot afford full pages, and most papers charge double rates for readers.

Newspaper Work.

The Square Town Theater, Brooklyn, Michigan, sends in a couple of copies of the local paper to show that they can hustle, and the samples are good displays for a small town. The regular house advertising runs about nine inches on the back page, but one issue carries about 23 inches for "The Battle Cry of Peace." This carried a half column front page story for the feature, giving the house, days, times of showing and prices. In the same issue there are two play readers and a special reading notice in full face on a raise in prices. It is clean cut and effective argument. The other issue carries four teaser advertisements and a reader for each of the advertised attractions. The house and the editor seem to be on good terms, for they get good placing for their readers and are not buried in the back pages, but then the Square Town makes its readers interesting instead of wasting all the space on adjectives. That is one of the secrets. If your editor is liberal with his space, give him stuff so readable that if he ever changes his mind and cuts down the readers, the public will demand that they be replaced. As the paper uses considerable boiler plate, it is possible that the editor can be coaxed to give the space for a regular photoplay department, and Estes and Estes apparently can supply the goods.

Jimquin Encores.

Jimquin of L. A. has been doing it again. Some time ago he wrote a lyric for a song written by his brother in the trenches. Now he is out with "Camouflage." There are all sorts of changes in a song with that title, and Jimquin got eight verses without half trying. It should be more than a local hit. Harry McCoy, of Keystone, has written the music to the lyric and is using it in his vaudeville act.

You Pay, Anyhow.

Here is one of the best readers on the war tax that we have seen yet. It is from the program of the Theater Louisiana, Baton Rouge, Miss. It reads:

DID IT EVER OCCUR TO YOU MR. CITIZEN:

That cutting out picture shows, as some of you have done, will not save you the war tax? Uncle Sam counted on that $70,000,000.00 tax from picture shows. If this amount is not realized he (uncle Sam) will collect from you in some other way. He must have the money and it must come from you. There is no escape.

MORAL:

Do not cut out your amusement. Enjoy yourself while you may—

YOU PAY ANYHOW

Make them realize that the country must raise a certain sum of money for the prosecution of the war and that it does not materially matter to the Government what tax brings the money so that the money is brought in.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

That Synopsis Polisher.

TAKEN as a whole that synopsis brain polisher did not develop many satisfactory replies. It will be remembered that contestants were supposed to make a synopsis from "Uncle Tom's Cabin," or such portions as they elected to use, working on the supposition that the play was of their own invention and not known to the editor to whom it was being submitted. There was a further stipulation that the matter was to be held within a thousand words.

This seems to have been the stumbling block to many. They took that last clause too seriously. They forgot that they had been told time and again that if their story was bigger than the word-limit it would be better to exceed the word-limit rather than to sacrifice the story. Only three of the contestants came in with synopsis in excess of one thousand words, though many complained that the limitation hampered them.

The first great lesson that the synopsis stunt was intended to teach was precisely this: that the story was superior to predetermined word limits, provided that the excess was really needed to get the story over. The synopsis is the only material from which the staff writer can work. He cannot know what is in the author's mind. It must appear on the sheet. For this reason many of the stories were impossible. Several started out with the statement that "Uncle Tom is sold by his master to a slave trader." Not these precise words were used, but this was the general style of the phrase. The staff writer was not supposed to know of Uncle Tom. He was supposed to have only the knowledge given him by the author, and it is naturally impossible to draw a character sketch of Tom from so brief a description. That he is a slave is evident from the fact that he is sold as such, but there is nothing to give a clear mental picture of Tom to the man who is to make the script.

Some additional facts appear later in the action, but the first essential, particularly in the case of a leading character, is to give some sketch of that character. It need not be extensive. It must be enlightening. That Tom is a house servant and not a field hand gives a distinction. That he is strongly religious is a necessary fact. That he refuses to escape with Eliza is a character point that proves him no canting hypocrite. It is useless to try to tell the story of Tom until a reasonably good word picture of Tom is given. "Tom, the house servant of the Shelbys, is sold to a Louisiana trader to enable Shelby to pay his debts. It is a shock to the negro, who has grown up on the plantation, but he accepts his fate with pious resignation, sustained by his religion, and refuses to run away with Eliza, who is escaping to save her little boy, who also has been sold." Here we get a better idea of Tom; not as clear a sketch as possible, perhaps, but enough to tell something of Tom.

The same introduction should be given other leading characters, and even minor characters should be clearly identified. Most of the scripts spoke of persons appearing for the moment without telling who they were. Marks, for example, came on and went off again. We never knew that he was a pettifogging lawyer. He seemed merely to be someone who happened to be around at the moment and, therefore, to be mentioned among those present.

Actions were dismissed as casually as the players. In several of the synopses Tom rescues Eva before we know anything about her, and in one case no hint was given as to how the rescue was accomplished. So far as the synopsis went he might have rescued her from a trolley car or a circus lion.

In nearly ninety per cent. of the scripts too much attention was given to getting all of the story in. This was exactly what was not wanted. It was for that reason that the conditions stated that the author was to take "such portions of the book" as he needed. Two contestants made stories of Eliza's escape, and another writer played up the story of Cassy. All of the others attempted to tell the entire story with all its tiresome side lines. In this they overlooked the chief opportunity offered. There are a number of separate stories in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." There are hundreds that can be worked from the book. A very good modern story might be made from the story of Cassy's first master and the manner in which his cousin betrays him to drunkenness to gain the woman. Making Cassy a wife instead of a mistress, and placing the story in today would give a drama that would not in any manner suggest Mrs. Stowe's book. There is another modern story in St. Clair's marriage. Another might be made from the efforts of Chloe to redeem Uncle Tom, by making the cakes. Not a single one was interesting of itself. Not a single one wrote a decent synopsis. Not a single story sent in would sell on its moral and not the physical redemption the aim. The entire book abounds in plot suggestions that are in no way related to the main story, yet none of these have been made use of by authors and the best script sent in merely isolated the story of Cassy.

Suppose that you now sit down with the book and see how many plot suggestions you can get from "Uncle Tom's Cabin" without showing that they are derived from the slavery tale.

But the fact that loomed above all others is that authors do not give a decently vivid idea of the plot. If this is all you have to offer the buyer and you cannot interest him in your wares, it is useless to try and sell. You must offer your story attractively. It must be graphic—vivid. It must make itself so real to the editorial reader that he will know a good story can be made from the material submitted.

This above all other things stands out as the lesson of the contest. Hundreds of those who complain that they cannot sell fail to make sales because they offer nothing. They justify the recent remark of a buying editor. "There may be some good stuff there," he said, pointing to a pile of envelopes, "but I haven't the time to find out. I must get the big idea at the first reading."

You cannot merely offer the facts of your story. You must offer them interestingly. You must present them in such a combination that interest is gained from the start. You cannot begin with a mass of dry premise, lead through a greater mass of bald plot factors to a great climax. You must start off your story in such a manner that the editor feels, from the first paragraph, that the story must be good. This first paragraph may be the punch of the plot or it may be merely some breezy opening, but it must gain interest. Take the recent Fox announcements of Jack Spurlock. It tells how he wakes up to find a bear in his bathtub with its feet encased in boxing gloves. That does not tell much of the story, but you feel instinctively that this Spurlock person is going to be a vital sort of chap. It is the same with your synopsis. You must make the editor feel, from the start, that your story is going to be good. Until you can do that, you can save a lot of postage by keeping your stuff home.

The entire market today is based upon the synopsis only. If you cannot get over your synopsis, it is useless to try and win checks. You must gives all the facts and you must present them interestingly. We have sold a one-reel comedy through a sixteen-line synopsis, but that is not a standard, it's merely a freak. We stand a better chance of selling the idea if we take a couple of pages. If we needed twenty-three pages, we would take them just as quickly for a single reel.

As a study of the synopsis, we have persuaded W. H. Harrison, Jr., to make a second and more ample synopsis of his story of Cassy that we might pick it apart for the benefit of the craft. Mr. Harrison is a lawyer and has but lately taken up the study of plot building. His story is by no means perfect and is not offered here as a model, but it will be noted that he does get his story down clearly and intelligently. It was almost as well done in the first draft, but he was cramped, and knew it, and took advantage of our offer to send in a second. It is given just as he wrote it.

Legree's Cassy.

Synopsis by W. H. Harrison, Jr.

Cassy, a very beautiful white girl, whose mother is a quadroon slave, wanders about the great plantation which had been the beautiful home of her late father, a wealthy Southern planter, just recently buried; she wonders at the strange altered attitude of those she loves; and she feels a creeping terror at the cold, unfriendly manner of Madam, the planter's widow.

2. Lawyer Denture comes to settle the estate; he is polite and kind to Cassy, but a furtiveness in his manner chills and alarms her, though she does not know it is part of his business to sell her for a large price.

3. Henry Gathens, a rich young planter and prospective purchaser, is invited to the house; unobserved by Cassy, he inspects her and is pleased. Cassy is introduced, and Henry is charmed. In the belief that she is free, Cassy becomes infatuated.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Paper on Incandescent Lighting of Motion Pictures.

At a recent meeting of the Illuminating Engineering Society, held at the Edison studios, The Bronx, New York City, a paper, prepared by J. T. Caldwell, A. R. Dennington, J. A. Orange and L. C. Porter, was read, titled "Motion Picture Projection With Tungsten Filament Lamps." The reading was by Mr. Orange. It was interesting and the paper contains much valuable data. I shall quote and comment on several passages, some of which seem to me to either be in error or to convey a wrong impression. Referring to the beginning of experiment in the application of incandescent light to projection of motion pictures, the paper says:

> "The then recent introduction of the 'gas-filled' principle had caused a jump of some seven fold in the intrinsic brilliancy attainable with tungsten filaments, on a given life basis. The brilliancy of the filament under practical limitations should reasonably be expected to be of the order of 20,000 c. p. per square inch (30 c. p. per square millimeter of surface). The crater of the d. c. carbon arc (with cored carbon) was well known to have a brilliancy of 84,000 c. p. per square inch (130 c. p. per square millimeter) almost irrespective of current strength (Bowen, Griffith and Martin take note.—Ed.). The a. c. arc was found, as might be expected, to have a lower brilliancy, while the limelight showed a brilliancy which was only of the order of 2,000 c. p. per square inch (3 c. p. per square millimeter). It looked as if the tungsten filament possibilities were quite in the arc class, especially if we could contrive to arrange the filiament so as to constitute a light source of extension sufficient for the purpose and averaging up approximately to the brilliancy of the filament considered to detail. When this had been accomplished a trial was made in a projection machine, with results which were very encouraging."

The figures given are of great interest. So far as I know this is the first time motion picture machine operators have had the opportunity of placing relative unit area brilliancy of arc, tungsten filament and lime light side by side for comparison. It is, according to these gentlemen, 130, 30 and 3 c. p. per square millimeter. The only element lacking is information as to what "limit of practicability" was adopted for tungsten for the test. A temperature which would allow of the filament lasting 200 hours might be used, or one at which the metal would be destroyed in one hour. Presumably, however, the 100 hour temperature was used, that being the temperature at which present lamps are proposed to operate. As a tungsten "being in the arc class" when only showing a brilliancy of 30 c. p. per unit of area, as against 130 for the arc crater, why that seems to me to be stretching things quite some, unless we do so on the grounds that it fails to come within any of the other classifications. In fact, Dr. Orange intimated to me later that this really was the reason for the classification. "The tungsten," said Dr. Orange, "is too brilliant to be classed with the limelight, the Nerst or with any of the other sources of projection illumination except the arc, hence we declared it in that class." A rather arbitary ruling, it seems to me, but we will let it pass.

> "The factors in the illumination problem are (1) brilliancy of the object, viz.: the film (and if we ignore the picture and consider only the clear parts of the film, the brilliancy of the light source is practically identical with this), (2) the effective working opening or speed of the projection lens."

Seems to me item 1 lacks somewhat in clearness. If it is meant that the spot (circle of light at aperture) receives all the light eminating from the light source, why that is absurd. There is loss by absorption in the condenser, as well as considerable light which does not reach the lens at all, but is absorbed by the inner walls of the lamphouse. These sources of loss amount to a considerable percentage of the total light. Then, too, there is loss by necessary overlapping of spot at aperture. This cannot, I think, be the idea the gentlemen intended to convey. Frankly, I am unable to understand their meaning. As to item 2, why I cannot see it that way at all. Projection lens diameter is limited, absolutely, and will be so long as it is necessary to use a revolving shutter of present diameter, unless we go back to the old inside shutter, which really might be a practical thing to do under the circumstances, rebuilding projectors to allow for inside shutters of equal diameter with the present outside ones. But there still remains the difficulty of securing sharp definition and depth with a large diameter projection lens and the securing of sharp focus all over the screen when there is pitch in the projection. Of course the introduction of the incandescent offers new problems and it behooves us to move with caution in saying this or that thing cannot be done. On the whole, however, it seems to me to be reasonably certain that more will be lost than will be gained by the use of large diameter projection lenses, lenses of greater diameter than, say two inches.

> "Really the system which is commonly advocated in arc practice imposes serious limitations on the effective projection lens opening, and in this case the size and position of the condenser lens are responsible."

Hum, yes! but unfortunately the demand imposed by the arc is for a projection lens of large diameter in a large percentage of cases. The endeavor has been to get the condenser back as far as is practical and at the same time maintain other conditions as they should be, in order that we may use a projection lens of relatively small diameter without huge loss of light.

In discussing this point with Dr. Orange later we found that he has a theory as to action of light as applied to film and objective which is totally at variance with that held by projectionists and by this department at this time. Briefly his theory is that the nearer the condenser is brought to the film and the wider the consequent divergence of the light ray beyond the aperture, the greater the amount of light which will be passed by the objective lens. This theory he bases on the presumption that from each pin-point of the film a cone of light diverges toward the lens, that this divergence will be wide or narrow in accordance with the distance of the condenser from the film and that the wider the divergence the more light will be passed by the objective.

But the more I think over this theory, the more firmly I am convinced the Doctor is in error. I just simply cannot see it at all. If I am wrong, I am wrong, but in this case I am very much from that grand old state of Missouri—show me.

> "Enough has been said to indicate that the tungsten lamp—already in the arc class—can be made to yield results quite comparable with the commercial standards of illumination now obtained with the arc, the only requirement being appropriate optical equipment, such as is now available for most classes of theaters."

Head end collision between the gentlemen and my humble self. Rubber will stretch very much without breaking—so will language. I cannot say the actual wording is wrong, because we may "compare" anything, but the inference is that in this case the comparison will be favorable, and that, too, without limitation. If the paper had read: "Will yield results quite comparable with results in theaters in which a. c. amperage for projection does not exceed 50 or where d. c. amperage is limited to 25, or in theaters in which the arc is inefficiently handled, than we would have agreed. I am willing to concede to the tungsten filament lamp an illuminating efficiency for projection purposes equal to an ordinary 50 ampere a. c. arc, or an ordinary 25 ampere d. c. arc, but do most emphatically object to what amounts, by implication, to extravagant claims, which facts cannot and will not back up.

> "The inherent disadvantages of the arc, in either a. c. or d. c. form are so numerous." * * *

Entirely true. Heat, unhealthy gases, unhealthy dust, noisy where a. c. is used at the arc, dirty, wasteful and expensive are a few of them to which many might be added.

> "As in most matters which involve great diversity of considerations, the choice of a projection outfit does not admit of a single detailed recommendation which can claim the support of all competent judges. The factors refuse to be reduced to a common denominator and the relative weight which they receive will depend on the judge."

Absolutely true, but lacking in this respect: insert the word "disinterested" between the last two words. The disinterested judge (who has nothing in the way of equipment to sell and who holds no brief for anyone who has) will have small difficulty in selecting an outfit, or at least in approaching the task with intelligent, unbiased criticism, always assuming him to be one with accurate knowledge of the various problems involved. The fly in this ointment is that nearly all men of really accurate knowledge on this particular matter are connected, in one way or another, with some manufacturer or selling agent of apparatus. Broadly the statement made is true, however. I mention the circumstance because it is one seldom touched upon.

> "With light sources which do not pulsate in intensity (e. g. the tungsten filiament lamp and d. c. arc) either shutter (two and three-wing.—Ed.) may be used; flicker is apt to occur with the two-wing but the efficiency of light transmission is rather better than with the three-wing. Standard practice is to use the three-wing, however. * * * Whichever shutter is used there is always a substantial reduction in illumination produced. One vane of the shutter must always be gauged to correspond with the interval in which the film is moving. Obviously the loss of light on this account is the mechanical limitation of the intermittent device. * * * Apart from all this, however, there is an important relation between the diameter of the shutter and the cross-section of the light beam in which it operates. Since the shutter axis is fixed on existing machines it is hardly practicable to take account of this."

The efficiency of light transmission of the two-wing shutter is not necessarily appreciably greater than that of the three-winger. In fact, in very many cases it is no better. As to intermittent speed limitation, why this department has had that matter up with its readers and with manufacturers of projectors almost times without number. One projector enjoying considerable favor in some sections of the country is a very bad offender in this respect. I have often been tempted to bring this manufacturer out into the open and either compel improvement in this respect or place the matter in shape where purchasers will know that a well balanced shutter is well nigh impossible. It is then up to them. The "fixed shutter axis" is not really fixed at all, except as applies to inherent machine construction of present models. It would be entirely possible for any competent operator to equip his projector with a shutter two feet in diameter. He could then cut the light beam of a half size lens, with shutter right up against the lens, without travel ghost, using a shutter of very nearly, if not quite, ideal proportions. The reason for this is that, as you increase diameter, you increase pheriperal speed. With a light beam, say 1½ inches in diameter, the time it takes the shutter blade to cut off the light after it has started the process; in other words, the time required for the shutter blade edge to pass across the light ray, is quite appreciable. The same is true in the reverse process of uncovering the lens. This was taken into account in the Kinedrome projector, which used two outside shutter blades, revolving in opposite directions. It was also taken account of in old models of the Motiograph, which used two inside shutter blades, revolving in opposite directions. The same effect would be had by doubling the shutter diameter, and by trebbling it the ray would be cut practically three times as fast. But it would require a trebbling or quadrupling of shutter diameter to equal the possible performance of present shutters when placed at the dissolving point of the light ray, because at that point we not only have a very small cross-section of ray, but we have a complete obliteration of the image on the screen when the ray is only half cut.

> "In future developments, attention to shutter geometry is likely to improve projection all around, especially where large aperture objectives are used. In closing this subject * * * the incandescent system gives a 'projection beam' which diverges from the objective outwards. Hence, the best shutter plane is one close to the objective."

I very much doubt that any amount of "attention to shutter geometry" will improve appreciably upon what this department has already accomplished in that respect. The only thing possible, it seems to me, would be increase of diameter. Beyond that the recommendations of this department for placing the shutter at the dissolving point, where not only is the beam narrowest, but we also gain one-half its diameter, cannot, I think, be improved upon. Professor Henry Phelps Gage, Corning Glass Works, was present at the meeting. He informed me that with the condenser he has invented for use with the incandescent, which has been adopted by its sponsers, a short distance from condenser to film is imperative. He has agreed to set the reasons for this forth in detail in the near future. Until he does so, I cannot comment intelligently. If this is so, I would regard it as a most unfortunate circumstance, qualified by the statement that in this I speak only from the standpoint of present knowledge. I may be in error, but it will be very necessary to "show me" on that point.

Under the heading, "Advantages of the Incandescent Lamp Over the Arc Lamp," the paper says:

A—We have already indicated that most of the present arc outfits can be replaced by incandescent lamp outfits without loss of illumination, in fact there is often a gain.

B—Leaving aside the illumination then, what advantages can the incandescent lamp show?

C—In our opinion the following advantages can be claimed. (The order is arbitrary.)

D—Where the a. c. arc is replaced, vastly more uniform screen results are obtained, noise is eliminated and continuous fussing with the light source is avoided.

E—Where the d. c. arc served by rectified or converted current is replaced there is a considerable gain in uniformity of screen results, the frequent "feeding" is avoided and the auxiliary apparatus is more simple and durable.

F—Whatever the style of arc replaced there are further advantages in the markedly reduced running expenses and lower first cost: freedom from cracked condenser trouble, fumes, and the intensely hard dust which comes from electrode cores (and causes film-scratching, excessive machine wear and unsanitary conditions).

G—The color of the light is more nearly what is demanded today, the difficulties of the operator are greatly lessened, and the booth is much cooler.

H—Since the starting of the lamp is well-nigh instantaneous there is no warming-up process incidental to the "change-over" at the end of each reel; thus no overload capacity is required in any of the electrical equipment.

I—Unsteadiness and flicker are foreign to the incandescent system since with this system they can only occur with improper shutter provision or adjustment. Similarly, the frequency of alternating-current supply is of no significance once the right controller for that particular frequency has been installed. This is especially important in the big 25-cycle territories. We would especially emphasize the fact that the only adjustments of the light-source and related parts are made when a new lamp is screwed into the machine. True, an occasional glance at the ammeter and a touch of the regulator handle are advisable, but this is very simple, and may be done as opportunity occurs.

Commenting, I would say, (A) Umph! Very indefinite. "Most of the arc outfits" is a reasonably big claim. Seems to me "a large number of arc outfits" would fit better. (D) First half is not necessarily true. Many a. c. operators are now giving practically perfect screen illumination. "Where less than 50 amperes a. c. arc or poorly handled a. c. arc is replaced vastly more uniform screen results are obtained" would be a statement which facts would come pretty nearly backing up. Moreover, there is uniformity of results and uniformity and excellence of results. The paper says nothing about the latter. This, of course, does not mean that excellence would be lacking, but in things of this sort we prefer to see the actual statement made. The last half of the paragraph is entirely true. (E) Quite open to question as to its first half; also misleading. What is really meant is evenness of light on the individual screen. This is quite possibly correct. I have not yet seen comparative measurements. But if it gave a better screen result, then there would be something even more than radically wrong with the operator in charge of the arc. (F) This is a dangerous bit of printing. If the reduction in running expenses, etc., is attained without decrease in general excellence of screen result, then all is well and commendation is in order. But if reduction in running expense is accompanied by reduction in general excellence of screen result, then it will be very easy to loose two dollars at the box office for every one saved in operating expense. Be careful, therefore, and do not kick the bunghole open while trying to save at the spigot. In other words do not be misled by the specious "save in operating expense" argument. It is alluring, but look out first that there will be no kick-back. (G) Every word of it is true. (H) Ditto.

There is very much more of the paper, which fills more than 20 pages of a pamphlet of goodly area proportions, but space will not permit. There has been a mistaken idea current that this department and its editor is opposed to the new incandescent lamp. THERE IS ABSOLUTELY NO TRUTH IN THIS. We presume the erroneous idea has gained credence through our action in not jumping down the throat of a new thing (which is now a good advertiser and may become a large one) until we know its merits and its faults in full. The incandescent is a new thing and I make the bald-headed statement that this department is absolutely the only medium which will hold in check wild claims and statements, giving you FACTS without regard to what advertisers and others may want or not want. And while this course may (or may not) make some folks a bit angry for a time, IT WILL BE FOR THE BEST INTEREST OF THE PROPOSITION IN THE END. This department has repeatedly said, and now again says, it is "for" anything which is for the best interest of the moving picture industry. The new tungsten filament lamp is, we believe, for the best interest of the moving picture industry, but its sponsers are, perhaps, naturally making some claims which they cannot back up. This is an error, and it is just this that we are obliged to guard against—to "sit on the lid" as it were.

If the manufacturers and sellers of the incandescent and apparatus allied thereto will agree to base their claims, for the present, upon duplication of results from a 50 ampere 60 cycle a. c. arc (or any amperage of low cycle current) or from a 25 ampere d. c. arc we will promptly approve of and recommend it for that field, with the understanding that where the arc is inefficiently handled (poor operator) the incandescent can improve results even where a higher amperage arc is used. This is our conclusion after pretty thorough investigation. We are opposed, absolutely, at this time, to any attempt to replace well handled sixty ampere a. c. arcs, or any well handled d. c. arc of greater than 25 amperes with the incandescent.

Sure, Mike!

Daniel Constantino, Easton, Pennsylvania, writes thusly:

> In December first issue you ask whether screen brilliancy would or would not be equal, with a given subject projected at 60 and at 70 feet, other conditions being precisely the same in both cases. My answer is yes, the screen illumination would be the same. I also notice, dear friend, that you ask we operators whether or not we would like you to republish the list of questions. Sure Mike! why not? Not only for my benefit but for the benefit of many others who, like myself, missed them last time. I am the proud owner of a third edition of the handbook, and a set of Hawkins' Electric Guides, ten volumes, and, believe me, you could not get that handbook away from me for twenty times its price if I could not get another, even though I have to steal time to study it. Have got beyond page 200. When I say "study it" I mean just that—not merely read it and throw it down. I did not know what technical knowledge meant, or its value to me until I began to study real hard. I was for two years helped under a man who did not believe in books. Everything was "practical experience" with him. All I learned from him was just to thread the machine, turn a crank and trim the lamp something like half way right. Then I was given a chance by the Third Street theater management under a really competent operator and in fourteen months developed into chief operator, though for another company. And I've been making good where I now am, of which fact I am proud. I have been told that my pictures will compare favorably with any in our city.

I am glad to hear you say you are proud of what you have accomplished. The man who has no pride in accomplishment will never get very far. You are right. The screen brilliancy would be equal in both cases. Just wanted to see if some of you would get balled up in the fact that the revolving shutter cuts the light so many more times at 70. But it cuts it proportionately faster and—there you are. Practical experience is all right and absolutely necessary to success. You cannot learn operating out of a book, but practical experience alone will not suffice. A judicious mixture of practical experience and book-lore is what spells success with a big S. My best regards to the Easton men. Will try and drop in on you again next summer.

Large Claims.

From Nicholas Sabo comes a lengthy letter making very large claims for apparatus he expects to place on the market soon. Had I not examined the various articles named and found them to give promise of possible big things (the lens has already been thoroughly tested and is all he claims) I would be very much inclined to doubt. As it is, I am inclined to believe. Mr. Sabo says:

Theater managers are complaining bitterly about high cost of operation. Operators, on the other hand, complain of long hours and ill-ventilated rooms of too small size. They want shorter hours, better working conditions (more space, air, running water, etc.) and higher wages. The managers' complaint is well founded. The same is true of the complaint of the operator and this makes the dispute a very difficult one to settle.

But the matter has roots sinking much deeper, since gradual increase in cost of theater operation is causing a marked decrease in the number of theaters. This has been going on for some time. Also, with existing houses there is such a constantly changing ownership that a mailing list secured today is out of date within three months. This is so largely because motion picture theaters are no longer the gold mines they once were. High operating cost is reducing profits until many exhibitors wish to unload and get out of the business. First it was believed the decrease in number in theaters was due to large houses eating up the smaller ones. But investigation disclosed the fact that there is an actual decrease in total seating capacity. (True, but this does not necessarily mean the financial support given by the public has become less. It has in fact, I think, doubled. Decrease in seating capacity is comparatively small, whereas admission prices have fully doubled.—Ed.) My purpose is, in this letter, to point out one possibility for a large saving in expenses. Under the present system of illuminating the screen we utilize but about ten per cent. (10%) of the total light produced. The rest is lost in a hugely inefficient lens system, as you have often pointed out, and in the revolving shutter. In order that at least a portion of the waste energy may be saved we are filling the already too small operating room with costly and more or less intricate machinery. In order to get somewhat better results with the same or less consumption of electrical energy we are purchasing expensive screens.

Now what I am proposing is to produce ample light, of pure tone, to illuminate any screen brilliantly, to produce it at an almost negligible cost and to conduct all this light by way of a perfected optical system direct to the screen. Exhaustive tests have proven my system to be correct and to be enormously efficient. It eliminates rheostats, transformers, motor-generator sets and condensers, so that there is no possible waste of energy. With the elimination of condensers spherical and chromatic aberration are put out of business.

Summing up, the electric bill, insofar as applies to projection current, will be reduced 90 per cent. With new installations no heavy wiring or costly apparatus is necessary. No condenser breakage. No heat, since rheostatic resistance and the electric arc is eliminated. True, where there is light there is heat, but with this form of illuminant it can all be confined to the lamphouse and blown out of doors. For this purpose I have provided a blower, driven by the same motor used to operate the projector. Once centered, the light source is absolutely steady and constant. It requires no further attention of any kind. The light source cannot be focused at the screen. And there are other heavy advantages, but this letter is already too long.

As I said in the first place, had I not viewed this apparatus I would not give this letter space. I do not know that Mr. Sabo's new form of illuminant will do what he claims, but, after examining it, I have faith to believe it will. Anyhow it is well worth a tryout, and I shall be intensely interested to watch its operation and report results as soon as it is finished.

Soldier Operator.

Brother Barnett Weiner, Local Union 306, New York City, was a caller at our office December 28. He came in to renew his subscription. Brother Weiner has enlisted in the infantry branch of the army. He is now at Fort Slocum, and is acting as motion picture operator, running a movie show for the men.

Incidentally Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local Union 306 has the following of its membership wearing the uniform of Uncle Sam and either already "over there" or preparing to go: William Meyers, A. Eidelberg, D. Donohue, W. F. Bodque, J. Baskend, S. S. Wergemian, El DeCosta, S. S. Elias, J. A. Harding, Morris Heller, George Kutigian, A. S. Latta.

The boys at the front will not be forgotten, they will all be well supplied with smokes by the "Kick In Club," whose duty it is to make all union operators "Kick In" enough to keep the boys well supplied with tobacco. Four hundred cigarettes will be mailed to each one in the service and Local 306 will see that they get that number of smokes every six weeks.

Handbooks Invaluable.

W. L. Russel, Deming, New Mexico, says:

First I want to thank you for what you have done for the small-town operator. Have all three of your Handbooks and have found them to be invaluable. Some men may get by and not know much, but, like the old negro, I like to know the whyfore of the whichness and the wherefore of the whatisit. Sorry I could not get to El Paso, Texas, to meet and hear you when you were there last spring. My wife operates the relief shift, and here is a new one I fixed up for her benefit—and my own. My two Power's 6-Bs are spaced four feet, center to center of lenses. I made a bench from a 2 x 6 inch plank alongside the right hand machine. I then put a 3-inch pulley on my re-wind and clamped it, the re-wind to the bench, so that the drive belt of the machine would just reach it and be tight enough when speed control lever is about half way down. Put motor switch on top side of bench. Then all that is necessary to re-wind is to transfer driving belt to machine from machine pulley to rewind pulley. It works fine, but don't forget to put belt back before trying to start projector.

Also have a home-made dissolving shutter for the projectors. It is the only way to change over.

The idea is to use machine motor for re-winding. Undoubtedly it will work alright; also it will provide that much-to-be-desired thing, variable speed for the re-winder. But I don't imagine the bench arrangement will appeal to very many; also the transferring of the belt each time would be rather a nuisance, I should imagine; also a little bit hard on the belt. With a loose pulley and clutch added on the lower shaft it would work perfectly, except for proximity to the lamphouse and being somewhat in the way. Many thanks for submitting the idea, however.

High Grade Lenses Not Available.

Several inquiries have been received within the past few months as to where high class projection lenses can be had. To all and sundry I would say that high class lenses cannot be had at all. By this I mean really high class lenses, such as retail for fifty to eighty dollars. The lenses in general use are good lenses for their price. In fact they are remarkably good when their cost is considered. But we nevertheless need a very much better quality. But their making is at this time physically impossible, so I am told, by reason of lack of optical glass of the right quality.

This department at one time advocated the use of astigmat projection lenses. A matter came up recently which makes us doubt our correctness in this where the lens is other than central with the screen, unless the screen can be tilted sufficiently to square, or pretty nearly square, with the lens. But there is no use bothering our heads about that now, because such lenses are not available. However, I would like to hear from our optical brethren as to how much angle there may be and an astigmat lens be used for projection—angle of axis of ray to screen, I mean.

Proper Presentation of Pictures Musically.

The Cue Sheet and How to Use It.

The CUE-SHEET is the "First Aid" to the orchestra leader in your theater. Without it he must see the picture before he can select suitable music to fit it. It is a service that you should demand for the betterment of your picture presentation, and you should see to it that your orchestra leader has it in ample time to properly arrange his musical setting.

Sub-Title and Description.

The CUE-SHEET gives him the SUB-TITLE or DESCRIPTION OF ACTION which is used as a cue, denoting the change of scene, and, by the same token, the change of music. After the first performance the leader should have memorized the action immediately preceding the cue, in order to finish his music at the end of a phrase. By changing the tempo of the number being played he can bring his music to a spot where he can finish with finality. By holding out the last note as he turns the page to the next number and, beginning softly with a crescendo to the required volume, he can obviate abrupt stops or noticeable interruptions of the music.

Time.

The CUE-SHEET gives him the APPROXIMATE TIME of each scene, and the music selected fits well with the time allowance. Knowing the time he is better able to select a substitute number of the proper length. If the basis of synchrony is placed at 15 minutes to the 1,000 feet and you run the picture at 12 minutes, the tempo of the picture is accelerated, and the music should be hastened in the same ratio to convey the atmosphere called for.

Name, Author and Character.

The CUE-SHEET gives the NAME, AUTHOR AND CHARACTER of each suggested number. Many numbers are repeated in the various CUE-SHEETS because they lend themselves particularly to pictures and, as the leader dare not repeat too frequently, he must know the character of the music suggested, to pick out some substitute number of a like nature. Your patrons are becoming more fastidious in their musical tastes and demand good music and lots of variety. A number that was used with a fire scene last week, cannot be used for a battle scene this week. By the law of Association of Ideas he will confuse the pictures when referring to them later.

Music that Fits.

CUE-SHEETS are prepared by many musicians of different temperaments. The suggested music may be improved upon by your leader after he has seen the picture once. Sometimes a number is suggested in the cue-sheet evidently for no other reason than that the title fits the situation. For example, we have a love scene beneath a tree—it may be an oak or an elm—and the suggested number is "Under the Old Apple Tree." For a scene in a serious feature such music only burlesques the entire picture. The title of the selection does not count, and music should be used that has no outside associations or irrelevant character.

Accompaniment.

Another fault is the use of numbers that predominate over the scene and attracts the audience by their grandeur, pomp or levity. This detracts from the picture. The motion picture theater is not a concert hall and the accompaniment should be as subservient to the picture as a singer's accompaniment is to the voice.

Theme.

The CUE-SHEET invariably shows a THEME. Sometimes it suggests two or three, but these are decidedly ill-advised. In a small orchestra it is not feasible to use more than one THEME. This number should be placed on the music stand to the left of the feature folio, and a THEME marker placed in the folio, showing when to play it. For instance, Nos. 1, 2 and 3 have been played; No. 4 is the THEME. A marker denotes this and is turned (as though it were a page) as the orchestra takes up the THEME from the side. This leaves No. 5 in full view and means a smooth "seque" with no apparent stop.

The CUE-SHEET fits the predominant emotion and does not consider "flashbacks" or short scenes. These can be frequently handled to good advantage by altering the tempo to suit the action of the "flash-back," or sometimes it is well to allow the organ or piano to improvise; the orchestra taking up their number again on the return to the scene.

Use Standard Works.

Hurrys, Agitatos, Pathetics, etc., which have been composed for the so-called "Motion Picture Series" have fulfilled their mission and are no longer used in the better houses. The trend is upward and the public are looking for the best in music as well as in pictures. Riots, battles and sob-tsuff are always of importance to someone "out front" and should be treated seriously in fitting the music. There are hundreds of classic numbers most adaptable for depicting such scenes among the standard overtures. It would be well worth while to extract these portions and have them copied for use on such occasions. The works of the masters will bear repetition.

Music and Pictures.

Since time began, play-acting has been closely associated with the art of music. Both portray emotion and interpret the heart throbs and pent-up feelings of humanity. They are interwoven closely, and basically, are inseparable. Therefore, do not neglect the music in your theater. Make it a feature. Interest yourself in it and you will find it has box-office value.

Music at the Rivoli.

During the week beginning Jan. 21, Mr. S. L. Rothapfel presented his usual good musical program. It was opened by the overture "Slavonic Rhapsody," by Friedemann, conducted by Erno Rapee. Mr. Rapee did not seem to get below the surface to any extent and treated it rather too delicately to fully interpret the restless Slavonic mood.

Mr. Joseph Martel, a baritone, rendered "Cashmiri Song," by Amy Woodforde-Finden, in a splendid manner and resplendid costume. The stage setting for this song was artistically arranged, and with the aid of the perfume machine, gave the true Oriental atmosphere.

Gladys Rice, soprano, followed with "My Old Kentucky Home," accompanied by special scenic effects. Miss Rice has a small voice and got the song over with the aid of wonderful lightings. The Rivoli chorus and orchestra gave a rendition of "The Anvil Chorus" from the opera, "Il Trovatore," by Verdi. This number also had its own special setting and was done in costume, the anvils and hammers being present. Mr. Rothapfel has gotten away from the concert idea and is giving his patrons a combination of picture and musical show. All of the musical selections are as pleasing to eye as they are to the ear. We believe that this is another forward step in the film world and feel that if exhibitors followed his example it would make for larger box-office receipts.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

WHY HENRY LEFT HOME (Metro-Drew)—Theme, none.

This is a Drew comedy calling for waltzes, light intermezzos or two-steps. Such light operas as "Little Boy Blue"—Lampe, or "The Spring Maid"—Reinhardt, would suit admirably. No cue-sheet available.

THE IMPOSTOR (Mutual)—Theme for the Heroine—Moderato. Suggest "Chanson Sans Parole"—Tschaikowsky, "Sunbeams"—Heller, or "Serenade"—Karganoff.

Open with religious music to fit church scene. The picture is light. No dramatic music is necessary. Waltzes, intermezzos and allegrettos play the picture. Cue-sheet can be obtained from the Mutual Exchange.

THE SPIRIT OF '17 (Paramount)—Theme for the Hero—March. Suggest "Send Me a Curl"—O'Hara, or "Children of the Regiment"—Fucik.

Patriotism plays a big part in this picture and requires many patriotic marches. Light music will do principally. Open with "The Boy Scouts"—Henneberg. Use dramatic music for the rounding up of the German spies, the strike, and the saving of the girl in the mine. Cue-sheet can be obtained from the Paramount Exchange.

THE GATES OF HAPPINESS (World)—Theme for the Heroine—Allegretto. Suggest "Butterflies"—Steinke, "Idilio"—Lack, or "Legend of a Rose"—Reynard.

Dramatic pictures. Requires dramatic music, a couple of misteriosos, and two pastoral numbers. Close with the theme. Cue-sheet can be obtained from the World Exchange.

BROADWAY LOVE (Bluebird)—Theme for Midge—Andantino. Suggest "Premier D'Amour"—Benoist, or "Tendre Aveu"—Schutt.

Bits of dramatic situations are met with that require ingenuity in fitting. Many two-steps and fox-trots can be used. A light opera selection can be used to advantage. Cue-sheet can be obtained from the Bluebird Exchange.

THE MENACE (Vitagraph)—Theme for the Heroine—Andante. Suggest "I Gathered a Rose"—Lee, "Pleading"—Wood, or "Sweet Ponderings"—Langey.

Melodramatic numbers are needed. Many andantes and a few dramatic tension pieces. Have two misteriosos ready towards the end and close with the theme. Cue-shoot can be obtained from the Vitagraph Exchange.

RIMROCK JONES (Paramount)—Theme for the Hero—Allegretto. Suggest "Pulcinella"—Aletter, "Bird of Paradise"—Mathews, or "Serenade"—Kautzenback.

Open with "Bim-Bims"—Adam. The scene changes from Western to Eastern stuff, and a Mexican flavor will help the music. Use some dramatic, pathetic and sensuous stuff. A few waltz lentos are necessary. Cue-sheet can be obtained from the Paramount Exchange.

IN BAD (Mutual)—Theme for the Heroine—Allegro. Suggest "Pastel Minuet"—Paradis, "Badinage"—Herbert, or "Serenata"—Tarenghi.
A big fight ensues; note the dramatic music necessary for the rescue scene, and the misteriosos earlier. Use Mexican-Indian music, if possible. Cue-sheet can be obtained from the Mutual Exchange.
HIS HIDDEN PURPOSE (Paramount-Mack Sennett)—Theme, none.
This is a light comedy and needs one-steps, two-steps and fox-trots. No cue-sheet available.
THE CLARION CALL (O. Henry)—Theme for the Hero—Andante. Suggest "Twilight"—Ayer, or "Prelude"—Damrosch.
This is a short dramatic picture filled with action. You will need a few misteriosos, a hurry, light waltz and pathetics. No cue-sheet available.
THE HOPPER (Triangle)—Theme for the Heroine—Allegretto. Suggest "Chanson Sans Parole"—Tschaikowsky, "Butterflies"—Steinke, or "Lips and Eyes"—Lange.
This is a reformed burglar story of the lighter nature. A couple of misteriosos, a few allegros, a pathetic and dramatic selection with a few waltz intermezzos will fill the bill.
A HEART'S REVENGE (Fox)—Theme for the Heroine—Andantino. Suggest "Enchanted Hour"—Mouton, or "Moonbeams"—Keiser.
This picture is filled with action and extremely dramatic. Both the first and second movement of Schubert's Unfinished Symphony could be used to advantage. Russian music is needed for the Baron, Chinese selections for the Ambassador. Finish with the theme. Cut-sheet can be obtained at Fox Exchange.
THE FIGHTING GRIN (Bluebird)—Theme for the Hero—Allegretto. Suggest "Canzonetta"—D'Ambrosia, or "Serenade"—Schubert.
Brightness is the chief ingredient needed for the music. A few dramatic situations crop up, and a love story needs some amorous numbers to fill it out. Cue-sheet can be obtained at Bluebird Exchange.
MOROK (Hesperia)—Theme for the Hero—Andante and Morose. Suggest "Song of the Boatman of the Volga"—Cady, or "Kol Nidrei"—Bruch.
Oriental music is needed. Dramatic situations abound. Many hurrys and agitatos can be used. It is seven reels and requires a first viewing, if possible, in order to properly present the picture.
FIVE TO FIVE (Christie)—Theme, none.
A comedy of clean variety. Light operatic selections and allegrettos will fit. No cue-sheet available.
MANY A SLIP (Christie)—Use an Andantino theme for the Jewelry and bring it in whenever it is discovered. Suggest "Melodie"—Lederer, or "Venetian Romance"—Hildreth.
The balance of the setting should be made up of bright stuff, a few misteriosos and one dramatic number.
THE SUPERSTITIOUS GIRL (Edison)—Theme, none.
This is a one-reel comedy, slap-stick variety, and calls for jazzy music. No cue-sheet available.
THE BULL'S EYE (Universal)—Theme for the Heroine—Andantino. Suggest "Astarte"—Mildenberg, or "Poppyland"—Kiefert.
This is a serial picture calling for many hurrys and agitatos, a few love themes and dramatic music. It is Western in atmosphere and Mexican numbers will fit beautifully. No cue-sheet available.
THE STUDIO GIRL (Select)—Theme for the Heroine—Allegretto. Suggest "Lass with the Delicate Air"—Faur, "Aubade Printaniere"—Lacombe, or "Along Came Another Girl"—Romberg.
You will need some dramatic music, but in the main light waltzes and intermezzos will do nicely. Close the picture with the theme. Cue-sheet can be obtained at the Select Exchange.
THE WIDOW'S MIGHT (Paramount)—Theme for the Heroine—Valse lento. Suggest "Sleeping Rose"—Borch, "Inamorata"—Marchetti, or "The Way of Love"—Cremieux.
Another Julian Eltinge production requiring light treatment. Please do not use a big hurry in the chase scene. It spoils the effect. Many waltzes and light intermezzos are necessary. A couple of light operatic selections could be used to advantage, such as "The Merry Widow"—Lehar, and "The Madcap Duchess"—Herbert.
There is only one dramatic situation and that comes in the fifth reel.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. "Can I procure a musician (cellist) capable of playing big selections?"

A. "If it is a union man wanted apply to your local union. If no union in your town, Local 310 of New York can supply you. A non-union man can be supplied by us if you so desire."

* * *

Q. "Who wrote 'The Wanderer's Song'?"

A. "Tschaikowsky. This is one of the best of his few writings for voice."

Q. "Are you in favor of using the drum traps for every effect in a picture?"

A. "No. Discretion must be used, else it becomes annoying to your patrons. See our article in a recent issue, 'Fitting the Picture.'"

Q. "Can some of the scores put out by the Triangle be procured without booking the picture?"

A. "Write Mr. Bristol of the Triangle Exchange, this city. We believe they have some left over and would dispose of them."

Q. "What is the usual rental charged for orchestral scores for pictures?"

A. "One dollar a day for small orchestra and two dollars for large."

Chicago News Letter

Censorship Hearing Raises Rumpus

Major Funkhouser's Women Supporters Bait Opposing Speakers and Many Prominent Chicagoans Leave in Disgust.

A MEETING of the sub-committee of the judiciary committee of the City Council of Chicago, which has in charge the sifting of conditions at present governing the censorship of moving pictures in this city, as conducted by Major M. L. C. Funkhouser and his board of censors, was held in the council chamber Tuesday, January 29.

As will be remembered, the chairman of the sub-committee referred to is Alderman Steffen, who some time ago submitted to the judiciary committee an amendment to the present ordinance on censorship which, if passed, will take away from the censor board head the final ruling in the matter of issuing permits. This amendment provides for a real board of ten, a majority of the members to decide in all cases, in contradistinction to the present method of censorship by which Major Funkhouser takes upon himself the final ruling in all disputed cases.

Great expectations had been formed concerning the outcome of the Tuesday meeting, as a large gathering of notable people, men and women, had assembled to participate in the proceedings. Ex-Governor Edward F. Dunne and prominent men representing nearly all the professions and large business interests were present. The women were not outdone in this respect, as all the leading women's clubs were represented by prominent officials. Opie Reed, president of the Chicago Press Club, was present with a delegation of members. He is one of the strong opponents of Chicago censorship as now conducted.

It transpired at the meeting that while a number of the women present were against Major Funkhouser's arbitrary censorship methods, the great majority were for him. The latter had been permitted to express their views freely at former meetings, and on this occasion, which was primarily intended to afford an opportunity for an expression of opinion by prominent Chicagoans, who disapprove of censorship as now conducted, these lady supporters of Funkhouserism turned the meeting into disorder by interrupting every speaker who was against censorship as it exists at present. Even Ex-Governor D[illegible]id not escape their cross questioning when he expressed the opinion that it is dangerous to place in any individual's hands so important a matter of judgment as the censorship of moving pictures.

The result of this baiting by the women who supported Major Funkhouser was the departure from the council chamber in disgust of many prominent men and women while discussion was in progress.

It must not be supposed that Major Funkhouser assumed a lamb-like attitude during these interruptions. Indeed, he was the leader and the instigator most of the time.

Attorney M. L. Igoe, formerly U. S. district attorney, and now democratic leader of the lower house of the state legislature, came in for one of the worst hecklings in his career, during the rumpus. On this occasion he represented Wm. A. Brady and bitterly charged Major Funkhouser with having denied to producers free access to the cutouts made by him from their films. Had this been done they would have been able to show conclusively the absurdity, the discrimination, the ridiculousness and the unfairness of the Funkhouser censorship, Mr. Igoe asserted.

At one time, smarting under the rapid fire of the opposing ladies, Mr. Igoe retorted: "Let me tell you something. All these women are reformers; but when there is a real bill up for passage at Springfield, you don't see any of them there. It is the bent women, with hard hands, you see there then. These women weren't there when the eight-hour law for women was up."

The hearing adjourned without fixing the date for the next meeting, but Alderman Steffen gave out later that the executive committee will meet Friday, February 1, and decide on the day.

It is expected that the next meeting of the sub-committee will be devoted to a conference on the Steffen amendment to the existing ordinance, behind closed doors.

State's Attorney Investigates Pictures Corporation.

More unsavory details concerning the Titan Pictures Corporation, of this city, have come to light since writing my former article. These include charges sufficiently grave to attract the attention of State's Attorney Hoyne, who began an investigation of the concern Monday, January 28. He wants to learn how many shares of stock were sold in Chicago and under what conditions.

It appears that one Willie J. Tubbs, who owned a farm in Wisconsin, traded his 90-acre farm, house and other property for 70 shares of stock in the Titan concern and other considerations. Now he finds the stock to be worthless and has filed a damage suit for $10,000 in the federal court.

Among the defendants are Henry C. Meyer, a stock broker, Frederick Russell Clark, president of Titan, that corporation itself, and Fremont and Clarence F. Hoy, of the Hoy Banking Company, McHenry, Ill. Clarence F. Hoy was the principal incorporator of Titan, it appears, and held $90,000 of the first $100,000 issued of stock, which was afterwards increased to $1,000,000. Clarence F. Hoy, it is understood, transacted the deal in which Tubbs disposed of his house and farm for Titan stock.

Mr. Tubbs declares that President Clark, of Titan, notified him, after Titan stock had been increased to the million mark, that a 900 per cent. stock dividend had been issued, also that "a nice little dividend about Christmas time" would be declared; but it has not yet arrived.

State's Attorney Hoyne is hot on the trail of Harry C. Meyer, the successful star salesman for Titan stock, and also an intimate of Clarence F. Hoy. It has been discovered that Meyer bolted from this city some time ago, just before the arrival of Assistant State's Attorney McKay and detectives at the hotel in which he lived. Among Meyer's effects, now in possession of the state, are letters written by Clarence F. Hoy, the McHenry banker, in which the writer refers to the deal in which the farmer, Tubbs, figures.

Chicago Film Brevities.

On January 30 a jury in Judge Hugo Pam's court, this city, gave the verdict that the photodrama, "Protect Your Daughters," is not immoral and should be allowed exhibition. This verdict awards a writ of mandamus to the George A. Hutchinson Film Company against Chief of Police Scheuttler and the City of Chicago, to compel them to permit its presentation. Counsel for the city will ask for a new trial.

Selznick Backs Up Crandall

Says Fair Dealing and Friendly Relations Between Producer and Exhibitor Are Not Unknown.

By L. J. Selznick.

I HAVE read with intense interest the statement in last week's trade papers of H. M. Crandall concerning his splendid chain of motion picture theaters in Washington, D. C.

My hat is off to Mr. Crandall!

Mr. Crandall's remarks are an able exposition of the progressive conduct of a big business. They are of a splendid significance in view of the many less businesslike contradictory statements which have been given out concerning the relationship between the big producer and the exhibitor.

Mr. Crandall states that "he has never been bulldozed by producer or exchange," and that "he has been oversold at times, but has also been undersold at times." He also says that "he has always obtained fair adjustments" from the exchanges when he has sought them. This is a fine, fair and square statement, straight from the shoulder. But, in justice to Mr. Crandall—and in all my experience in the motion picture business I have never met a fairer man than Mr. Crandall—I wish to record that Mr. Crandall has modestly told only part of the truth.

The whole truth is that Mr. Crandall has voluntarily raised the price he has paid for pictures in the past. Let the strife breeders take note of that fact. Isn't it a complete contradiction of the usual representation of the relation existing between exhibitor and producer? Here is the result. If Mr. Crandall were to inform me that he was paying too great a price for my pictures, and that in consequence he required an adjustment of prices, he would find me ready and willing to accommodate him and happy to do so. When a man has raised the price he is paying me voluntarily, he will never have to ask the second time for an adjustment of what he considers an unfair price.

There are all sorts of men in the motion picture industry. If more of them were imbued with the fair spirit of H. M. Crandall, and conducted their business along the same principles of rock bottom justice and fair play, there would be less talk of trouble between exchange and exhibitor, and there would be fewer calamity howlers.

MARY MacLAREN RETURNS TO THE UNIVERSAL.

On the eve of a court decision that has been awaited with considerable interest by virtually every film manufacturer and performer in the industry, Mary MacLaren, former Bluebird star, has signed a new contract, which gives the Universal Film Manufacturing Company the exclusive use of her services for a period of years.

Miss MacLaren left the Universal's ranks about a year ago, and it became known that an issue of great importance was involved—the right of a performer to claim as her own and so use a name expressly coined for her and popularized via the medium of paid advertisements and publicity by the organization employing her. Considerable interest was manifested by the trade, and further developments were awaited with anticipation.

This issue was raised when the actress endeavored to sell her services under the name of "Mary MacLaren." The Universal disputed her right to the name, claiming peculiar rights to it. Until the performer had entered the employ of this company she had been known as Mary MacDonald. Under the latter name the company asserted she was unknown to the trade and public, but, due to the publicity and advertising drive placed back of her manufactured name, she speedily won prominence. However, in view of the amicable settlement of the matter it is exceedingly doubtful whether any decision will be rendered.

To Edit Mutual Screen Telegram

Blaine McGrath Heads the Staff That Will Assemble News Pictorial Subject.

THE appointment of Blaine McGrath to the editorship of the Screen Telegram is announced by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. McGrath goes to the Screen Telegram department of the Mutual from the office of managing editor of Motography. He was previously connected with the International News Service and with various Hearst news picture enterprises. The Screen Telegram, the new Mutual news release, will be issued twice a week, supplanting the Mutual Weekly, the present news reel release.

Blaine McGrath.

Mr. McGrath began his newspaper career on the Indianapolis Sun, going thence successively to the Milwaukee Journal, the United Press in New York, the St. Louis Times and the International News Service, later becoming a member of the staffs of various Chicago and New York newspapers. In the moving picture field he edited the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, the Hearst-Vitagraph news reel, the Hearst International News Pictorial until it was merged with the Pathe News.

The staff of the Screen Telegram is now practically complete, and staff cameramen and correspondents have been placed in all of the more important news centers in North America and abroad.

The offices of the Screen Telegram in Chicago are located at 6235 Broadway. The location of the New York offices will be temporarily at the Mutual's exchange, at 1600 Broadway. Arrangements have been completed for the printing of the Screen Telegram in both New York and Chicago to insure swift and adequate distribution of the two reels a week.

Contracts have been closed by the Mutual's sales department with leading and representative theaters in a large number of the important centers, including Sid Grauman's new million-dollar house in Los Angeles.

BOOSTING SAVANNAH AS PICTURE CENTER.

R. E. Tuckerman is promoting the Liberty Film Corporation, which has for its purpose the establishing of motion picture studios in Savannah, Ga. The corporation is capitalized at $100,000, and is backed mainly by Savannah capital. It is proposed to build adequate studios for the accommodation of a number of producing companies. Property has been secured for the studio site, and building will commence at an early date.

NED FINLEY HAS OWN COMPANY.

Ned Finley, for years a Vitagraph star and director, has formed his own company, Ned Finley Film, Inc., and is at present shooting his first story, "The Return of O'Garry," a rapid action outdoor two-reeler, down in North Carolina. These Finley Films, twenty-six per year, will be released through the General Film. They are to be written by L. Case Russell, who provided Mr. Finley with much of his material in the Vitagraph days.

PARALTA PLAYS IN NEW OFFICES.

The Paralta Plays has moved its belongings from the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, to 6 West 48th street, where new offices have been equipped.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. HARLEMAN

Chaplin in New Studio

Commences Work on His New Million Dollar Contract—Old Staff Still with Him.

WITH a battery of three cameras trained on him and occupying for the first time his beautiful new motion picture plant in Hollywood, Cal., Charlie Chaplin has started his initial production under his million-dollar contract with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Twenty weeks have elapsed since Chaplin last performed before the camera. With his return he enters the motion picture field in another capacity, that of producer. Under the terms of his contract, Chaplin will make eight subjects. Although a time allowance of eighteen months has been specified for the completion of the pictures, it will be greatly to the star's advantage to finish in a shorter period.

Chaplin's last work before the camera was for the Mutual Film Corporation. Twelve two-reel subjects were made for that concern, the last of which, "The Adventurer," was completed in August. The comedian then purchased the ground for his own plant at La Brea and De Longpre avenues, Hollywood, and after approving the architects' plans departed for vacation of five weeks in Honolulu.

Since his return from Honolulu Chaplin has been active at the studio site. He has carefully watched the progress of the erection of the various buildings, while special attention has been given to the stage, a tremendous span of more than twenty thousand square feet. Its design is original, being a combination of the glass and outdoor types.

The same organization which was affiliated with Chaplin at the Lone Star studios surrounds him today, although the million-dollar comedian has made a number of additions to the various departments. One of the sad losses to the organization was that of Eric Campbell, throughout the past year chief foil for Chaplin, who was killed in an automobile accident a month ago.

Edna Purviance, for almost two years Chaplin's leading woman, will continue in the same capacity. Syd Chaplin, the comedian's brother, is his personal manager; John Jasper, studio manager; Roland Totheroh, chief of the camera department; Danny Hall, technical director; Frank Crompton, director of construction; Alf Reeves, stage director; "Chuck" Riesmer, Charles Lapworth and Melrose Brown, members of Mr. Chaplin's personal staff and Carlyle R. Robinson, director of publicity.

Chaplin's new plant occupies five acres of ground in the heart of the exclusive residential section of Hollywood. From outward observation the spectator would hardly know that a motion picture studio existed. The buildings are all of quaint old English architecture and in place of the crude fence the site is surrounded by beautiful trees and an abundance of flowers.

The same design is carried out in the interior with a general color scheme of gray and white. The various buildings are all in easy communication of one another, thereby doing away with all confusion. Chaplin's first release for this year is rapidly taking form. The story is an original one and the comedian aims to surpass any of his previous efforts. As was the rule last year, no disclosure as to the nature of the forthcoming subject will be made until the comedy is entirely finished and ready for release.

Griffith Picture Almost Completed.

D. W. Griffith is editing and titling the film of his drama of the Western Front, which he is producing under the auspices of the British and French war offices. The measure of the task is appreciable when it is known that he has "shot" 263,000 feet of film, to be shrunk for display purposes to 10,000 feet. Several weeks will be required yet to complete the preparation of the films for release.

David G. Rodgers Visits Los Angeles.

The Theater Owners' Association of Los Angeles had a luncheon meeting on Thursday, January 24, at which David G. Rodgers, of Minneapolis, the national organization of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was the guest of honor and the principal speaker. President F. A. McDonald of the association also introduced Motley Flint, the Los Angeles banker, who spoke in behalf of the war thrift stamps.

The report of the censorship committee, which was composed of J. A. Quinn, F. A. McDonald and T. A. Tally, disclosed the fact that they have had a virtual agreement with Mayor Woodman whereby any objectionable film being shown in the downtown theaters will be reviewed by the committee and if in their opinion the film should not be shown they will confer with City Prosecutor Widney, relative to having a ban put upon it.

Among the prominent exhibitors present at the meeting were F. A. McDonald, W. H. Clune, F. R. Alexander, T. L. Tally, Mike Gore, H. L. Lusting, Fred Miller, Seymour Tally, H. Bosley, J. A. Quinn, S. U. Anderson and Glen Harper.

Los Angeles Brevities.

The Diando Film Corporation, making Pathe releases, is working on a five-reel feature, with Baby Marie Osborne in the leading role, to be known as "A Daughter of the West." It gives the little player an opportunity to display her equestrienne abilities on a Shetland pony. Arrayed in cowgirl garb she rides the pony like a veteran.

* * *

The Triangle feature picture on which Director Walter Edwards has commenced work is from the magazine story by the same name, "Another Foolish Virgin," written by W. Carey Wonderly. The continuity is the work of Charles J. Wilson. Included in the cast are Margery Wilson, Texas Guinan, Mildred Delfino, Francis McDonald, Lee Hill and George Pearce.

The Paralta has starred Howard Hickman in an Alaskan story, "The Golden Thread," a theme which will attract attention and cause more or less discussion when seen. It involves a problem with which the world has struggled for centuries. William E. Wing is author of the story, writing it upon order for Mr. Hickman. Author Wing now is engaged in filling two other orders for screen features.

Former Vice President Charles W. Fairbanks, accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. John Timmons, Jr., wife of the commander of the battleship Texas, and the latter's son, paid a visit to Douglas Fairbanks at the Artcraft star's studio in Hollywood one day recently. Fairbanks personally conducted the tour of the party around the lot to initiate them into the mysteries of the motion picture business.

Gloria Hope, who has the leading role in the Al H. Woods production of "The Guilty Man," taken from his stage success, is only fifteen years old, and has been in pictures a little less than a year. She started her screen career with William Desmond in "Time Locks and Diamonds." She then had the leading role in "Free and Equal," another Woods production staged by Ince.

Camera work has begun upon the first of the pictures to be filmed under D. W. Griffith's supervision, since he resumed occupancy of the Sunset Boulevard studios. The scenario writer has found material for his plot in modern war conditions, from which he alertly has gleaned a series of dramatic situations of unusual power. The picture will provide a vehicle for Miss Dorothy Gish's first appearance since her eighteen months' engagement under Mr. Griffith in his war spectacle soon to be released. For the direction of the picture, Mr. Griffith has called one of the youngest of the directors who worked with him in former days, Chet Withey. Douglas McLean will play opposite Miss Gish. George Fawcett, the famous character actor, will have an important role.

Belle Bennett, Triangle, has been borrowed by Oliver Morosco for his coming production of Ashton Stevens' new play, "Mary's Way Out," which will soon be given its premier in Los Angeles.

Dorothy Dalton was the first of the Los Angeles' motion picture colony to do her "bit" for the salvage committee of the Red Cross. When Miss Clara Mosher announced that she would drive her own truck and collect old newspapers, magazines, empty typewriter ribbon reels, tinfoil, and other odds and ends that bring money to the Red Cross, Miss Dalton set about salvaging everything in sight around the Thomas H. Ince studios. She summoned to her aid each actor and actress, each stage hand and property man, and when Miss Mosher was invited to inaugurate her good work at the Ince studio, Miss Dalton, garbed in durable overalls, loaded the truck.

With the price of film soaring and the many studios cutting down production because of the scarcity of the necessary celluloid, Diando Film Corporation, making Baby Marie Osborne features for Pathe, has taken added precautions to keep their plentiful stock from being destroyed or lost. The company has constructed a fire and burglar-proof vault building and a watchman is employed to afford additional protection to the contents of this vault. The walls of this safe are made from alternate layers of chilled iron and steel. About the metal structure, with an eight-inch space, are built a reinforced concrete wall and roof, while the exterior is finished in white to contrast with the green glass and flower beautified grounds which will form the street side of the studio grounds when present plans are consummated.

Lloyd Ingraham, the American Film Company director, was initiated into Santa Barbara Lodge No. 613 of the Elks, January 22. The veteran director reported for work at the studio next day looking a little played out as the result of his experience, but it is reported that he had enough pep left following the ordeal to deliver a humorous speech which amused a gathering of five hundred Elks.

Henry Lehrman, who makes Sunshine Comedies for William Fox, has started a new picture that has to do largely with restaurant life. The chief feature of its eating place is that it is being constantly upset in more ways than one. Not inappropriately, the prevailing figure in the picture is the noted "Ham," who is also spoken of occasionally as Lloyd Hamilton.

Delays due to the congestion of railway traffic, which have held up electrical equipment for the stage setting, have necessitated the postponement for one week of the opening date of Grauman's new theater at Third and Broadway. Sid Grauman, the manager of the theater, announced that the opening would be held Friday evening, February 1. Rapid progress toward the completion of the new structure had been accomplished in the last two weeks. The ninety-foot cyclorama for the stage settings, said to be the largest ever placed in a theater in America, is in position.

Lieutenant Commander Eugene Overton, who organized the Naval Reserve here some months ago, is now in charge of the United States submarine base in the Canal Zone. Commander Overton writes his friends that he wants a projecting machine and some moving picture films. He has two hundred and sixty men and will soon have more. The base is located in a lonely spot and the only recreation the men have is watching moving pictures. Obtaining films there is impossible except at high prices. Overton modestly raises the question with his old friends of Los Angeles as to whether or not he and his little command could not be helped out.

Jos. Kaufman, Famous Player Director, Is Dead

JOSEPH KAUFMAN, the well-known producer for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, died Friday evening at the Polyclinic Hospital, New York, of pneumonia, after a few weeks' illness. Mr. Kaufman's loss will be mourned by the thousands of friends he had made, and especially in the studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, where his kindness and courtesy had endeared him to all, and his ability had won their admiration.

Joseph Kaufman.

The passing away of Mr. Kaufman is particularly deplorable as he had just reached the age of thirty-five and had attained an enviable position as one of the leading directors of the film industry after years of conscientious effort and study.

He spent his boyhood in Washington, D. C., and attended Georgetown University. After his college days he worked in stock in a number of the larger cities and for seven years was stage manager for Maude Adams, William Collier, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, and Virginia Harned, and was Marie Doro's first stage manager. His activities on the stage included a number of important parts in big plays, after which he entered the motion picture field as a featured actor and then as a director.

He was the producer of many notable productions starring Marguerite Clark, Billie Burke, Clara Kimball Young, Pauline Frederick and Elsie Ferguson.

Foreign Trade News

Would Welcome Happy Ending Pictures

Consul Embry at Odessa Says Russian Audiences Would Appreciate Productions with Cheerful Close—Their Subjects Invariably End in Tragedy.

ODESSA, with a population of 700,000, has 34 motion picture theaters with a total seating capacity of about 20,000, writes U. S. Vice Consul John A. Embry, located in that city. These theaters are open seven days in the week (except on the eve of religious holidays) from 7 until 11.30 p. m., and are almost invariably crowded. The price of admission ranges from 0.55 to 2.50 rubles, according to the class of the theater and the location of the seat sold. The usual price paid for desirable seats in the first-class motion picture theaters is 1 to 1.50 rubles, but the complete schedule of prices has on numerous occasions been successfully doubled by the management when an unusually attractive or expensive film was being shown. The seating capacity of the average motion picture theater is about 800. Three or four of the first-class theaters have a seating capacity of about double this number.

The programs in Russian motion picture theaters greatly resemble American programs. There is usually a drama of four, five, or six reels, followed by a film of current events, travel, or comedy. Two or three performances are given each evening, according to the length of the program. Not more than two or three theaters in the city combine motion pictures and vaudeville. When the program in a Russian motion picture theater has begun, patrons coming late are compelled to wait in an anteroom until the next performance commences. In this anteroom music is often provided, and there is generally a small buffet where one can buy sandwiches, tea, and candy. Frequently the anteroom of a Russian motion picture theater occupies a half or even two-thirds as much space as the picture hall itself.

Tragic or Criminal Pictures in Favor.

The films shown in Russian motion picture theaters are of many kinds and makes, but the great majority are of domestic manufacture and are almost always tragedies. No one ever saw or heard of a Russian love story ending happily in the films. But in spite of the popularity of the Russian tragedy, it is the writer's opinion that the typical American romance would be all the more welcome to Russian motion-picture audiences for having a knack of ending happily. For variety the managers of the Russian motion picture theaters always have to depend upon films of foreign manufacture. Foreign films frequently seen in Russia are of Italian, French and American make—named in the order of their importance in the Russian market. These foreign films never fail to draw good audiences. When one hears a motion-picture film praised in Russia, it is almost certain to be a film of foreign manufacture. The most successful foreign films are those of a strong tragic or criminal character and classical pictures, such as "Quo Vadis" and "Cabiria." The classical films draw crowds from every class of Russian society.

The demand here for high-class foreign films is practically unlimited; the greater the variety of themes the better. dramas, tragedies, comedies, detective stories, patriotic pictures, current events, novelty pictures, all are cordially received by Russian motion picture audiences. As a general rule, it may be safely stated that any film that has a successful run in the United States will be well received in Russia. Film brokers interviewed on this subject especially emphasized the demand for first-class films of a tragic or criminal character and also inquired about railway-touring films, the new submarine films, and the new apparatus that produces sounds occurring in the picture shown on the screen. Successful dramatizations of well-known novels would also be popular. The Russians are great readers and the best of the French and English literature has been translated into the Russian language.

African Paper Criticises Our Films

Says That Court Scenes of Some Productions Misrepresent the Justice and Integrity of American Tribunals.

IN "Commerce Reports" Consul John F. Jewell, Lourenco Marques, East Africa, says that the Lourenco Marques Guardian, in two recent issues, has severely criticised some American motion pictures which were shown there. One was condemned on the ground that it would lead foreign audiences to believe that in the United States it is a common thing for ex-convicts to become chiefs of police.

There has been reason in many instances for an erroneous impression to be created in the minds of those who have been schooled under different systems of thought and government, and an American, even with a saving sense of humor, would not hesitate to condemn films of this kind as a misrepresentation of his country.

Many persons abroad criticise an American film when it attempts to give a representation of court scenes without the proper surroundings, or causes the police to be represented without dignity or discipline, and as instruments to defeat justice. These criticisms are by discerning friends of American films and American institutions.

Another motion picture was characterized as a "rank and evil-smelling" illustration of American justice and "either a blot or a libel." The film feature to which the paper referred misrepresented the uniform high sense of justice which is characteristic of the American people, its bar, and judiciary.

The fact that American films at this time occupy such a large part in the public entertainment in this part of the world does not lessen the force of this criticism. In China in 1915 it was found necessary to cut short a film which was about to close with a representation of American Indians burning a white man at the stake as a measure of justice. It is now submitted that a mixed audience composed of many races, such as may be found in African ports, will not have its respect for American justice and fair play enhanced by film illustrations of inordinate brutality and "third degrees," as if this were a common practice in the dispensation of American laws.

Bagdad Has One Picture Theater

Rather Primitive in Type, But Has Good Ventilation System—American Productions Shown.

BAGDAD has one public motion picture theater, writes U. S. Consul Oscar S. Heizer, who is stationed there, in a recent issue of "Commerce Reports." The building is about 100 feet long by 60 feet wide, a somewhat primitive structure, but with the advantage that the ventilation is very good. The seats are divided into two classes. The price of first-class tickets is 26 cents, and that of the second-class admission 17 cents. The hall is furnished with electric lights and electric fans, power for which is supplied by a small motor.

The films shown are similar to those ordinarily exhibited in America. There is usually one long film featuring some prominent French or English actor, followed by a short comedy. Numerous American films also are shown here.

Until recently films were imported chiefly from Smyrna, Turkey, where there was an agency, but that source of supply has been cut off since the occupation of Bagdad by the British on March 11, 1917. Another source is the firm of Pathe Freres, of Paris, France. The films are not purchased, but rented for a certain period and then returned. The theater opens every night at 8 o'clock, and closes about 10.30. There are no exhibitions during the day at present. The pictures are changed twice a week. The attendance is good.

There is also a motion picture theater conducted by the military authorities exclusively for the British officers and soldiers. Before the war a local British firm conducted a first-class film theater in Bagdad. It was very popular, and was attended by the best class of the population. Undoubtedly such enterprises will prosper here in the future, when normal conditions are restored, because the city has a population of about 200,000, and this form of amusement appeals to them.

Ivan Features Abroad

Piedmont's Export Department Reports Successful Negotiation of Foreign Sales.

PIEDMONT Pictures Corporation through its Export Department announces the successful operation of its efficiency distribution plan for the United Kingdom. The London Office just concluded a most advantageous deal for "Babbling Tongues," Ivan Film Productions' 7-reel superfeature. In using the word advantageous, it is not meant that merely the producers are satisfied, but that the arrangements are satisfactory to all concerned.

"One Law for Both," another of Ivan's big hits, has had its censor troubles completely adjusted, and the feature will be released in the United Kingdom within the next few weeks. Two of the large serials controlled by Piedmont Pictures Corporation have without much ado been closed for the above-mentioned territories by the London office, and distribution of same will commence forthwith.

Piedmont has also succeeded in having Hanover Films "Should a Baby Die" (Capt. Kimball's feature), pass the United Kingdom's censor and the reports as to the booking of the picture come up fully to all expectations.

The Buenos Ayres office and its various connections report the sale of all of Ivan's products for the following Latin American countries: Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru and Bolivia.

Piedmont Pictures Corporation has taken over the exclusive handling of "Speer Carbons" from "Inter-Ocean" for the territories controlled by Krishnadas Bros. of Bombay, and the various connections, the sole agency covering India, Burma, Ceylon and the Straits.

ARGENTINA LIKES AMERICAN PICTURES.

According to the statistical table published in this column some time ago, the United States exported to Argentina 5,176,627 feet of film during the first six months of 1917. And on the basis furnished by the official records covering the last four years, it may be estimated that the film shipments from this country to this southern republic for the whole of 1917 will not fall below 11,000,000 feet.

If the figures given for the first year of the war—375,494 feet of film imported from the United States—are compared with those of the first six months of 1917—5,176,627 feet—the resulting increase assumes enormous proportions.

The opinions expressed by such important buyers as "Glucksmann," "Sociedad General," "Sudamericana" and "Norteamericana," who practically control the film renting business in Argentine, Chile and Uruguay from their Buenos Aires exchanges, reveal a decided preference among the public for American pictures.

CARANZA FAVORS THE SCREEN.

The Caranza government has officially inaugurated in Mexico City a National Cinematographic School, which will be devoted to preparing artists for work before the camera. Manuel de la Bandera, a well-known local actor and the pioneer of Mexican moving pictures, has been appointed director-in-chief of the school.

THE REMAINING FIVE PER CENT. WERE BLIND.

On a given day, and without any special preparation to avoid outside influence, 40,000 children of Buenos Aires were asked to give their opinion on moving pictures. The subjects were divided under four classes: I, comedy; II, drama; III, adventures, fantastic and detective stories; IV, historic, patriotic, scenic travelogues, etc.

Ninety-five per cent. of the children liked moving pictures; 40% voted for the first class of subjects, 22% for the second; 24% for the third, and 12% for the fourth. Two per cent. gave their preference to exotic subjects.

A MYSTERIOUS FUNCTIONARY.

In a recent issue of "El Imparcial"—a popular daily published in Madrid—there is an article on the Special Mission sent to Spain by the government of the United States and headed by Mr. David Harell as Ambassador Extraordinary.

Mr. Harell—says "El Imparcial"—is accompanied by a high "functionary" of the United States government whom President Wilson has entrusted with the mission of visiting the different provinces of Spain and securing first-hand information on the agricultural, commercial, mining and industrial needs of the kingdom. This official will exhibit a series of moving picture films taken in the great business centers of North America, which will doubtless be a revelation in Spain and will teach an invaluable lesson to employers and employees alike.

We presume that the "high functionary" in question is none other than Frank J. Marion, of the Kalem Co.

FROM SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.

A four-reel feature, made by the Royal Films of Barcelona, is being advertised at this moment in all the Spanish trade papers. The name of it is "Strength and Nobility." Jack Johnson, erstwhile heavyweight champion, plays the lead.

The British Film Co., manufacturers of the Brifco raw film, positive and negative, with and without perforations, is trying to introduce its product in the Spanish and P rtuguese markets in competition with the Eastman Kodak Company. It claims that its stock has 25% more emulsion, is stronger and will outlast any other brand of raw film.

Julian Ajuria, general manager of the Sociedad General Cinematografica of Argentina, is having a hard fight in Spain to introduce American pictures on a firm basis. He is handling Famous Players, Lasky, Fox, Vitagraph (Blue Ribbon), and World. According to more or less confidential information received by Cine-Mundial, it did not take the South American exchangeman long to realize that the exhibitors would oppose any plan to increase program prices. They insisted that all pictures were about the same, whether made in the United States, Italy, France or China, and that if Ajuria had been foolish enough to pay abnormal prices, he and not they should suffer the consequences. Don Julian tried to argue the point with his prospective customers and made several attempts to impress them by means of advertising and other propaganda, showing by this that his long stay in Latin America had made him forget the peculiar characteristics of his countrymen. Finally he was compelled to take the bull by the horns and began to hire theaters and exploit the films on his own account, and this is exactly what he should have done from the very beginning. Some exhibitors are threatening to boycott his program, but we do not believe that anything of this nature will be attempted.

One of the local trade papers just come to hand prints a long review on the "Ajuria American Program," which had its premiere a month ago in Madrid. Among the notables mentioned, there are, by actual count, four dukes, ten counts, fourteen marquises, two viscounts and fifty-five other members of nobility. Some of the names given in the review were made famous in history by the discovery and conquest of America. The first picture screened was "Miss Washington;" "The Cheat" came next.

MOTION PICTURES FOR THE BALKANS.

A group of Austrian and Hungarian dealers in films have organized a society, with headquarters in Vienna and a branch in Budapest, according to Consul General D. I. Murphy, Sofia, Bulgaria. The object of the society is the export of motion picture films for the Balkans. The society is capitalized at 1,000,000 crowns, equivalent to $200,000 in normal times. An independent enterprise is also being established at Budapest.

BROCK MAKES FOREIGN SALES.

Louis Brock, of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, reports the sale of "To-Day," "The Mad Lover" and "Raffles" for South Africa. The same office announces the closing of a World Pictures contract for the British West Indies.

GENERAL ENTERPRISES, INC., ENTERTAINS.

Arthur H. Sawyer, Herbert Lubin and Bert Ennis, of General Enterprises, Inc., gave an advance showing of "The Crucible of Life" at Churchill's Friday evening. The picture was shown at about six o'clock and was immediately followed by an elaborate dinner. This in turn was succeeded by music from the Camp Upton Quartette, various song composers and other program features.

Bert Ennis was master of ceremonies at this affair, which was attended by men from the trade, press and other guests.

Films from Manufacturers Direct to Exhibitors

Seven Independent Producers to Furnish Fifty-two Features a Year, Eliminating Exchanges and Reducing Expenses of Distribution.

ONE of the principal developments of the past few weeks, which promises to mark an epoch in the distribution of motion pictures, is the announcement that the direct "producer to exhibitor" sales plan, whereby seven of the largest independent producers will furnish direct to the exhibitors fifty-two feature pictures a year, has reached the stage where its sponsors feel justified in stating that it has "gone over" and will be a success.

The seven manufacturers—the Frohman Amusement Company, Herbert Brenon Productions, Lillian Walker Pictures Corporation, Ivan Film Production, Triumph Film Corporation, Harry Rapf Productions and the Shubert, Hammerstein and Ince Productions—will increase their producing facilities, and from their output a sufficient number will be selected to supply exhibitors with one picture each week.

The manufacturers will be paid the actual expenses of production as determined by expert auditors, plus a 25 per cent. profit, based on a service for 2,700 days, and this expense will be pro rated among the exhibitors' organizations in the different territories formed for handling this service, which will in turn be divided among the individual exhibitors, a minimum number of days being used as a basis.

Any exhibitor may become affiliated with the organization and be eligible for this service, and in case more than the alloted quota of days for any section is contracted for the excess profit will be divided on a 50-50 basis between the manufacturer of the picture and the exhibitors in that section who have contracted for one or more days per week. This will enable the exhibitor to obtain a substantial rebate on his original share of the expense.

The organization, represented by C. C. Pettijohn and Louis L. Levine, both prominent members of the two national exhibitors' associations, is at present known as the Independent Producers-Exhibitors Affiliated. This concern will arrange to deliver the prints direct to the organizations of exhibitors. The question as to how the distribution among the individual members is to be effected will be left to each separate body. However, if on account of local conditions it is deemed advisable to use an existing exchange this service will be performed strictly on a percentage basis, but in every such instance an exhibitors' committee must control the routing.

This plan has been referred to in a number of our previous issues, and was briefly outlined on page 1919 of December 29 issue, when a committee consisting of W. L. Sherrill, Joseph W. Farnham, I. E. Chadwick, Harry Rapf, Joseph A. Golden and Lester Park appeared before the exhibitors' convention in Washington, D. C., on December 12, and Mr. Farnham, as spokesman, explained the project. Charles C. Pettijohn and Louis L. Levine were employed by the producers' committee, and since that time have been busily engaged in perfecting the details and reducing the plan to writing, and as a result two additional producers, Herbert Brenon Productions and Shubert, Hammerstein & Ince Company, have been added to the original five; that is, the Frohman, Lillian Walker, Ivan, Triumph and Harry Rapf organizations.

Thomas J. Hamlin, secretary and general manager of the Associated Theaters, Inc., with headquarters in Minneapolis, signed a contract for one release per week for the 645 members of that organization in Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, and will immediately start west to organize the states of Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and Montana.

Very gratifying letters are being received from practically all sections of the country, indicating that the exhibitors are very much interested in this plan, and it is expected that contracts will be closed within the next week for New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Kentucky, Illinois and several southern states.

A large share of the credit for the success of this plan is due to C. C. Pettijohn, who has been unceasing in his efforts. He predicts that the outcome of this undertaking will have a great effect on the motion picture industry of the United States.

"EAGLE'S EYE" COMPANY IN TOWN.

In New York for a few days the first of the month making scenes for "The Eagle's Eye," the patriotic serial being produced by the Whartons, were King Baggot, Marguerite Snow, Paul Everton, William Bailey, William Cavanaugh and George Lessey. The players were given a hearty reception by their friends after their short sojourn in Ithaca, where the interiors for the subject are being taken.

They Built "The House of Hate"

Who the Men Are That Are Most Responsible for the Success of the Latest Pathe Serial.

THE men behind the production of Pathe's big new serial, "The House of Hate," have been identified with the greatest serial successes in the history of the continued form of motion pictures. They are Louis J. Gasnier, president of the Astra Film Corporation, George B. Seitz and Bertram Milhauser.

Louis J. Gasnier is one of the famous figures in motion picture history. He was identified with the legitimate stage in France as stage manager for Sarah Bernhardt and he was one of the first, if not the first, theatrical man in France to become a motion picture director. He is the man who made the famous "Runaway Horse" which old timers in the industry remember as probably the greatest short comedy hit ever made, a picture which paved the way for the type of fast action laugh producer that is still so popular. Mr. Gasnier is not only an artist, but is also a business man, as is shown by the fact that he was at one time vice-president and general manager of Pathe, during which time he gained valuable experience in the handling of serials. He formed the Astra Film Corporation with George Fitzmaurice and George B. Seitz as associate officers and the productions of this company for Pathe, not only in the serial but also in the feature line, have maintained a very high standard.

L. J. Gasnier.

"When the story of 'The House of Hate,' written by Charles Logue and Arthur B. Reeve, was turned over by Pathe to Astra for production," says Mr. Gasnier, "I determined to draw upon all the brains and talent at my command to make it a decided step ahead in serials, in order to keep pace with the great advance in the quality of the features now being released by Pathe.

"I sincerely believe that the best team for the writing and making of serial scenarios is Bertram Milhauser and George B. Seitz, who have proven their ability to guage the public taste. They were given full sway with Pearl White, the greatest serial star, and Antonio Moreno, one of the most popular leading men on the screen as their feature players and they have succeeded."

George B. Seitz.

George B. Seitz is a living example of the success a brilliant young man can attain in the motion picture business. He is 27 years old and is not only generally recognized as having attained possibly the pinnacle of success as a scenario writer, but also as the author of many one act plays and also "The King's Game," in which James K. Hackett starred for more than two years. He started out with the avowed intention to learn all there was to learn about the stage, gaining experience with the Castle Square Stock Company in Boston and as stage manager for "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie." Before that he studied painting and attained considerable success as an illustrator. He then turned to motion pictures. "The Exploits of Elaine," for which he wrote the scenarios, netted one million dollars profit. Its predecessors, "Perils of Pauline," was equally remunerative. He wrote "The Ir n Claw," which like the two above, starred Pearl White and was the most successful serial ever released. He then became director, scoring an immediate triumph with his work on "The Fatal Ring," Pearl White's latest hit. Action, suspense, continuity, logic and heart interest are the big ingredients with which Seitz works. "The House of Hate" has according to him, the most baffling mystery ever embodied in any of the Pathe serials. "When I read the script and outline of the story of 'The House of Hate,' I found that there was a new way of introducing mystery and we have made the most of it. With Pearl White as the heroine and Antonio Moreno as the hero, I used great care in picking the supporting all star cast. Paul Clerget, the famous French pantomimist who scored a triumph with Winthrop Ames, presented him on Broadway in "Pierrot the Prodigal"; J. H. Gilmour whom I considered one of the greatest character actors on the screen, and Peggy Shanor, an actress of the legitimate stage who, I believe, will reveal an entirely new interpretation of a vampire role, were the three people we decided upon."

Bertram Milhauser.

Bertram Milhauser is another striking example of a young man who has succeeded in the motion picture business. To him comes a great deal of the credit for the success of "The Fatal Ring," since it was he who wrote the scenarios from the original idea evolved by Mr. Seitz and Fred Jackson, the magazine author and playwright. Beginning to direct with the intention of also writing the scenarios, Seitz soon found that this was too much for any one man. Mr. Milhauser who had done a number of other splendid scenarios for Pathe, was asked to take up "The Fatal Ring," and in doing so, while basing his scenarios on Mr. Jackson's idea, he is really the creator of a great deal of that fascinating story. Milhauser is a young man and is expected to go on developing into doing bigger things. When a few years ago, he was in Pathe's Advertising Department, he saw opportunity in scenario writing and grasped it. The whole Pathe oragnization is proud of his success. His work on "The House of Hate" is another step ahead.

Z. H. WILSON BUYS TEXAS HOUSE.

The Wickenden Theater, built in Naples, Texas, in 1910, by Thomas C. Wickenden and since that time operated by him, has been sold to Z. H. Wilson. The sale price was $15,700. The house in future will be known as the Wilson Theater.

"I attribute to the Moving Picture World a great part of my success as an exhibitor," says Mr. Wickenden in a letter announcing the change in ownership of his old house. "I have been a constant reader of your magazine and Hand Book ever since I started in business."

ANDRIOT IN GOVERNMENT SERVICE.

Lucien Andriot, chief of the photographers who took the scenes for Metro's "Lest We Forget," is in training to become a photographer with the Aviation Corps for service in France.

Pathe Department Heads Shift

Tom North Becomes Editor of Pathe Sun—Winchester Takes Over Serial Publicity.

SEVERAL changes in department heads have recently been made by J. A. Berst, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Joseph Dunn, who has been with Pathe for something over a year, and as a former newspaper man has a wide acquainatnce in New York City, has been placed in charge of the Title Editing Department. Mr. Berst appreciates the importance of this department, and has determined that in titles and film editing the Pathe releases shall be beyond criticism. Mr. Dunn has been in charge of the Pathe serial publicity department.

Tarleton Winchester, who in addition to special sales and publicity work has been the editor of the Pathe Sun, has been given the serial publicity department. Mr. Winchester has been in the motion picture business for a number of years and came to Pathe about two years ago from Paramount where he was publicity director.

Tom North becomes the editor of the Pathe Sun. Mr. North made a big hit with exhibitors in Seattle where he was manager of the V. L. S. E. Exchange, and where he published the V. L. S. E. Pals, a sheet which had wide vogue with theater men. He has been in charge of the Pathe Super-Feature Department.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of Feb. 3 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

THE RIVOLI—Vivian Martin and Theodore Roberts have the principal roles in "A Petticoat Pilot," the Paramount picture featured at The Rivoli for the week of Feb. 3. The story is one of Joseph C. Lincoln's breezy tales of Cape Cod folks. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in "The Bright Lights Dimmed," and the Animated Pictorial also were shown.

THE RIALTO—Mary MacLane, "The girl from Butte," in "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," was the feature at The Rialto. The picture was produced by George K. Spoor. The Animated Magazine and the customary selection of educational and humorous subjects balanced the program.

THE STRAND—Pauline Frederick was the star at the Strand Theater in "Madame Jealousy," an allegorical play by George V. Hobart. It is a Paramount Picture. Another film feature was a satire comedy by James Montgomery Flagg entitled "The Man Eater." A scenic study in natural colors revealing "Bonnets of Brilliancy," another chapter of Ditmar's "Living Book of Nature," and the Strand Topical Review were also shown.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET THEATER—On Monday and Wednesday Taylor Holmes, in "Uneasy Money," was the feature. Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Goldwyn presented Mae Marsh in "Fields of Honor."

HODKINSON ENGAGES W. A. BACH.

The sales department of the home office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation was increased last week by the addition of W. A. Bach as assistant to Sales Manager P. N. Brinch. Mr. Bach has just finished a five months' tour of the country for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company as representative of the general manager. On this trip, Mr. Bach investigated and reported on conditions in both exchanges and the territories generally and in addition established publicity and exhibitor service departments in the various branches. He is thus closely in touch with conditions in the exhibiting field at the present time, and has a wide acquaintance with exhibitors and exchange men of all companies. Mr. Bach began his motion picture career with Universal in Canada, but last April joined M. H. Hoffman at the beginning of his independent distribution plans. He left Mr. Hoffman to make a tour for the Universal, winding up that work just previous to his connection with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

ENDERT, FAMOUS SEATTLE SALES MANAGER.

George P. Endert, formerly local manager for Pathe, has joined the office force of the Famous Players-Lasky Seattle exchange as sales manager. He will have charge of all the territory west of the Cascade Mountains in addition to supervising the entire sales force for the territory. Mr. Endert is one of the best known film men on the coast and has been in the business since it was first established in the northwest. Another addition to the Seattle office is H. W. West, in the capacity of booker. Mr. West was also formerly with Pathe.

Bobby Connelly Plays With Drew

MASTER BOBBY CONNELLY, who has been engaged by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew to support them in "Gas Logic," the Metro-Drew comedy which they are now producing, has just arranged to pay his income tax, without a protest. He and his father, Joseph I. Connelly, who is a business man, signed their papers at the same time. "I know several children in the pictures," said Bobby when questioned on the subject, "who are trying to get out of paying their income taxes, but I consider it a patriotic duty—mama says so."

Bobby Connelly.

In the Metro-Drew picture in which he is now playing the little son of Mr. and Mrs. Drew, the cruel task is imposed upon Bobby of playing with a number of mechanical toys run by electricity. There is a washing-machine, a sawmill, a pile-driver, and a cannon among these toys. After Bobby had spent several hours playing with them under the direction of Mrs. Drew he was ready to go home and rest. "What are you going to do now for a change?" Mr. Drew asked him. "Going to play with my electric train," was the answer. Bobby and Mr. Drew are old "pals," having been associated in productions at the Vitagraph before Mr. and Mrs. Drew joined the Metro forces.

"Gas Logic," the Metro-Drew comedy by Louis Allen Brown, which Mr. and Mrs. Drew are producing, is of special interest at the present time on account of the fuel situation. The stars of Metro-Drew comedies are hoping that "Gas Logic" will prove as popular as their food conservation picture, "The Patriot," which elicited a personal letter of appreciation from Food Administrator Hoover.

HOOVER TRAILERS ON PARALTA PLAYS.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has ordered all the prints of Paralta Plays which are sent out by exchanges to carry trailers, reproducing one of the slogans requested by Herbert Hoover, United States Food Commissioner. These will be attached to all films, both the new pictures and those already issued. The telegram sent out by Mr. Hoover to the motion picture distributors requested the use of one of several slogans in this way. The Hodkinson Corporation selected one which reads:

"Hoarding food in your household is both selfish and unnecessary. The government is protecting the food supply of its people."

DIRECTOR ALBERT HALE A BENEDICT.

Albert W. Hale, known as a director since the pioneer days of the motion picture industry, was married to Miss Julia F. Johnson, a New York girl, on January 31, at City Hall, New York City. Miss Dorothy Curtis and Fred. J. Balshofer attended the bride and groom.

At the Hotel Ansonia, later, Mr. Balshofer gave a surprise wedding spread to Mrs. Hale and her husband and twenty guests. Joseph W. Engel and Fred J. Balshofer alternated as toastmasters.

The Hales left for California on Saturday, where they will establish their permanent home. Mr. Hale will resume his directoral duties there.

NORMA TALMADGE TO TAKE MONTH'S REST.

With the completion this week of "By Right of Purchase," Norma Talmadge's Select production, the star is planning to abandon the picture world for a month's rest and will leave early in February for Palm Beach.

State Rights Department

Conducted by C. S. SEWELL

S. R. D. Makes First Buy

General Manager Mell Simmons Closes with Paralta for World Rights to "Carmen of the Klondike."

OUR columns have chronologically recorded the activities of the State Right Distributors, Inc., since the time that Sol. Lesser, now president of this body, conceived the idea, and the state rights field has had the opportunity of observing the success of this undertaking, which became a completed whole at a meeting in the Claridge Hotel during the week of November 20. It was then that C. Mell Simmons was chosen as general manager and brought on from the management of the Los Angeles exchange of the Goldwyn organization. On January 9, Mr. Simmons called a special meeting in New York of the buying committee of the S. R. D. for the purpose of looking at a number of productions that were obtainable. However, none were so favorably reported upon as the Clara Williams production of the Paralta Plays, Inc., entitled "Carmen of the Klondike," in 6,500 feet. From that time on the purchase of this production was never in doubt, but the details could not be brought to a close until Wednesday, January 30. In discussing the first buy of the State Right Distributors, Inc., Mr. Simmons lays emphasis upon the fact that, unlike many other organizations that pay negligent attention to their first step forward, it was his policy to offer the state rights market through the medium of the many franchise holding exchanges which comprise the Lesser organization the strongest possible feature offering from the very start and keep up to the standard thus set. He explained how that more than a month of his time had been devoted to the consideration of the negatives now being offered for independent purchase, and that none came anywhere near possessing the perfection from all angles that "Carman of the Klondike" can claim.

C. Mell Simmons.

He comments further that the particular value of this production lies not only in its photographic excellence, the virility of its story, and the popularity of its star, but the composite blend of all three, which makes it the best attraction from the box office angle for the exhibitor.

General Manager Simmons advises that immediately on receiving notice of their purchase of "Carmen of the Klondike," Ben S. Cohen of the Foursquare Pictures Corp., Denver, joined the association by wire, exercising an option which he held.

Now that this purchase has been made and others are shortly to follow, Mr. Simmons departed for a swing around the S. R. D. Circuit on Tuesday, February 5. This journey will doubtless occupy almost the entire month, as he intends visiting all territories as far West as Denver and Omaha, and as far South as the Gulf of Mexico.

SERVICE DEPARTMENT FOR W. H. PRODUCTIONS.

The W. H. Productions Company has inaugurated an exhibitor's service department which will co-operate with the exchanges controlling its pictures, and carrying out this plan, an attractive line of advertising matter for "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain" has been prepared. This consists of a twenty-four sheet, two styles of sixes, two styles of threes and two styles of one sheets, photographs in three sizes, two styles of slides, heralds and a variety of ad cuts, all representing actual scenes from the photoplay. In addition, an attractive twenty-page campaign book has been devised, which will be of great help to the exhibitor.

Ivan's Big State Right Sale

Makes Deal with Consolidated Film Corporation for Fourteen Subjects in Large Territory.

MARION KOHN, president of the Consolidated Film Corporation, a large film distributor of the Northwest, concluded this week one of the largest state right deals in filmdom for Ivan productions. The territory covers Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and Montana. For some time past Mr. Kohn, having watched the success which the M. & R. Feature Film exchange have attained in exploiting Ivan films in California, Nevada, and Arizona, has been in negotiation with Ivan concerning the exclusive territorial rights which he now has purchased. The sale includes the following special features: "A Mother's Confession," "Faded Flower," "The Immortal Flame," "His Wives," "City of Illusion?" "Concealed Truth," "Her Surrender," "The Girl Who Did Not Care," "Two Men and a Woman," "One Law for Both," "Babbling Tongues," "Married in Name Only," "Human Clay," and "Sins of Ambition."

A national campaign is now being mapped out, and the publicity department of Ivan has found itself forced to further enlarge its staff. Close co-operation with the distributor-exhibitor from the publicity standpoint will be an important feature of the campaign initiated by Dr. Lamberger, director of publicity for Ivan.

Close studies of the nature of the population in the different territories are being made. It will not be sufficient for Ivan to merely make the "personal appeal," but the "personal appeal" must be made as if it were from the exhibitors' own territory. For that purpose suggestions from exhibitors throughout the country are desired by Ivan's publicity department.

Within a short time Dr. Lamberger will embark on what shall be known as "The Ivan Publicity Trip," when he will visit not only every large city, but as many towns off the main line that he can possibly manage to call upon.

RALPH INCE TO DIRECT FOURTH PETROVA PICTURE.

Following the completion last week of "The Life Mask," the third production in which Madame Olga Petrova will appear as the star of her own organization, announcement was made that a director for the fourth Petrova picture had been selected. The man who will hold the directorial reins over the fourth production on Madame Petrova's special release calendar is Ralph Ince, member of the famous Ince family, and for many years a star of the production unit of the Vitagraph forces. The story which this famous director will stage for Madame Petrova is from the pen of George Middleton, celebrated short story writer and novelist. The working title of the latest vehicle for the Polish actress is "The Great Star," the scenario being understood to give extraordinary scope for the display of her peculiar screen talents.

SPECIAL SCREENING OF "THE BELGIAN" FOR BELGIAN RELIEF.

Arrangements have been completed for the screening of the Sidney Olcott special production, "The Belgian," at a monster benefit entertainment to be given on Friday, February 8, in St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco, in behalf of the war orphaned children of Belgium and France. This is the second time the production, which is the third special release of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, has been shown at a Belgian benefit, having been screened under the joint auspices of Sidney Olcott and Frank G. Hall at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York, recently.

As on the occasion of the New York presentation, Belgian diplomats stationed in San Francisco and Los Angeles will supervise the entertainment, which is being given generous publicity in the various West Coast publications. The entertainment is being arranged by prominent San Francisco society workers, among them Mrs. Harriet Fay Richards, who is head of the committee.

"The Belgian" will be available to all Coast exhibitors immediately following the special presentation. The benefit screening will mark its initial showing in that territory.

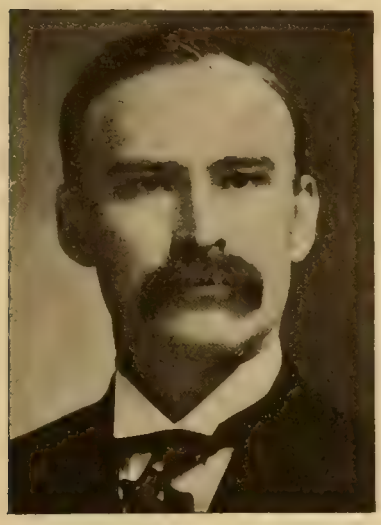
SOL LESSER RECOVERING.

Telegrams from the Pacific Coast indicate that Sol. L. Lesser, president of State Right Distributors, Inc., is rapidly recovering from an attack of appendicitis which has been the cause of his confinement for several days, and that he will be able to return to his office within a short time. Notwithstanding his illness, he kept in close touch with his business affairs, and, from his bedside, has been negotiating some big deals.

W. E. Drummond Visits New York

Well-Known Manager of Special Features Company, Knoxville, Tenn., Looking for High Class State Right Features.

AN INTERESTING visitor to the Moving Picture World offices this week was W. E. Drummond, manager and sole owner of one of the principal state right exchanges in the South, the Special Features Company, 610 Market street, Knoxville, Tenn., supplying high class attractions to exhibitors in Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia and Florida, and in some cases, North and South Carolina.



W. E. Drummond.

This company's present list of features includes: "Raffles," "The Warrior," and "Enlighten Thy Daughter" for Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia and Florida; "The Whip" for Alabama, Georgia and Florida, and "Fighting in France" for Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina. Mr. Drummond at the present time is in this city negotiating with the leading producers for a number of other high class features and short comedy subjects.

Prior to his entrance into the film business, Mr. Drummond was a practicing attorney in Knoxville for a number of years, and was for some time City Attorney in Park City, one of the high class residential suburbs of Knoxville. He was attracted by the possibilities of the state right market, and assumed charge of the Special Features Company in May, 1917. Since that time he has not only materially increased the holdings of this company, but has erected at Maryville, Tenn., the Palace theater, an 800-seat house, one of the most modernly equipped and thoroughly up-to-date picture theaters in the South. In addition, Mr. Drummond is part owner of the Gay theater, seating about 1,200, one of the largest exclusive motion picture theaters in Knoxville.

Associated with Mr. Drummond in the Special Features Company is Nat. L. Royster, sales manager, who is well known throughout the Southern States and has an enviable record as a hustling film salesman.

LOEW HOUSES REJECT "THE EAGLE'S EYE."

Marcus Loew and Joseph M. Schenck, managers of the New York theater and other leading moving picture houses here and in other cities, have refused to book the new serial photo-drama, "The Eagle's Eye," founded on a story by William J. Flynn, who recently retired as Chief of the U. S. Secret Service, exposing the machinations of the Imperial German Government's spy army in this country, on the ground that it would prove detrimental to their business, because "it would be too great a contrast to the thoughts and opinions of their German patrons."

In Washington, recently, the first three episodes of "The Eagle's Eye," as shown at the Strand theater, were reviewed by Chairman George Creel, of the Committee of Public Information, and were approved by that committee. The films were shown at the Washington Press Club, and viewed by many prominent officials and journalists.

SPECIALTY FILM OPENS BRANCH AT DALLAS.

The Specialty Film Company, of San Antonio, Texas, which has secured the rights to the two W. H. Productions Company's Hart super-feature productions, "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska," and twenty-eight two-reel Mack Sennett comedies for Texas and Arkansas, has established its branch office at the Matinee Bar, Dallas.

W. G. Underwood, who will be in charge of the exchange, is one of the pioneer film men of the Southwest, having located in Texas about ten years ago. For the past three years, Mr. Underwood has been manager of the Pathe exchange branch office at Dallas, which position he was obliged to give up last April on account of ill health. L. C. Baxley, who is also associated with this enterprise, was also connected with the Pathe exchange at Dallas for a period of about two years, and is considered one of the best salesmen in this territory.

JESTER COMEDIES SIGN NILDE BABETTE.

The Jester Comedy Company has signed Nilde Babette, to play opposite Twede-Dan, for one year. Miss Babette appears in the first two releases, "The Recruit" and "His Golden Romance," and her work proved so satisfactory that she was contracted for the first series of twelve Jester comedies. She is a stranger to America, having arrived recently from Paris, and makes her debut to the American screen public in "The Recruit." Miss Babette possesses a distinct type of beauty, and is particularly suited for comedy work.

The exterior scenes for the third production in which Madame Olga Petrova will shortly appear, "The Life Mask," introduces the entire Red Cross Chapter of Florida. Shortly after the Polish star's arrival in Miami, Fla., she interested herself in the Red Cross Chapter of Southeast Florida. In return, Mrs. Henry R. Naylor, president of the chapter, offered the services of her entire force of workers for use by Frank Crane, the director of the Petrova film. As a result the members of the Royal Palms Auxiliary took part in many of the scenes, lending a necessary and desirable atmosphere to the story told in "The Life Mask."

These scenes were photographed in the beautiful grove at Miami, and the wonderful array of luxuriant palms formed a most attractive tropical back-ground for the picturesque white uniforms of the Red Cross workers. Madame Petrova is extremely proud of the patriotic and inspiring atmosphere loaned to the various scenes of "The Life Mask" in which the Red Cross workers have appeared, and arrangements have been made whereby the film in its entirety will be screened for the special entertainment of the Florida chapter within the near future.

"The Light Within," the second production in which Madame Olga Petrova will be seen as the star of her own organization, offers a striking contrast to "Daughter of Destiny," her initial release, which was issued a short time ago through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. The story of "The Light Within" deals with the struggle of a famous woman doctor; torn between the conflicting urge of professional duty toward humanity and passionate mother-love for her little son, she is forced to a ruthless decision entailing on either side an enormous sacrifice.

CHANGES IN STANDARD FILM CO.

During the past week R. C. Cropper resigned as president and general manager of the Standard Film Company, and Phil L. Ryan, former sales manager, has assumed the general management of the organization. Mr. Cropper is now in New York looking over the film situation, but as yet has made no definite plans for the future.

This company operates one of the largest independent exchange systems in the United States, having offices in Kansas City, Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Louis and Omaha, and has just held a convention of its branch managers in Kansas City to discuss plans for handling the William S. Hart productions of the W. H. Productions Co., 28 of their Keystone comedies, together with the Billy West comedies and Christie comedies.

The only change in the organization made by Mr. Ryan was the appointment of R. C. Herman as manager of the Kansas City office, to succeed J. L. Shipley, who will henceforth be associated with A. H. Blank of Des Moines.

CREST INAUGURATES NEW SALES METHOD.

The Crest Pictures Corporation in marketing "The Grain of Dust," based on David Graham Phillips' novel and featuring Lillian Walker, has departed from the usual method, by inviting applications for bookings from exhibitors direct. Carle E Carlton, president of this concern, advises that this was done as a protection to exhibitors against exorbitant prices, also as a guarantee to State Right buyers in advance, of a substantial profit on their investment, and he is gratified with the reception which has been accorded this feature. Mr. Carlton further states that as a result of this plan arrangements have been made in various sections of the country for the showing of "The Grain of Dust" at prices equitable to all concerned; and that territories are being closed with the definite stipulation that these agreements, both as to price and first run protection, will be honored by the buyer.

MAGIC LANTERN SCENERY FOR KING-BEE.

Louis Burstein, president of the King-Bee Film Corp., has been approached by a California inventor who claims to have perfected a scenic illusion which he projects through a magic lantern that will do away entirely with studio scenery.

A demonstration is promised very shortly, and, if practical, Mr. Burstein and his associates in the King-Bee Film Corp. will handle the business end of this invention, which should be of great assistance to the studio end of the motion picture industry.

STERLING BUYS WILBUR FEATURE AND KEEN CARTOONS.

Through David Russell, sales representative of David Horsley, a sale was consummated for the United States rights to the Crane Wilbur subject, "Blood of His Fathers," to the Sterling Pictures Corporation. The opening reel gives a portrayal of a Civil War incident that revolves around a Southern mansion during a raid by guerrillas. The remainder of the story is brought up to date, and dwells upon the heritage of hate and passion that the Civil War incident brings to the generations that follow.

The Sterling Pictures Corporation has also acquired world's rights to Keen Kartoons, which will be released in series. The first offering consists of twelve, each from five hundred and fifty to seven hundred feet in length; they are animated comedy subjects, each one tinted and toned.

Lynch Enterprises Conclude Big Contracts

Large Sections of Territory Signed for Forty-five Hart, Fairbanks, Keenan and Talmadge, and Sixteen Keystone Pictures.

ONE of the largest transactions so far recorded in the state rights market was the successful negotiation by the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., through Hiller & Wilk, by which the former has disposed of the rights to forty-five William S. Hart, Douglas Fairbanks, Frank Keenan and Norma Talmadge reissues and sixteen Keystone reissues for a large portion of the territory of the country, to become effective on Feb. 15.

The concerns securing the rights for the forty-five features are: De Luxe Feature Film Co., Seattle, for Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana; All Star Feature Film Co., San Francisco, for California, Nevada and Arizona; Boston Photoplay Co., for the six New England states; Quality Film Co., Pittsburgh, for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Masterpiece Film Co., for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey, The S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., retaining the eleven Southern states for themselves.

The sixteen Keystone comedies have been secured by I. A. Rosenthal, Seattle, for Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, California, Arizona, Nevada, Utah, New Mexico, Colorado and Wyoming; Standard Film Co. for Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, North and South Dakota, Minnesota and Illinois. V. H. Hodupp, for Kentucky and Indiana, and Michigan for Harry Garson.

The forty-five features consist of sixteen with William S. Hart: "The Disciple," "Between Men," "Hell's Hinges," "The Aryan," "The Primal Lure," "The Captive God," "The Patriot," "The Dawnmaker," "The Apostle of Vengeance," "The Return of Draw Egan," 'Devil's Double," "Truthful Tulliver," "The Gunfighter," "The Square Deal Man," "The Desert Man" and "Wolf Lowry"; thirteen with Douglas Fairbanks: "The Lamb," "Double Trouble," "His Picture in the Papers," "The Habit of Happiness," "The Good Bad Man," "Reggie Mixes In," "Flirting with Fate," 'Mystery of the Leaping Fish," "The Half Breed," "Manhattan Madness," "American Aristocracy," "The Matrimaniac" and "The Americano"; nine with Frank Keenan: "The Coward," "Stepping Stones," "The Phantom," "Honor Thy Name," "The Thoroughbred," 'Jim Grimsby's Boy," "The Sin Ye Do," "Bride of Hate" and "The Crab"; seven with Norma Talmadge: "Missing Links," "Martha's Vindication," "Children in the House," "Going Straight," "The Devil's Needle," "The Social Secretary" and "Fifty-Fifty."

The sixteen Keystones comprise: "Saved by Wireless." "The Village Scandal," "The Submarine Pirate," "Fatty and the Broadway Stars," "Dizzy Heights and Daring Hearts," "Fatty and Mabel Adrift," "He Did and He Didn't," "The Bright Lights," "Cinders of Love," "The Other Man," "Bucking Society," "The Snow Cure," "Her First False Step," "His Wild Oat," "The Waiters' Ball" and "Ambrose's Cup of Woe."

KLOTZ & STREIMER IN NEW OFFICES.

Klotz & Streimer, who are handling the feature production, "Whither Thou Goest," have found it necessary to remove to larger quarters and are now located at 1482 Broadway.

SHERRILL RETURNS.

Wm. L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, has returned to this city after a three weeks' trip to Tampa, Fla., where Director "Jack" Noble is engaged in filming "The Birth of a Race."

"MORAL SUICIDE" CAST AT PALM BEACH.

Ivan Abramson, president and managing director of the Graphic Film Corporation, recently left this city for a stay of about two weeks at Palm Beach, Fla., where a number of exteriors for the forthcoming production of "Moral Suicide" will be filmed. Accompanying Mr. Abramson, was Moses Sachs, the studio manager, and the entire cast of principals, including John Mason, Leah Baird, Claire Whitney, Jack Cameron, Anne Luther, Alan Hale, Sidney Mason and William Lampe.

"BILL" STEINER ON PACIFIC COAST.

William Steiner, head of the Jester Comedy Company, is now on the Pacific Coast, giving screenings under the "show you" policy of the first two Jester comedies, featuring Twede Dan, "The Recruit" and "His Golden Romance." He sends encouraging reports of conditions in that section and states that exhibitors are flourishing, and that the showing of the Jester comedies has been well received. Territories from New York to the coast have been signed up, and he is now preparing for an invasion of the South.

PART OF "TARZAN" RECEIPTS FOR TOBACCO FUND.

Arrangements have been consummated whereby "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" will receive ten per cent. of the receipts from the showing of "Tarzan of the Apes," which opened at the Broadway theater, Sunday, January 27. The arrangements involving this donation were handled by Harry Reichenbach, publicity director of the National Film Corporation, and Bert Ennis, who is directing the exploitation matter for the fund.

NEW MEMBERS OF U. S. EXHIBITORS STAFF.

John K. Grier, who recently resigned as Canadian sales manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, has joined the sales staff of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation and will supervise distribution in the Cleveland territory. Another recent addition to this organization is Charles Berman, who will supervise the distribution of U. S. productions throughout the Dominion of Canada, in connection with the Superfeatures, Ltd., of which Charles Stevens is president. Mr. Berman has had long experience in the Canadian field. He formerly was interested in the Regal Film Company. It is the intention of the Superfeatures, Ltd., which now has branch offices in Montreal and St. Johns, to expand its organization and to establish branches in western Canada. Homer Howard has resigned as Buffalo representative of Paramount and he will be in charge of the Buffalo district of U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, making his headquarters in the Hoffman-Foursquare exchange of that city. Max Cutler also has joined the U. S. organization and has been assigned to the Chicago office. Cutler has had long experience in the film business in the Middle West.

ADAMS, OF DESERET FILMS, IS OPTIMISTIC.

J. L. Adams, of the Deseret Film Company of Salt Lake City, who is in the city and making his headquarters at the Arrow Film Corporation while looking over the new crop of State Right pictures, says: "Picture conditions are, generally speaking, good out in my part of the country. War has had very little effect on the majority of the picture houses—in fact, most of them are making more money than ever. We have been listening to the calamity howlers and their predictions that because of economic conditions the entire motion picture industry would be severely crimped, but we haven's paid any attention to them and haven't seen any of the predictions verified as yet."

In substantiation of his statement, Mr. Adams points to the fact that he has made three rounds of the inter-mountain states with W. H. Clune's big feature, "The Eyes of the World," as a road attraction, and it is still going strong.

SHIPMAN MAKES BIG DEALS FROM BEDSIDE.

While ill with a very severe attack of grippe which threatened to develop into pneumonia, Earnest Shipman persisted in ignoring the doctor's orders and continued to transact business from his bedside. As a result, he announces the closing of contracts for Shorty Hamilton pictures covering New York City and State, Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Oklahoma. As a result, he is recovering rapidly, and hopes to return to his office within a short time.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Triangle Shows Oil Gusher on February 10

Barney Sherry Has Role of Old Irishman in Story of California.

AFTER weeks of waiting, Director Walter Edwards succeeds in filming the bringing in of an oil gusher for Mrs. Kate Corbaley's prize-winning story, "Real Folks," released for the week of Feb. 10. The story deals with the discovery of oil on a California farm. Every detail of the work before the oil shot into the air, twenty feet higher than the top of the derrick, was pictured. J. Barney Sherry is an old Irishman—Pat Dugan—with his true Irish wit and all the determination and obstinacy that are his birthright. Francis McDonald is Jimmie Dugan, a "chip of the old block." As Mrs. Patrick Dugan, late of County Kearny, but with aspirations for entrance into Long Island Society, Alberta Lee is seen in a characteristic role.

William Desmond has the title role in "The Captain of His Soul," also on the Triangle program for the week of Feb. 10. This play is a screen adaptation by Lillian Ducey, of Eleanoret Talbot Kinkaid's magazine story, "Shackles," which had its inspiration in William Ernest Henley's poem, "Out of the Night." The central theme of the plot is a mysterious death, and the belief of two brothers that the other is the perpetrator of the crime.

William Desmond and Charles Gunn portray two brothers. Jack Richardson, Triangle "heavy," has the role of the villain. Walt Whitman has a characterization part. Mitzi Gould is Myra, and Claire McDowell is Annette DeSearcy. Gilbert P. Hamilton was the director.

"Wronged by Mistake," the Keystone comedy release for Feb. 10, is described as "a cyclone on roller skates."

"His Nine Lives" and "A Game Gambler" are the Triangle Komedies released for the week of Jan. 10.

BUSHMAN STAGING PLAY AT HIS OWN HOME.

The "Bushmanor" estate of Francis X. Bushman near Baltimore is being used for a new Metro All-Star Series production, "The Brass Check." June Mathis made the adaptation from George Allan England's story. Will S. Davis is directing the picture.

Mr. Bushman plays A. Richard Trevor, the son of a rubber king. The star's residence will be used for the staging of the exteriors of the Trevor home. His house has an early English exterior and is ideally suited for the mansion called for in the script. It contains thirty-five large rooms which are furnished with a rare collection of furniture and rugs. It is 150 years old and stands in the center of a tract of 10 acres.

The Metro star has a valuable collection of livestock, which includes twelve horses, eight cows, five dogs and thirteen puppies. Among the horses are four of the finest in the United States, Nubian King, Petroleum, Redfield and Araby. The Bushman collection of birds includes thrushes, Japanese robins, nightingales, finches, linnets, and a host of other songbirds. The poultry yards are inhabited by a large flock of chickens, including White Leghorns and Rhode Island Reds.

DESMOND PROVES HIMSELF A SWORDSMAN.

William Desmond, who has been featured in many of Triangle's pictures, staged a great sword fight with Lee Hill in the Triangle production, "The Sea Panther," which has just been completed under the direction of Thomas N. Heffron. A swift and unexpected blow knocked Hill's sword from his hand, high in the air. As it descended, Desmond deftly caught the blade and with a gracious sweep handed the weapon back to his adversary. It was an unexpected bit of "business" that gave an added touch of realism to the scene. Desmond's hand was cut slightly when he clutched the sharp steel, but his face registered no sign of pain as the cameraman continued grinding.

TAYLOR DIRECTING CONSTANCE TALMADGE.

William D. Taylor is directing Constance Talmadge, Select comedienne, in "Up the Road with Sallie," which she has recently started at the Hollywood studios. Mr. Taylor has already won a high place for himself by his direction of "Tom Sawyer," "Huck and Tom," and "His Majesty, Bunker Bean"—all successful comedies. The present production, full of humorous incidents interspersed with dramatic moments, is set in Mr. Taylor's best vein.

HOW DILLON GOT HIS TRAIN SCENES.

All proper methods of appeal having failed, Director Edward Dillon and the company of Goldwyn players engaged in filming exterior scenes for "Our Little Wife," Madge Kennedy's new starring vehicle, at Tampa, Florida, resorted to bold tactics in obtaining a locomotive, an observation Pullman and a flat car for incidents necessary to the completion of the picture.

Dillon applied first to the proper authorities and asked to be allowed the use of the rolling stock for half a day in the neighborhood of Tampa. From the general traffic manager down he was met with refusal.

Scene from "Our Little Wife" (Goldwyn).

A yardmaster with a sense of humor was appealed to and he promised to furnish the desired rolling stock. Early next morning, therefore, just after sun-up, a strangely assorted party of human beings was to be seen picking its way across the maze of tracks in the yards.

"You've got just ten minutes to make this here picture," confided the yardmaster, "and you can't take the train out of my sight. So get busy."

For considerably more than ten minutes the commandeered train was run back and forth through the yards. The scenes were made.

VIGNOLA DIRECTING CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG.

Clara Kimball Young has chosen Robert G. Vignola to direct "The Reason Why," her next picture for Select. Mr. Vignola has but recently completed Alice Brady's latest Select offering, "The Knife," and for a number of her most successful productions was Pauline Frederick's director. He is one of the best known men in the field and his work speaks for itself.

Miss Young is at present hard at work looking over plans for interiors, choosing players for the cast and selecting her gowns, which are scheduled to be exceedingly beautiful. The story is one of high social life and deals with the marital entanglements of a fascinating widow and a typical Elinor Glyn hero. Endless complications mark the unfolding of the tale, and Miss Young has a role dramatic and romantic as well.

ANOTHER THOMPSON AND MONTAGNE SERIAL.

This week Edward J. Montagne and Garfield Thompson completed the picturization of "The Woman in the Web," another big Vitagraph serial, from the pen of Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. It is Mr. Smith's intention to have two serial companies at work in the West all the time. William Duncan is at present completing "Vengeance and the Woman," while David Smith has already started production on "The Woman in the Web." Because of their excellent scenarios of "The Fighting Trail" Messrs. Montagne and Thompson were assigned to do the picturization of "The Vengeance of the Woman."

Margarita Fischer Heads Mutual

Will Appear in "Jilted Janet," a Comedy by Elizabeth Mahoney—A Billy Rhodes Comedy Also on List for Week of February 11.

MARGARITA FISCHER in "Jilted Janet" tops the Mutual schedule of releases for the week of February 11. The production was made by the American Film Company, Inc., under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham from the scenario by Elizabeth Mahoney, the author of the quaintly original Fischer success, "Molly-Go-Get-'Em."

"Jilted Janet" is a sparkling comedy in which the vivacious little star scintillates in some bright action. The story is that of a young girl in moderate circumstances, Janet Barnes, who has been jilted by a "candidly mercenary" young man who frankly confesses that love in a cottage is not his forte. In a spirit of mischief, Janet sends him a postal of a magnificent mansion belonging to her neighbor, asking him how he liked her new home. When he writes that he and his wife will visit her on their honeymoon she borrows the house from the caretakers during the real owner's absence, and entertains her former suitor and his wife in regal fashion.

Graham, the owner, a young chap with a keen sense of humor, unexpectedly returns, and assumes the position of butler in his own menage, his identity being unknown to Janet. The jilter, impressed with Janet's apparent wealth, attempts to renew his love-making to Janet, but is promptly dumped into an artificial lake by Janet, and leaves in disgust.

When Janet discovers that her butler, who has been her faithful ally in carrying out the deception, is the real owner of the establishment she believes that the joke is really on her, until Graham condemns her to life imprisonment in the mansion as his wife, and the denouement is satisfactory to the conspirators.

"Three Times and Out" is the title of the Strand comedy starring Billie Rhodes, which is released February 12.

Billie and her sweetheart have a lover's quarrel, and he refuses to take her home from a dance when she flirts with other men, and she is compelled to accept the escort of the butler. On the way she is insulted by a drunken man, and is saved by a chivalrous mechanic, who beats up the drunk and escorts her home. When her sweetheart attempts a reconciliation the mechanic beats him up under the impression that he is a stranger. Billie forgives her battered lover, and heals his bruised body and affections.

The Mutual Weekly, released February 11, is replete with interesting topics. War pictures, pictures showing the effects of the blizzard which recently swept the country, and the results of the fuel conservation order make this issue one of the best weeklies issued. Comments from enthusiastic exhibitors commend the weekly for its timeliness and interesting subject matter.

WHAT EASTERN FOX PLAYERS ARE DOING.

June Caprice has begun work on a William Fox production which bears the working title of "When All's Fair." The picture is being made at the new Fox studio, formerly the Victor, Forty-third street and Twelfth avenue, New York. The story was written by Stephen Fox, a well known magazine writer, and the work is under the direction of Harry Millarde.

Miss Caprice's company includes Bernard Thornton, Pell Trenton, Lola May, and Charles Gotthold. Part of the scenes of the production are laid in the South, and it is expected that the company will leave within a few days to take these.

Peggy Hyland, the new Fox star, who has been in New Orleans for several weeks working under the direction of Oscar A. C. Lund, has returned to New York, and the company is now completing "The Debt of Honor" at the Fort Lee studios.

The only other Fox company working at the New Jersey studios is the one headed by Virginia Pearson, which is making a picture dealing wholly with a situation developing on the French front during the present war. Miss Theda Bara, who has been in the East for several weeks, now is on her way to Hollywood, Cal., and William Farnum is taking snowstorm scenes for "Rough and Ready" at Port Henry, N. Y.

"ADAM AND SOME EVES," VICTOR MOORE COMEDY.

Victor Moore has an enviable role in the Klever Comedy released by Paramount on February 11. It is entitled "Adam and Some Eves," and Moore is the only male appearing in the production, which includes in the cast Peggy Adams, Agnes Neilsen, and a bevy of other pretty girls.

While riding in his "flying flivver," Adam has a collision with a cloud, and tumbles to earth, landing in a town known as Feminineville, which is inhabited exclusively by women, and where no man is allowed to enter. The intruder is promptly arrested by policewomen, and tried by a petticoated jury, before a feminine judge. During the trial the hatred of the women for all mankind is made apparent to the luckless Adam, but they take advantage of every opportunity to secretly exercise their vampire proclivities.

Adam manages to make his escape, and the whole town turns out to pursue the fugitive. In the meantime, Adam's sweetheart has heard of his dilemma, and rushes to Feminineville in her automobile, dashing through the gates as the mob of women have surrounded him. Eluding their clutching fingers, Adam makes a flying leap into the car, and is saved.

Record for O. Henry Stories

Subjects Already Completed or Under Way Bring Total to Fifty.

A RECORD is being established for the Broadway Star Feature O. Henry stories, according to General Film Company in announcing the approach of the first anniversary of their production. Stories now completed or under way at the Brooklyn and Los Angeles studios will increase the total number of O. Henry pictures released to fifty, or about one-fifth of the number of short stories written by the great humorist during his eight-year stay in New York City. Inasmuch as present production plans call for many more of these inimitable screen stories, this record of production of one author's works in picture form is not likely to be overtaken. The O. Henry books have proved a real treasure house of admirable screen plots.

The filming of the O. Henry classics was begun last March. The first anniversary will be observed by the release of several of the richest and best-known stories in which such O. Henry stars as Patsy Deforrest and Adele De Garde will be featured. During the twelve-month period which will close soon seven of the O. Henry stories have been released in four-reel form and the others as two-reel subjects.

"HEART OF THE SUNSET" IS BORDER STORY.

"Heart of the Sunset," made from the Rex Beach novel of that name for distribution by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation as a special, is a gripping love story of life in the untrammeled country of the border between Texas and Mexico, where human life, if it stands in the way of the execution of purposes, fair or false, is extinguished by the means within easiest reach—usually a rifle or revolver. It may be guessed, therefore, that since the story does not deal with pink teas, there is little of the wishy-washy about it. It is a shoot-and-stand-your-ground story such as Rex Beach knows well how to write.

There are countless complicating incidents, some thrilling, not a few humorous, not the least of which is a visualization of the famous Guzman incident which came closer to sending the United States to war on Mexico than any other single outrage of the revolutionists. "Heart of the Sunset" is, in fact, based in many particulars on historic incidents of the troublous times Americans have not forgotten even in the face of a world war.

ACTIVITIES OF THE INCE PLAYERS.

The William S. Hart players have returned to the Los Angeles studios from Chatsworth Park, where exteriors for an Ince production for Artcraft, following "Blue Blazes Rawden," were filmed.

A new Dorothy Dalton vehicle to follow "Love Me" has just been commenced.

Activities on Charles Ray's sixth Paramount picture have just been commenced. The picture is as yet unnamed, but it is announced that Doris Lee is again playing opposite him. The cast includes Melbourne MacDowell and Billy Elmer. Victor Schertzinger is directing.

Enid Bennett's newest vehicle, "Naughty, Naughty!" produced by Thomas H. Ince, directed by Jerome Storm, and scheduled for release after "The Keys of the Righteous," is rapidly progressing. Earl Rodney plays opposite the star, others in the cast including Gloria Hope and Andrew Arbuckle. The picture is by C. Gardner Sullivan and is pure comedy.

SOCIALISM THEME OF "THE ANSWER."

Millions of people have riveted their attention on Socialism. Socialists in Europe hold the center of the stage. The question is one that is profoundly agitating the masses. "What is Socialism, and what does it stand for?" is a question on a great many tongues.

Triangle has produced a photoplay of power and interest in "The Answer," which portrays a socialistic orator in the slums of the east side. This picture will unquestionably arouse considerable discussion and comment in all quarters. It paints the efforts of a young man of the slums to arouse the masses to action, his success in attracting converts, the inheritance of a gigantic fortune, and the influence his money has on the character of one whom he has won to his banner.

Joe King has the part of John Warfield, socialist; Alma Rubens is seen in the leading feminine role, and in the support are Claire Anderson, Francis McDonald, and Jean Hersholt.

TWO CIVIL WAR VETERANS IN "HER BOY."

Two Civil War veterans who played with Edwin Booth at Ford's theater in Washington, D. C., at the time that President Lincoln was assassinated, are members of the cast of the Metro patriotic production, "Her Boy," in which Effie Shannon and Niles Welch are co-starred. Both of these veterans, J. C. Bates and S. McAlpin, were actors before and after the Civil War, having returned to the stage in 1863 after being wounded in battle. In this picture they both play themselves, as they represent Civil War veterans who heard the declaration of war by the United States on Germany and are again fired with the old spirit of patriotism that stirred them to duty in the days of '61.

February a Busy Month for Paramount

Seven Large Subjects, Two Klevers, Four Pictographs and Four Travelogues a Part of the Program.

WITH the appearance of a new month on the calendar, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation finds its Paramount releases for February completed well in advance. All offerings for this month under this trade mark have been finished, excepting the last release, production of which is now rapidly drawing to a close.

Seven big attractions will be released during the short month exclusive of the short subjects, representing an output of four pictures from the Famous Players-Lasky Western studios, two from the Ince organization, and one from the Famous Players-Lasky Eastern studio.

The initial releases are three productions on February 4, viz., Dorothy Dalton in a new Ince subject, "Flare-Up Sal," by J. G. Hawks; Pauline Frederick in "Madame Jealousy," by George V. Hobart, and staged by Robert Vignola from the scenario by Eve Unsell; Vivian Martin in "A Petticoat Pilot," from the novel, "Mary 'Gusta," by Joseph C. Lincoln, and staged by Rollin Sturgeon from the scenario by Gardner Hunting.

On February 11 one Paramount picture will be released, Wallace Reid and Kathlyn Williams in "The Things We Love," by Harvey Thew. Two subjects are now ready for February 18 release. They are Enid Bennett in an Ince production, "The Keys of the Righteous," by C. Gardner Sullivan, and directed by Jerome Storm, and Sessue Hayakawa in "Hidden Pearls," by Beulah Marie Dix, directed by George H. Melford.

The last offering of the month is the new George Beban vehicle, "One More American." This picture is taken from William C. DeMille's well known stage piece, and is being produced by him from the scenario by Olga Printzlau. It is scheduled for release on the 25th.

In addition to the above, Paramount short releases for February are now ready, including two Klever Komedies, four Bray Pictographs, four Burton Holmes Travelogues, two Mack Sennett comedies, the final installment of the serial, "Who Is Number One?" and the three initial installments of Benjamin Chapin's "The Son of Democracy."

CHANGE OF TITLE FOR RUSSELL PLAY.

The latest Russell picture, released as an American-Mutual production, has been changed from "Polo Jack" to "The Midnight Trail." It is a mystery picture with a most unexpected comedy atmosphere.

EDITH STOREY SUBJECT RELEASED FEBRUARY 25.

Plenty of Western atmosphere is provided in "Revenge," the Metro picturization of Edward Moffat's story, "Hearts Steadfast," starring Edith Storey, which will be released on February 25 as a Metro All-Star Series picture. In "Revenge" the athletic star returns to the "Western" type of role in which she first became famous as a star of the first rank. She is seen to excellent advantage in her favorite kind of role.

"Revenge" was prepared for the screen by H. P. Keeler and William Parker, and was directed by Tod Browning. It is a drama of the desert. Some of its most important scenes are laid in Death Valley. The importance of a plentiful supply of water in crossing the desert is made clear by some highly dramatic scenes.

A strong cast supports Miss Storey in this unusually vital drama of the West. Heading the cast is Wheeler Oakman, who plays opposite the star. Another well known player supporting Miss Storey is Ralph Lewis, who is best remembered for his work in "The Birth of a Nation." Albertina Ballard appears as Tiger Lil.

"JACK SPURLOCK, PRODIGAL" (Fox).

"Mike" Donlin, formerly a member of the New York Giants, and Jack Goodman, at one time a leading lightweight boxer, are members of the cast of "Jack Spurlock, Prodigal," the Fox Special Feature which is to be released February 10. It is this George Walsh picture which William Fox has advertised as having been made exclusively for exhibitors under contract to show his fifty-two-a-year productions.

The story is that of the son of a millionaire who is expelled from college, and who, thereafter, as a result of trying to be a business man, keeps his father in hot water. Finally, however, he stumbles on to an opportunity to unload a large quantity of onions which the head of the family has accumulated. There is, of course, a love story involved; also a bear, the latter proving to be a real villain in that it upsets Jack's matrimonial prospects.

The plot was taken from a book of the same name, of which George Horace Lorimer is the author. The novel was adapted for filming by Ralph Spence, and the production was made under the direction of Carl Harbaugh, who has had charge of most of the comedy work done by Fox organizations in the East. Two months were required for the filming. The cast, besides those mentioned, includes Dan Mason, Ruth Taylor, and Robert Vivian. The picture, it is announced, is not available to exhibitors other than those holding contracts for Special Features.

GAUMONT NEWS SERVICE COVERS THE WORLD.

How the Gaumont News Service covers the world in picturing news topics of more than passing interest is interestingly shown in No. 6 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, which is scheduled for release on Sunday, February 3. In the thousand feet of film which make up this news reel fourteen news subjects from both hemispheres are illustrated with hundreds of beautifully photographed scenes. To witness an issue of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly is like having the happenings of the world visualized as you read the headlines of your daily paper.

Among the most important of the subjects shown in this number are the capture of Jerusalem, with scenes of the French troops commanded by Col. Piepape entering the "Holy City"; the work of the Italian army and the Alpine Chasseurs, who are beating back the Hun invaders in Northern Italy; the maneuvers of the Mikado's fleet, which is now co-operating with other warcraft of the Allies in destroying the German submarines; the launching of one of our new steel ships built in the record time of sixty days; the opening to traffic after many long delays and costly disasters of the famous Quebec bridge, and the adoption of the latest methods in removing some of the heavy snowfall which has blanketed a great part of the United States during the past six weeks.

MAY ALLISON TO BE STARRED IN OWN RIGHT.

Manuscripts for May Allison are pouring in at the Metro studio, 3 West Sixty-first street, New York, and from among them Miss Allison hopes to find one suitable for her first Metro offering as a star. Rumors have been persistent that Miss Allison would go back to Metro as the co-star of Harold Lockwood, with whom she was formerly starred in Metro productions, but instead she will return as a star on her own account.

Miss Allison has been "vacationing" for several months following the production of a series of Metro pictures on the Pacific Coast, with Harold Lockwood as co-star. Several offers have been made her to return to musical comedy in which she first attracted public attention, and comedy-drama was also considered, but the offer to return to her old firm, among her old associates, was too attractive to be refused.

Pathe Program

Million Dollar Russian Star and Comedies Predominate in Pathe Releases for Week of February 17.

THE Pathe program for the week of Feb. 17 is interesting, since it contains Ivan Mozukin, the great Russian star, who is reported to have been offered $1,000,000 for a year's work in an American studio; Doris Kenyon, in a serial chapter; Ruth Roland, in a two-reel series drama; Harold Lloyd, in a one-reel comedy; Toto, in a two-reel comedy, and various short-reel features, including the Hearst-Pathe News.

Ivan Mozukin appears in "The Inner Voice," a Russian Art Film in five reels, produced by the Russian Art Film Corporation. It is a most remarkable feature, affording him a role which calls for his characterization of a man at three distinct periods of his life—youth, middle age and old age. The picture deals with the "Voice of Conscience" and shows how a man who has apparently succeeded in life is brought to the knowledge of his complete failure through the instrument of something inside him that shows him that unscrupulous action and inconsideration for others do not pay.

Doris Kenyon stars in the 13th episode of "The Hidden Hand," with Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton, a two-reel serial episode produced by Pathe. Snappy action marks this chapter. Doris Whitney and Jack Ramsey have been lured to the boarding house in which Verda Crane is reported to have committed suicide. The "Hidden Hand," aided by Yoga Rahnee, a medium, captures Doris and plans to sacrifice her to the Sacred Tiger, which Rahnee's Hindu followers worship. As Ramsey with his men start to rescue her, a powerful acid is eating in the ringbolt which restrains the tiger, while Doris cowers back in fear, awaiting the end.

Ruth Roland stars in the fifth drama of the series known by the general title, "The Price of Folly." This one is called "Sold for Gold" with Frank Mayo. A woman's desire for social standing and a man's greed for wealth form the interesting theme about which has been woven this strong two-reel drama. In it an ambitious mother marries her daughter to the son of an equally ambitious man. The boy is a scoundrel. The result, after a series of dramatic incidents, is the violent death of the husband and the suicide of the wife.

Harold Lloyd is seen in "Hit Him Again," a one-reel comedy, produced by Rolin. This is an hilarious comedy, in which Child Harold is matched with Boiler-Nose Bill, the heavyweight champion, in a finish fight, straight Marquis of Gooseberry rules, no fighting or shooting. Object matrimony with a daughter of a wealthy gentleman who wants a fighter in the family.

Toto stars in a two-reel comedy, called "The Junk Man," the second of his remarkable bombshells of joy, produced by Rolin. In this picture Toto is introduced in a unique role. He officiates as general helper on a junk wagon, driven by our old friend Bud Jamison, the fierce-looking black mustached heavyweight who did such good work in the "Luke" comedies.

Toto does not imitate. Famed as a pantomimist through a successful career on the stage, he brings to the screen many new ideas of "business." Briefly, the story of "The Junk Man" deals with the method in which he assists a fair young lady to escape from her home in order to keep from marrying a foreign nobleman who is odious to her.

"Along the Riviera, Italy," a Pathe colored travel, and "Watching Flowers Bloom," Pathe colored, form an interesting split reel. There is also an International cartoon and split-reel and Hearst-Pathe News No. 16 and 17 on this program.

"THE NAULAHKA," A SIX-PART PATHE PLAY.

Pathe maintains, with reason, that in Kipling's "The Naulahka" it offers to exhibitors one of the costliest pictures ever placed upon a program by any concern. Over $100,000 was spent in the production of this picture, and this large expenditure is apparent to all who see it. The sets are on a scale such as has been rarely attempted. Many hundreds of extras were employed. It was necessary to use elephants, camels, leopards, and other animals native to India. Whole villages were constructed, and to get the proper locations it was found desirable to transport large companies long distances. It is said that places in five states were used in the making of the picture. It had been originally intended to put it out as a special feature, but J. A. Berst determined to place it upon the Pathe Plays program in order to assure exhibitors of his intention to give them the best and costliest productions on that program.

Originally produced as an eight-reel feature, and so announced, it has been decided to put it out in six parts, this decision having been made because it is recognized that six reels is a better size for the exhibitor than the longer length.

GOOD CAST FOR "WEAVER OF DREAMS."

Viola Dana, star of the forthcoming Metro picturization of Myrtle Reed's novel, "Weaver of Dreams," is supported by a capable cast in this All-Star Series production, which is being produced at the Metro West Coast studio at Hollywood, under the direction of John H. Collins. Clifford Bruce is Dr. Carter Keith, Russell Simpson plays Martin Chandler, Vera Lewis is "Aunt" Hattie Taylor, Cora Drew is Cynthia Bancroft, Mildred Davis is cast as Margery Gordon.

Pathe Activity at Coast Studio

Washburn at Work, Keenan Arrives, Bessie Love on Way, Fannie Ward Will Soon Leave.

A GREAT activity prevails at the Paralta Studio, Los Angeles, where, according to the recently announced arrangement for the production of Pathe Plays, work is already in full swing.

Bryant Washburn is appearing in another very strong story, by George Randolph Chester, and from advance accounts of all who have seen it, it will prove an ideal vehicle for him.

So successful was the combination of Frank Keenan and Ernest C. Warde, as star and director on the first picture they did together, that it is announced that they have already gone West, arriving at the Paralta studio this week, ready to begin work on a picture, the announcement of which in the near future is expected to create something of a sensation.

Bessie Love has returned to New York from a trip South and has left for Los Angeles, where she will begin work in a picture by the well-known magazine writer, William Addison Lathrop, and Fannie Ward, whose personal triumph in "Innocent" is general gossip along Broadway, will soon be on her way across the continent.

Further interest centers in the announcement that William Duncan, fresh from recent successes and engaged by Pathe for the production of something new in Pathe serials, will also shortly start work at the Paralta studio.

Reports from the Coast are that Mr. J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, carefully investigated every plant in the vicinity of Los Angeles before deciding upon Paralta as that in which he wanted Pathe's Western activities to center. The splendid equipment of this studio, coupled with Pathe's much-discussed plans for big pictures in 1918, should mean results in line with the company's policy of releasing a steady supply of strong box office attractions.

The various officials of Paralta are well known in the industry, and in each case have been connected with the bigger ideas that have meant progress.

The announcement that Jack Cunningham has been appointed to handle Pathe's Western interests serves to mark the rise of a very clever man who in a few years has attained this position after experiencing in practically every line of the business preceded by long contract with big city newspapers. Cunningham was one of the best men in the old Triangle line-up and big results are expected from his administration of Pathe's Western affairs under the supervision of Mr. Berst at the Eastern executive offices.

TECHNICAL DEPARTMENT OF AMERICAN FILM AT FULL SPEED.

The temporary depression in the motion picture industry has not affected the studios at Santa Barbara. Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the company, who invariably keeps a level head and maintains a conservative grip on motion picture affairs at all times, has ordered that work be speeded up rather than cut down and that the technical department, for which the Santa Barbara studio is famous, keep right on planning and creating for the wonderful photographic effects for which this company has won warm and sincere praise from critics.

MARY MILES MINTER STARTS NEW PICTURE.

"A Bit of Jade" is the working title of Mary Miles Minter's new play for the American Film Company, Inc., in which she occupies a position of mystery connected with a wonderful green jade necklace, supposed to have been solen from a Hindu goddess.

Miss Minter is intensely absorbed in her new play, as it opens up a bit of Oriental lore in which she always taken a vivid interest. She has been studying Hindu poetry and folk legend industriously, and her gowns in the forthcoming play will have something to absorb audiences who have heretofore seen her only in the simple costumes of the ingenue.

"THE LANDLOPER" FOR HAROLD LOCKWOOD.

The photoplay rights to Holman Day's widely read novel, "The Landloper," have been acquired by Metro, it is announced, and the story will be utilized in the making of a new Metro All Star Series Production with Harold Lockwood as the star.

"The Landloper" is a colorful romantic drama and in it Mr. Lockwood plays the role of a picturesque wandering philosopher whose identity is a mystery beyond his name—Walker Farr. The production will be made in Florida, where Mr. Lockwood and his staff have moved for the winter months. George Irving, who has just joined the Lockwood company as alternate director with Fred J. Balshofer, will direct it.

ESSANAY HAS SOMETHING NEW IN SLAPSTICK.

Essanay's General Film comedy, "Our Little Nell," affords something new in slap-stick, real Western melodrama burlesque. Rich in satire, this tells the thrilling story of how "Little Nell," tipping the scales at a good two hundred pounds, helps to capture the terrible villain of "Dead Man's Gulch."

Mix Leads Fox's March Specials

Other Players Featured in the Month Are Peggy Hyland, Virginia Pearson and George Walsh.

ANNOUNCEMENT of a tentative March schedule for his Special Features has just been made by William Fox, and shows Peggy Hyland, Virginia Pearson, George Walsh, and Tom Mix as the stars to be featured. In addition there will be one picture by an all-star cast.

"Six-Shooter Andy," in which, of course, Mix is the star, will open the month's releases. The star is supported by Enid Markey, Georgie Stone, Virginia Corbin, Buddie Messinger, and Violet Radcliffe. March 3 is the release date.

Peggy Hyland, who joined the Fox forces just before the first of January, is to make her debut as a star with this organization in "The Debt of Honor," which will be released March 10.

"Woman and the Law," made under the direction of R. A. Walsh, is to be released March 17. It has an all-star cast, and will be strongly featured.

Virginia Pearson, who has been resting for several weeks, now is working on a production called "A Daughter of France," and is scheduled to be at the disposal of exhibitors on March 24. A director new to the Fox organization, Edmund Lawrence, is in charge of making the picture, which deals with a situation developing in the present war on the Franco-Belgian front.

The contribution of George Walsh to the March releases will be made on the 31st under the title, "The Kid Is Clever."

EDITH STOREY MAKING WESTERN FOR METRO.

Edith Storey, who recently made her bow as a Metro star in "The Eyes of Mystery," has begun work in a picturization of "The Claim," the Broadway play written by Charles Kenyon and Frank Dare. June Mathis and Leighton Osmun adapted the play for the screen, and it is being directed by Frank Reicher at the Metro West Coast studio at Hollywood.

Miss Storey plays the role of Belle Jones, a dance hall singer and dancer, in this comedy-drama, with Western mining camp and dance hall atmosphere. In contrast to her previous Western roles this part is a straight dramatic one, affording the Metro star opportunities for strong emotional acting, but no riding or athletic stunts.

The players who have been engaged to support Miss Storey are Wheeler Oakman, Mignon Anderson, Marion Skinner, Paul Wiegel, and Fred Malatesta. William C. Thompson is photographing the picture.

DON BARCLAY AT WORK FOR ESSANAY.

Don Barclay, one of the funniest of comedians in "Ziegfeld Follies," is now at work in the Essanay studios on a comedy for release through General Film. Mr. Barclay imitates no one in his characterizations, as in his career he has evolved a number of rare get-ups all his own.

Through Mr. Barclay's wealth of original ideas and ludicrous "business," Arthur Hotaling, his director, is interpolating much new pantomime into these comedies. And Barcley has a wealth of spontaneous wit that will prove to be admirable screen comedy material.

Essanay's General Film comedy release for Feb. 2 is "A Tough Knight," depicting the difficulties of an artist's model in armor, pursuing the girl he loves. The release for Feb. 9 is "Our Little Nell," something original in Western burlesque comedy.

Essanay's scenic release for Feb. 2 is "The Grand Canyon of Arizona and Canyon de Chelly." Some splendid new views of these Western natural beauty spots are afforded.

BADGER NOW GOLDWYN DIRECTOR.

Clarence G. Badger, writer and director, has been brought from the Pacific Coast by Goldwyn to direct Mabel Normand in her second Goldwyn production. The play, as yet unnamed, gives Miss Normand a role totally different from any she has ever essayed. She will be a newspaper "copy girl."

Mr. Badger's long experience as a newspaper worker should stand him in good stead in the direction of a newspaper story. Besides a long term with Keystone, Mr. Badger has served on the staff of Lubin and Universal.

Mr. Badger is now at work in the Goldwyn Fort Lee studios, the Mabel Normand production being well under way. As in "Dodging a Million," Miss Normand's first Goldwyn starring medium, Tom Moore will be her leading man.

Other players who will be seen are Charlotte Granville, Helen Dahl, Willard Dashiell, Lincoln Plumer, Wallace McCutcheon and Louis R. Grisel.

GIBLYN DIRECTING ALICE BRADY.

Charles Giblyn has been chosen to direct Alice Brady in her next Select production, at present called "Ruthless Russia." Mr. Giblyn has just completed a picture with Ann Pennington, and prior to that directed Constance Talmadge in three Select subjects. He is a director of the first order and brings to his work experience, intelligence and a rare sense of artistic values.

Production on the play has been started at the Fifty-sixth street studios. Miss Brady is again supported by Frank Morgan. Charles Francis, Harry Southard and Russell Bassett have been assigned to important roles.

"FOR HUSBANDS ONLY" IS NEW LOIS WEBER FILM.

After spending more than a month in carefully working out the details of the production, Miss Lois Weber started last week on the staging of a new six-reel photoplay. The story is being filmed under the tentative title, "For Husband's Only," and it may be said with safety that it will prove to be the cleverest and most fascinating subject Miss Weber's studio has yet produced. The famous woman director who evolved the drama from an idea embodied in a story by G. B. Stern is responsible for a number of ingenious twists which are certain to startle and delight those theatergoers who are found of novelty.

Mildred Harris is the star of "For Husband's Only." Lewis J. Cody has the principal male role. Other players who enact prominent parts are Miss Kathleen Kirkham and Fred Goodwins. A feature of Miss Weber's new production will be the appearance in many of the scenes of the Denishawn dancers, the advanced pupils of Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn.

MARIE WALCAMP SERIAL NOW "THE LION'S CLAWS."

Contrary to previou reports which have been issued by Universal's West Coast organization the newest serial featuring Marie Walcamp will not be known as "The Leopard's Claws." Instead, this serial has been renamed "The Lion's Claws." As now constituted, the cast for "The Lion's Claws" includes Marie Walcamp, Gertrude Aster, Thomas Lingham, Alfred Allen, Edwin August, Leonard Clapham, Harry von Meter, Frank Lanning, Rex Roselli, Ray Hanford, and several others of equal prominence.

MISS PICKFORD A YEAR IN CALIFORNIA.

St. Valentine's Day will mark the completion of Mary Pickford's first "solid" year at the Lasky studio in Hollywood. In the year just ending she has done six photoplays for Artcraft release, signalizing her most perfect work.

The first picture made in Southern California was "A Romance of the Redwoods," directed by Cecil B. DeMille. The others are "The Little American," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "The Little Princess," "Stella Maris," and "Amarilly of Clothes-Line Alley."

"THE MOMENT OF VICTORY" (Broadway Star).

"The Moment of Victory," an intensely appealing story of the Spanish-American War and a lovelorn youth who dared much in order that he might make the proper retort to a young girl's taunt, is the current release in the Broadway Star Feature series. This is one of the most dramatic of the two score O. Henry pictures released to date, and is replete with heart-interest material. Patricia Palmer, Chet Ryan and W. L. Rodgers are the leads.

Following this wonderfully human tale will come "The Trimmed Lamp," a colorful drama of New York life.

STRONG CAST FOR "THE GUILTY MAN."

The cast of "The Guilty Man," the Paramount special release, includes an array of well known players. The photoplay is an adaptation from A. H. Woods' sensational Broadway success, written by Charles Klein, and directed by Irvin V. Willat under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. In the cast are Gloria Hope, Vivian Reed, William Garwood, J. P. Lockney, Charles French, Hal Cooley, John Steppling, and Hayward Mack.

"The Guilty Man" borders on melodrama, and was adapted to the stage from the story by Francois Coppe.

SELBURN TO RELEASE "HIS COLLEGE PROXY."

"His College Proxy," the fourth Selburn comedy, in which Neal Burns and Gertrude Selby are starred, is the forthcoming release in the series of comedies being distributed by General Film Company. It is a sprightly and refreshing subject. Highly amusing complications ensue when Neal persuades the chauffeur to take his place in college while he accepts a position as butler in order that he may be near Gertrude. Neal's proxy proves too good a spender and both masqueraders are exposed.

"THE BLUE BIRD" ABOUT FINISHED.

The finishing touches are being placed on "The Blue Bird," the big Maeterlinck spectacle produced by Maurice Tourneur for Artcraft release. The cutting of the negative for this picture has been a delicate undertaking owing to the numerous multiple exposures. Considerable attention has also been given to the titles, which have been drawn to harmonize with the artistic character of the subject. The picture will be seven or eight reels in length when released.

SENNETT MAKING "IT PAYS TO EXERCISE."

The Paramount Mack Sennett comedy, "It Pays to Exercise," will be released February 24 following "Watch Your Neighbor." It is a typical Mack Sennett comedy, with an all-star cast, including Chester Conklin, Alice Maison, Harry Booker, Eva Thatcher, and Slim Summerville. Richard Jones directed the production.

GENERAL IN IMPRESSIVE NEW HOME.

After a period of transition during which its office force was divided between the old quarters on Fourth avenue and the new, General Film Company's executive force is now comfortably settled in the commodious and modern offices on the seventeenth floor of the Berkeley building, at 25 West Forty-fourth street, just off Fifth avenue. As a result of its move General Film is now located near the heart of the motion picture district of New York City, a convenience which adds considerably to the efficiency of the headquarters staff.

General Film Building.

Ample accommodations have been provided for the executive officers, board of directors, auditing department, general sales department, legal, publicity and accounting departments. The modern office plan is in use throughout, partitions having been eliminated for the sake of better lighting and ventilation. The only feature of the old quarters missing in the new is the projection room, which has been shifted to the branch exchange at 71 West Twenty-third street, for the present.

VIOLA DANA BEGINS WORK ON "BREAKERS AHEAD."

Viola Dana and her supporting company at Metro's West Coast studio in Hollywood, Cal., have placed in preparation "Breakers Ahead," a forthcoming five-act Metro production which will be presented by B. A. Rolfe. Charles J. Brabin is directing Miss Dana in "Breakers Ahead," which has been written by himself in collaboration with H. P. Keeler. John Arnold, as usual, is handling the photography of the Dana picture. John H. Collins, having completed the direction of "Weaver of Dreams," is preparing the scenario of the picture in which Miss Dana will appear following "Breakers Ahead."

"Breakers Ahead," as its name implies, is a story of the sea coast and seafaring people. Miss Dana has the part of Ruth Bowman, a child left motherless. As she grows to young girlhood she has the devotion of Eric Piley, a youth she has known all her life. Events of tragic importance, beyond the girl's control, call for great emotional ability on the part of the little star.

One of the quaint characters in "Breakers Ahead" is "Cap'n" Jabez Scudd, played by that sterling actor Russell Simpson. There are scenes of great interest on board his ship, "The Wasp," around which much of the story's vital action centers.

Playing opposite Miss Dana in "Breakers Ahead" is Clifford Bruce. Other well known players in the cast of "Breakers Ahead" besides those already mentioned are T. H. Gibson-Gowland, Mabel Van Buren and Eugene Pallette.

COMING STANDARD PICTURES NAMED.

The next production in which Jane and Katherine Lee, the Fox "Baby Grands," will be seen has just been titled "American Buds." As in the case of "Troublemakers," it will be released as one of the Standard Pictures, the date set being February 24. Announcement also was made from the Fox offices during the week of the dates of release of three other Standard Pictures.

The new releases announced were for March 10 and April 7 and 21. The first of these will be a production directed by Frank Lloyd, presented by an all-star cast, and of which present-day divorce system evils are the subject. The release of March 24, as previously announced, is to be "Rough and Ready," a William Farnum de luxe production.

The April Standard Pictures, so far as determined, include "The Soul of Buddha," a Theda Bara super-production, and one entitled "Queen of the Sea," featuring Annette Kellermann.

INTERESTING LOCATIONS IN "PAY DAY."

Metro's screen version of "Pay Day," the first five-act production starring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, creators of Metro-Drew comedies, will show some especially interesting scenes. Mr. and Mrs. Drew were able to secure "locations" not ordinarily seen in motion pictures owing to the vital interest in their work and personality taken by people not as a rule in touch with motion picture life.

Many of the most important scenes in "Pay Day" were taken in the home of State Senator T. Douglas Robinson. The marble stairway of the St. George Hotel in Brooklyn is shown in some of the "shots." The Raymond Street jail was the "location" chosen for the courtroom scene. "Up the river" prison scenes were taken at Blackwell's Island.

OLLIE COOPER MAKING SCREEN DEBUT.

Ollie Cooper, a favorite stage ingenue, will make her screen debut with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in Metro's forthcoming All-Star Series production, "The Brass Check." She has the part of Norma Glanor in "The Brass Check," which has been picturized from George Allen England's magazine story.

Ollie Cooper comes of distinguished theatrical stock. Her mother was Georgie Woodthorpe, at one time leading woman for Edwin Booth at the Baldwin theater in San Francisco. Her father was Fred A. Cooper, one of the best known minstrel men of his day, who became a manager of the theaters he built and conducted along the Pacific Coast. One of these was the Burbank in Los Angeles, now owned by Oliver Morosco.

"TEXAS" COOPER HEADS "GERMAN" LANCERS.

The success of the sensational riding scenes showing the onrush of the "German" lancers through the little French village of Rosessur-Meuse in Metro's great screen spectacle, "Lest We Forget," starring Rita Jolivet, was under the direction of "Texas" Cooper, a genuine Western cowpuncher, who played the role of captain of the troop.

Cooper was engaged to manage the riding scenes and cavalry charges for the spectacular episodes in "Lest We Forget," because of his reputation as an expert horseman and exhibition rider. Due to his wide acquaintance among Western riders whom he knew back home and met while in the show business he was able to corral a big aggregation of Western cowpunchers to portray the "German" lancers.

WALSH WORKING ON MURDER STORY.

The mystery surrounding the whereabounts of R. A. Walsh, William Fox director, has been partially cleared up by his reappearance recently in New York City. He reports that he has been working on a new dramatic production based on a recent famous murder case, and has been so engaged, practically uninterruptedly, since the completion, early in December, of "The Pride of New York," in which he directed his brother, George. Most of the scenes in the production are said to have been taken on "foreign soil." The picture is to be released about the middle of March, probably, and will be called "Woman and the Law," although the title has not been definitely determined.

DRAGOUT FIGHT IN "BELOVED TRAITOR."

A real, knockdown and dragout fight—the sort of battle that makes film fans sit up and gasp, is soon to be seen in a Goldwyn Picture. The drama of the screen demands strong physical conflict at times, and when the producer is fortunate enough to get rights to a novel like Frank L Packard's "The Beloved Traitor," in which Mae Marsh stars, he "goes to it."

The fight has a logical place in the play. It is not dragged in merely to exploit the prowess of the actors involved, nor to give an imaginary "punch" to the story as a whole. It means something.

ANOTHER FINN & HADDIE.

"Her Fatal Shot," the fifth of the new series of Jaxon comedies being released by General Film Company, presents the comedy team of Finn & Haddie in new funmaking roles.

YORKE-METRO COMPANY GOES SOUTH FOR WINTER.

The Yorke Film Corporation, which produces the Harold Lockwood features for the Metro, has abandoned New York as its producing headquarters and has moved to Jacksonville, Florida, where the company will remain for the rest of the winter season. The move was made because the next Lockwood vehicles require backgrounds which can be better obtained in Florida than anywhere else. Arrangements have been concluded whereby the Yorke-Metro company will occupy the Klutho studio for the making of interior scenes during its stay in Jacksonville.

In the first contingent making the trip were Mr. Lockwood, George Irving, director; Pauline Curley, William Clifford, Bert Starkey, Stanton Heck, Antonio Gaudio, camerman; Harry Cabot, assistant cameraman; William E. Edwards, Jr., assistant director; Frank Champury, technical director; John Schonberger, violinist; Richard V. Spencer, scenario writer, and Harry H. Poppe, publicity representative. Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke Film Corporation, and Wiley J. Gibson, business manager, who remained over in New York in order to wind up some company business matters, will follow.

Contracted to Use Theater Monday---Sues

Club in Boston Rented Theater Before the Fuel Order—Management Cannot Afford to Lose the Monday Show at the Price Agreed On.

By Richard D. Howe, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—The Franklin Park theater, one of the best moving picture houses in residential Boston, has been sued by the Dorchester Catholic Club, to compel it to allow the club its use on Monday, Feb. 11, to stage its annual play.

The contract for the theater was made before the fuel administrator had issued his coal ban, and the enterprising club managers have now printed and sold their tickets. Then came the Monday order, and the Franklin Park theater, with a vision of lost profits if it is not allowed to give its performances on the holiday in question, asked the club to cancel its date and arrange another. Owing to the approach of the Lenten season, the Catholic Club refused to change, and is now bringing an equity action against the theater for the day in question.

Globe Theater's Benefit for Local Hospital.

Clinton, Mass.—The Clinton Hospital Association recently secured a fine fund from a benefit performance given at the Globe theater. The feature pictures included Mollie King in "The Summer Girl," "Italy's Marvelous Cavalry" and a Bray cartoon, "Col. Heza Liar Gets Married." Director Duncan McPherson, of the Globe theater orchestra, arranged a special concert program.

Lynn Theaters Using Wood Fires.

Lynn, Miss.—Theater managers in this city have stopped using coal and are now using wood in their heating plants. The change has been a success, and by the fact that they are not using coal the fuel administrator has allowed the Lynn theaters to open at 2 P. M. and run continuously to 10 P. M. The theater managers had some coal on hand and this they released to the city officials for use in public institutions. The theaters are not allowed to open on Tuesday and Sunday.

Good Business at Castle Square.

Boston.—Manager George E. Clark, of the new Castle Square theater, reports big business at his house since he changed the theater's policy, and is running a high-class moving picture show continuously from 12.30 A. M. to 10 P. M. The tea room, which is an innovation in Boston, is also making a big hit with his lady patrons. Mr. Clark has installed a "Suggestion box" for his patrons, and this contains a number of notes every day. Mr. Clark says he pays careful attention to these suggestions and that a number have proven very valuable for the comfort of his patrons.

Alden F. Washburn in War Service.

Boston.—Alden F. Washburn, manager of the Unique theater, and formerly secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Massachusetts branch, one of the Hub's prominent motion picture exhibitors, has enlisted in the war service of the country. Mr. Washburn is now a time-keeper over two thousand men at the International Shipbuilding Yards, Hog Island, Philadelphia, Pa.

Mr. Washburn, shortly after the United States declared war against Germany, attempted to get into the navy. By reason of a slight physical defect he was rejected. He then tried for enlistment in the army, but was again turned down for the same trouble. Determined upon aiding the Government in one way or another in the successful prosecution of the war, Mr. Washburn secured employment at the shipbuilding yards, where he is now located.

The Unique theater has been placed in the hands of Burt Blaisdell, who has been connected with Mr. Washburn in the Unique for several years. The house is doing a very excellent business under the careful leadership of Mr. Blaisdell.

Banquet of Bay State Film Company.

Sharon, Mass.—A banquet of the Bay State Film Company of Sharon was recently held near New York City. The dinner was given by the stockholders to Chester D. Coram, sales manager of the company, who is considered a real "live-wire."

Mr. Coram was called the "father" of the Bay State Film Company by Toastmaster John J. Grant of Washington, D. C., who also referred to him as a "man who does things and does them now."

Mr. Coram paid high tribute to Chester A. Lord, of Needham, Mass, and Ransom Dederick and Nathan Dederick, for the efficient work they have performed in connection with the operation of the company.

Martine Provinces Letter

By Alice Fairweather, The Standard, St. John, N. B.

False Alarm Makes Flurry.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—A telegram was received by local film managers and exhibitors on Monday, Jan. 28, from Toronto, stating that the Dominion government contemplated closing all theaters for three days each week. A strong protest from the managers was urged.

St. John men to the number of nineteen met in the rooms of the Famous Players and appointed a delegation to go to Ottawa to find out if this was a necessary war measure, and to see if some arrangement could not be made. Messrs. W. H. Golding, of the Imperial; W. C. Smith, of the Empress; G. A. Margetts, of the Canadian Universal, and Robert Romney, of the Vitagraph, were appointed as a delegation to go to Ottawa. F. G. Spencer was also appointed, but was unable to leave St. John at the time.

W. H. Golding and W. C. Smith were asked to arrange some advertising matter for the Ottawa papers, putting forth the great need of amusements at this time of stress, as stated by Hon. Bonar Law last July in England. It was felt that the sudden and drastic order would throw very many out of employment at a time when it would be very difficult for them to obtain work, and that, if the object is to save coal, many of the houses would have to be kept heated anyway in order to be in condition to run three days each week.

A meeting also of the Maritime Exhibitors' League was held in Halifax, and wires were sent to Ottawa and the exhibitors throughout the Provinces communicated with as far as possible.

All are agreed that if it is a necessary war measure it will be complied with, but it must be proved necessary.

The next morning papers printed a despatch from Ottawa stating that no such action had been determined upon.

Edward Bizar on the Job for Metro.

St. John.—Edward Bizar is now manager of the Metro Film exchange in St. John. Last April we were hearing of Mr. Bizar as opening the Strand theater at Passaic, N. J., shortly after establishing the General Film Company's New Jersey branch. Later he opened the Lyceum theater at Paterson, N. J.

Here are some of the places Mr. Bizar booked for Metro specials on his last trip through the territory: The Lyric, Imperial, St. John, Strand, Truro, Gem, Fredericton, and theaters at New Glasgow, N. S.; Campbellton, Amherst, Newcastle, Chatham, Bathurst, Moncton, Charlottetown, Woodstock, besides many towns.

Business Jottings of Interest.

I. Sosskins, of the Famous Players' Toronto office, was in St. John last week.

In Halifax, N. S., Acker's Family theater is being repaired rapidly. The roof is being raised five feet; steel girders are being put in in place of other supports. The contractors are to lose $200 per day if the theater is not ready by March 1.

The Empire theater, Halifax, the last to be repaired, opened Wednesday, Jan. 23. "Idle Wives" will play there for a full week.

In Sydney, N. B., business is exceptionally good for this time of year, it is stated. "The Bull's Eye" is booked in Sydney and the "Red Ace" in Sydney Mines.

The Strand, the new house being built in Sydney for J. M. Franklin of Halifax, is progressing as well as the weather will allow. It will probably be opened May 1.

The "Red Ace" is to follow "The Seven Pearls" at Chatham, Newcastle and Bathurst.

Savoy Theater Made New.

Glace Bay, N. B.—The Savoy theater, at Glace Bay, leased by John Connors, has been made over into a ground floor house. The theater has been reseated with opera chairs and a new stage made. The operating booth has been remodeled and two new Power's 6-B machines installed, motor-driven. A bright new little theater has been fitted up. Mr. Connors has booked "Idle Wives," "The Mystery Ship," "The Bull's Eye" and Bluebird features.

Bridgewater's Empire Theater Playing.

Bridgewater, N. S.—The new Empire theater, of which Messrs. Cragg and Fraser are the owners, opened recently in Bridgewater. The first picture shown was the Pathe "Les Miserables," which is very fine indeed. The managers have contracted for "The Gray Ghost" and for Bluebird features.

Baltimore News Letter

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

Concert at New to Aid Blind School.

BALTIMORE, MD.—To help the campaign to raise $100,000 for the workshop for the blind in Baltimore, Louis A. De Hoff, the energetic manager of the New theater, 210 West Lexington street, joined hands with Harry Lewy, of the Wizard Theater Company, who had made one thousand feet of film to show the activities of the blind people in that institution, and a concert was held at the New on Sunday night, January 20.

Receiver Asked for West End Theater.

Baltimore.—On Thusday, January 17, orders were signed in the Circuit Court requiring cause to be shown by January 28 why a receiver should not be appointed for the West End Theater Company, operating the West End theater, Baltimore and Frederick streets. Paul Emmart is the manager of this house. This action was taken upon bills of complaint of the Triangle company and George W. Walther & Co., Arthur B. Price is the Triangle representative in Baltimore.

Thomas Gavin Dead.

Baltimore.—On Tuesday, January 22, occurred the death of Thomas L. Gavin, treasurer of Ford's opera house, at his home in this city at the age of 36. Mr. Gavin started in the theatrical business at the age of 11 years, when he acted as office boy for Charles E. Ford, now manager of the opera house. He has seen 25 years continuous service at Ford's, and was well known by the many patrons of this house.

Jewell Theater Will Reopen.

Baltimore.—It is now announced that the Jewell theater, 719 West Baltimore street, for some time managed by Miss T. D. Marks, and lately dark, will be reopened on Feb. 9. A. Hornitz will now conduct the affairs of this playhouse and will run the General Film program for his patrons.

Parkway Aids "Melting Pot" Cause.

Baltimore.—Bernard Depkin, Jr., supervising manager of the Parkway Theater Company, likes to do things just a little differently, and he is quite an originator of attractive stunts. (We ought to know, having handled his publicity for five months before we got too many magazines to write for.) As his latest endeavor, he arranged a special performance of "Slumberland," featuring June Caprice, for children, on Saturday morning, Jan. 26, and then advertised that a piece of any kind of metal would be accepted as admission, the accumulation to be turned over to the "Melting Pot" which was receiving contributions in a leading Baltimore jeweler's window.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., FILM NOTES.

By L. D. Brown, 28 Henry St., Binghamton, N. Y.

Local 396 Elects.

The Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 396, elected officers Sunday, January 6, as follows: President, Goodwin Kennicut ;vice-president, Fred Gladde; secretary and treasurer, G. E. Personius; business agent, Edward Davis; recording secretary.

The union is now in good condition and all the members are working.

Hey, Gladdie and Davis.

There were no cigars passed around up at the meeting of the Moving Picture Operators Local 396. The boys do not know what to think about Mr. Gladde and Mr. Davis.

Bill Would Forbid Increase in Prices

Congressman William C. Cary, of Wisconsin, Has Measure That Would Keep Washington, D. C., Theaters from Making Holiday Prices.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Congressman William J. Cary, of Wisconsin, has introduced a House Joint Resolution providing "That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed and empowered to revoke the license of any * * * persons, firm, or corporation engaged in business in the District of Columbia under the terms of license regulations of the District of Columbia, as duly promulgated and enforced by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, under authority conferred upon them by Congress, who shall advance the price or prices charged for * * * (theater admissions, for instance), * * * during war, any holiday, or event, the observance or celebration of which shall have the effect of causing a person, other than a resident of the District of Columbia, to visit the District of Columbia on account of war, such holiday, or event."

It would be possible for any citizen to make complaint in the police court and conviction therein would constitute the basis for the revocation of the license. The further penalty for any violation would be a fine of not more than $25 for each offense.

Reserve Films Kept to Fill Gaps.

Washington.—Mr. Sydney B. Lust has conceived the idea of film insurance. In a statement to the Moving Picture World correspondent, Mr. Lust said: "I have had a great many calls, as have had all other exchange managers here, from exhibitors who fail to get their shows, asking for emergency shows. So I thought it would be a good thing for the exhibitors in the outlying sections of the territory to keep reserve shows on hand, prepared for such emergencies as may arise from delayed express or mail services.

"We have gotten together a number of shows which we are booking to exhibitors at the rate of about $5 per week. The exhibitor can keep the show sent to him until he finds it necessary to use it to fill in when he misses out on his regular show. After using the show he would return it to the exchange to have it replaced with a new subject. This action would be continued indefinitely through the life of the agreement between exhibitor and the exchange.

National Press Club Sees "Eagle's Eye."

Washington, D. C.—The National Press Club last week had as its guests a large number of prominent police officials, invited to witness a private exhibition of "The Eagle's Eye," the story of the Imperial German Government's spies, plots and propaganda in the United States. The large assembly room of the club, which, by the way, is equipped with a Graphoscope motor-driven projection machine, was crowded to capacity.

The showing was made by E. J. Hudson and Courteney R. Cooper, who are with The Whartons in New York, who came here to also show the films to the Government agencies in Washington.

S. M. Flax Now Heads Metro Exchange.

Washington, D. C.—Congratulations are being extended to Sam M. Flax, who has just been promoted to the position of manager of the Metro Film Company's exchange in this city. Coincident with his appointment comes the information that the company itself will hereafter conduct the exchange, having purchased the interest therein formerly held by L. M. Day.

G. M. Mann Off to Coast.

Washington.—George M. Mann, formerly manager of the Paramount exchange in Washington, D. C., and more lately a district manager for New York offices of the big film companies, has gone to San Francisco, Cal., to assume charge of the office of the Fox Film Company in that city. Mr. Mann is also the owner of the Leader theater in this city. The playhouse is being managed by Corbin Sheild.

All Invited to See New Exchange.

Washington, D. C.—Sidney B. Lust, of Sidney B. Lust, Inc., and the Super Films Attractions Company, Inc., is inviting all of the exhibitors in the territory to visit him at his new quarters on E street near 12th street, N. W., where he has one of the neatest and best appointed small exchanges in this section.

Accident to Partly Finished Theater.

Washington.—Five men narrowly escaped with their lives on Jan. 29, when a large portion of the roof of the new Metropolitan theater, now being constructed for Harry M. Crandall, on F street, near 10th street, N. W., fell through to the ground. The accident—not in any way attributed to faulty construction—will have the effect of further delaying the completion of this house for several weeks.

MORE BALTIMORE NOTES.

Salisbury Theater Enlarges.

Salisbury, Md.—The Ulman opera house in Salisbury is now being enlarged. I. Ulman, the owner, has evidently realized the popularity of moving pictures, for this theater has a stage suitable for the production of road shows, and this is now being taken out by him and the screen being moved back.

Pictorial Theater Changes Hands.

Baltimore.—The Pictorial theater, 3310 East Baltimore street, which, under the management of Mrs. Mary Goldsmith for some months, has now changed hands and Mrs. H. R. Sheehan will now control its interests.

New Universal Salesman.

Baltimore.—It is now announced from the Baltimore Film exchange, handling Universal film, that the vacancy created by the resignation of J. Whittle, will shortly be occupied by S. Feldstein, who will come to Baltimore from Clarksburg, W. Va.

Hull Theater Changes Hands.

Baltimore.—The Hull theater, on Hull street in South Baltimore, which for some years has been under the management of Mrs. Joe Goellers, has now been taken over by Mr. Langville.

Baltimore.—At a meeting at McCoy hall, Saturday, January 19, of the Boy Scouts of America the moving picture, "When the Call Came," produced by Harry Lewy and later taken over by the Government, owing to its patriotic qualities, was shown.

Baltimore Notes About the Trade.

J. Whittle, who has for some months been connected with the Universal products in Baltimore working out of the office of the Baltimore Film exchange, has now become associated with the Fort Pitt Theater Company, and is covering the district including Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, and eastern Pennsylvania.

On the night of Tuesday, January 22, when all the theaters in the city of Baltimore were closed, several of the theaters loaned their films to the Y. M. C. A. for the soldiers in the city. Every other night during last week a program of moving pictures was given at the Y. M. C. A.

Full Monday Houses Fail to Make Up Loss

Cincinnati Theaters Sustain Substantial Setback in Fuelless Holidays—Legitimate Houses Run Extra Matinees Mondays.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—The first two Monday "holidays" have proved to be splendid business days for the moving picture theaters, receipts running in most cases substantially above ordinary Mondays on account of the considerable number of people having nothing to do but to seek some means of amusement. On the other hand, however, leading exhibitors say that this has hardly done more than help out the loss of business due to the fact that thousands of people ordinarily downtown on Mondays stayed at home on the "heatless Mondays." It is the unanimous report, too, that even where there was a good-sized gain in Monday business it did not begin to make up for the total loss of Tuesday's business, so that the enforced holidays mean, and will continue to mean, a substantial loss to the exhibitors. The exchanges are also losing just that much business, as virtually all of the suburban houses, large and small, run a change of program every night, and require one program less with Tuesday eliminated. The "legitimate" houses do not feel the loss of Tuesday so much, as the practice has been adopted of having an extra matinee on Monday, which has been well attended, and virtually makes up for the loss of Tuesday evening.

One Reel a Week of Camp Activities.

Cincinnati, O.—The importance of the military camps as a source of interesting news moving pictures, which has been generously recognized in the various news releases, has resulted in arrangements by the Pathe organization and the Cincinnati Motion Picture Co., co-operating with a local paper, for a weekly one-reel release consisting of pictures taken at the military camps in this section and at Red Cross and other headquarters of war activities. The plan has had the official approval of the Government, which appreciates fully the valuable work being done by the moving picture industry in advertising and creating enthusiasm for war work of all kinds.

Made Monday Show Red Cross Benefit.

Cincinnati, O.—The second Monday "holiday" was featured at the Western Plaza, in Price Hill, by a special entertainment, including music, as well as an unusually good picture program, for the benefit of the Price Hill Auxiliary of the Red Cross, covering two performances in the evening. The co-operation of the entire suburb resulted in packed houses, while a children's matinee, given in the afternoon, drew especially well, as the schools were closed and arrangements had been made to cater especially on this occasion to the youngsters. Manager John Weinig is in close touch with Price Hill activities, and attendance at his house reflects his readiness to help along every good movement that is started.

Plan New Theater for Rockford.

Rockford, O.—The Rockford Theater Co., organized by local business men, is planning the construction of a modern moving picture house, which will cost in the neighborhood of $10,000, that being the amount at which the company is capitalized. Among those interested are J. O. Wickersham, Charles F. Dull, E. Ray, and several others.

Cleveland News Letter

By M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, O.

Getting "Remaking of a Nation" on Screens.

CLEVELAND, O.—George R. Keppie, press agent and film salesman of Cleveland, has been appointed publicity representative for the big draft army camp picture, "The Remaking of a Nation."

This picture, made under the supervision of General Glann, the commander, will be shown throughout Ohio, Kentucky, and in parts of Pennsylvania to give the folks back home a correct idea of life in an army camp.

Among those who are now working on the picture are Jack Needham, exchange man; M. A. Lebensburger, formerly secretary-treasurer of the Standard Film service, and Mr. Keppie, besides seven army men who are stenographers, bookkeepers, and shippers. The film will also be distributed under the camp commander by four other civilian exchange men, one in Cleveland, another in Toledo, a third in Columbus, a fourth in Dayton, and a fifth in Cincinnati.

Big Week for Universal Films.

Cleveland.—The week ending January 26 was a big week for the Cleveland Universal exchange. Six downtown theaters were playing pictures first run, all from the Victor Film Service Company, which handles Universal films.

The Standard had a big week with "The Price of a Good Time." Manager Grossman says he could have two "openless" days a week, provided he had a picture like this Jewel production every week.

The Grand was reopened with the Harry Carey feature, "The Phantom Riders," and the house did fine, according to the management.

The Priscilla played one of the new episodes of "The Mystery Ship" the entire week.

The Miles was showing Universal's short pictures all week as a feature of its vaudeville bill.

The Gaiety had a three-day run on "Face Value," the latest Mae Murray picture, and with considerable success.

The Corona theater played two days on the latest Grace Cunard release, "Hell's Crater." It went over in great shape.

Manager E. J. Schmidt, of the Victor, has been working hard for several weeks to put Universal pictures in the best houses, and evidently he is succeeding, as this line-up shows.

Jack Kuhn Brings Back a Bride.

Cleveland.—Manager Jack Kuhn, of Loew's Stillman theater, Cleveland, returned to the city last week a married man.

To be sure Jack left Cleveland a married man, but very few folks in the film business knew it. Jack was quietly married January 22 by a Cleveland justice, the bride being Miss Charlotte Gideon. They left immediately for New York, where the happy couple remained a week.

Harry Reavey Goes to Chicago Metro.

Cleveland.—Harry Reavey, for years an exchangeman in Ohio territory, and recently with Goldwyn, left those diggings last week for Chicago to go with Metro.

"I sincerely regret leaving this territory," said Mr. Reavey. "I have hundreds of friends here, and owe them a great deal for my success. My home is in Milwaukee, and naturally when I had a chance to get nearer to my wife and relatives I took it."

Tennessee Theaters Close Tuesday Under New Ruling.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Contradicting a former ruling of the state fuel administration a new fuel order declares that "beginning Monday, January 28, the burning of wood is placed under the same restrictions as the burning of coal and other fuel. Wherever the closing regulations do not allow the burning of coal, wood can no longer be used in its place."

Resulting from the new fuel order, every theater in Nashville was dark on last Tuesday, with the exception of the Orpheum, a legitimate house, open by special permission of the administrator by reason of its having sold a large part of its advance seats prior to the amended order.

Other towns in the state are finding the Monday "stay-open" plan a great boom to business. Reports indicate that business has been almost doubled in a dozen or more towns over the state, and the public at large seem appreciative of this consideration on the part of the national administration.

Films Feature College Meet.

Lebanon, Tenn.—At the recent athletic carnival held at Castle Heights University, in which boxing, wrestling and other athletic events were decided by contest with out-of-town representatives, a moving picture exhibition proved one of the most interesting features of the occasion. Eight reels of features shown before the balance of the evening's program was given. Arrangements have been made to continue the moving picture performances at intervals at the university.

Nashville Parthenon Sees Service.

Nashville, Tenn.—After more than two years of idleness, the old Parthenon theater on Church street has again been pressed into service, this time for lecuring purposes. The present owners contemplate refitting the house for active service as soon as the big business boom starts in Nashville within the next few weeks, when some 45,000 additional people will be brought into the city to work on the construction of the Government's new $60,000,000 munitions plant in this city. The old equipment has been taken out and sold, but, according to present indications, the theater will be rigged up again as a high-class feature house.

Illinois News Letter

About Exhibitors and Theaters.

HERRIN, ILL.—The Herrin opera house, owned by Mrs. Joseph Del'Era, was destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $20,000. The theater had been in charge of Lieut. Joseph Del'Era, who is now in the National army.

Cairo, Ill.—The Palm theater has been selected by the McKinley School Mother's club as the medium for furnishing censored pictures to children of the city. Shows will be given each Friday night.

Pekin, Ill.—A commendable spirit of co-operation was shown in the recent transportation tie-up, due to the snow storms, when the Court and Capital theaters, by mutual arrangement, showed the same programs.

Friends Gather to Honor J. Sperkados.

Montreal.—Almost one hundred film men of Montreal gathered at the Ritz-Carlton hotel, Montreal, the other evening, to honor J. Sperdakos, of the Independent Amusement Company, Limited, which controls several theaters in that city, in view of his approaching marriage to Miss Poletoine Pappas. The guest of the evening was presented with a variety of electric utensils for the new home and also with a handsome lamp standard. Those present included practically all the film theater and exchange managers in the city.

Canadian Trade Jottings.

Montreal.—Sam G. Gibson, a long experienced exhibitor of Montreal and also a well-known exchange man, has joined the staff of the Metro in Montreal.

Montreal.—The Francais theater, one of the leading theaters in the East End of Montreal, has booked first runs of the new Charlie Chaplin releases, which are being handled in Canada by the Metro offices for the National Exhibitors.

Slides Go to 903 Picture Theaters.

Ottawa.—Special slides have been sent to every moving picture theater in Canada from the office of the Food Controller at Ottawa, Ont. These slides bear messages relative to the necessity of food conservation and for increased production of foodstuffs. The slides were sent to 903 moving picture theaters of the Dominion and it is officially estimated that they will be seen by no less than 1,750,000 people in one week. Please note that the total population of Canada is not more than 7,000,000, so the Government estimates that practically one-quarter of the people of the Dominion see a picture show every week.

Toronto.—"Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" got away to a wonderful start on Saturday morning, January 26, for its first run of seven days in Massey Hall, Toronto. The management, consisting of Harry Stevens and Ray Peck, arranged for a school children's matinee for which the youngsters had to be accompanied by adults. The crowd carried the big structure by storm and it is estimated that fully five thousand people witnessed the first projection of the picture here. The hall was again filled at the two succeeding regular performances during the first day.

The picture is controlled in Canada by Superfeatures, Limited, Toronto.

Cost and Value of Striking Lobby Displays

Manager Archie Laurie of Montreal's Midway Theater Talks of "Cheapest and Best Form of Advertising"—Figures and Advice.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerard St. E., Toronto, Ontario.

MONTREAL, QUEBEC.—Manager Archie Laurie of the Midway theater, Montreal, is being asked many times each day how much his striking lobby displays are costing. Not including his own time, which is charged up as manager of the theater, the many big lobby spreads are costing only from $8 to $25, according to the books of the theater. Recently Manager Laurie had a big display for "The Babes in the Woods." It consisted of reproduction of the Old Witch, Fairy, Royal Carriage, the two children sleeping at the base of a painted tree and various inscriptions. The outlay for this front was only $11.28, made up as follows: Artist, $8; cardboard, 78c; wood, 50c, and paint, $2. In addition to this setting, Manager Laurie distributed three hundred copies of the child's picture book, "Babes in the Woods." He declares that the result was wonderful.

Manager Laurie also recently spent $10.95 for a lobby display to advertise "The Crisis." The outstanding feature of this front was a cutout of Abraham Lincoln from a 24-sheet, mounted on soft cardboards, braced at the back with thin wood strappers or laths. On a cotton background in a 10 by 13-foot frame was painted the Statue of Liberty and the dome of the Washington Capitol surmounting a heap of ruins and debris. The latter was made of transparent cotton, through which were shining four blue 25-watt tungsten bulbs worked on a flasher, to produce a flaming effect.

It is necessary, generally, to build the lobby sets in three sections, as they are made in an upstairs room of the theater building, and large sections could not be brought down the stairway. The cotton background is used many times, old scenes being painted out with alabastine. The cardboard for cutouts is only used once.

Manager Laurie declares that the lobby display, in his opinion, is really the cheapest and best form of theater advertising, providing the work is done properly and at small cost. He recently enjoyed the experience of having the Montreal police seize his lobby display for "On Trial" because the authorities did not like his reproduction of a courtroom scene. The set was seized on Sunday morning soon after the opening of the show and the scenery was burned in the City Hall furnace on Monday morning with a police representative on hand to see that the cremation order was carried out.

In designing lobby spreads, Laurie always makes it a point to place the name of the production in a prominent position and in large letters. Some may not take the time to examine the setting but if they only take a glance they are sure to see the name of the feature anyway. Laurie always makes rough sketches of his displays first.

Rearrangement of Famous Players Office.

Toronto—The three floors of the building at 12 Queen street East, Toronto, occupied as the Canadian headquarters of the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., have been totally rearranged in order to provide better facilities for the conducting of the company's growing business.

Ye Correspondent Would Know of Screenings.

Toronto—The Toronto correspondent of the Moving Picture World finds that more and more exhibitors, particularly those in charge of the smaller houses, are asking his advice regarding current releases, particularly comedies. Good comedies are apparently in great demand and the writer is telling all he knows about those which he sees in various downtown houses. Although the writer keeps in close touch with local exchange men, sometimes the latter neglect to notify him of special screenings. If they would do so, ye correspondent would be in a better position to give personal opinions of new stuff to anxious suburban theater managers and others.

Wyatt Managing Calgary Exchange.

Toronto—George Wyatt has become manager of the Calgary office of Dominion Exclusives, Ltd., Fox distributors in western Canada, after being with the Mutual for five years.

New Maisonneuve Theater Opens.

Montreal—The Maisonneuve theater, Maissoneuve, Montreal, has been opened under the management of Mr. Eugene Lefebvre, who is also manager of the Crystal Palace, St. Lawrence boulevard, Montreal. The new theater, which is controlled by a Montreal company headed by R. Gariepy, is an attractive and up-to-date structure seating 800 people. The new house has started off with a three-piece orchestra and is using Universal and Fox releases. H. Larose is the assistant manager of the new theater.

Two Film Men Become Benedicts.

Toronto—Manager Fred Wyatt, of the Monarch theater, College street, Toronto, has taken unto himself a wife.

Another local film man who has also joined the Order of Benedicts is Herb Burton, the popular accountant of the Toronto Pathe office.

Peterboro Theater Burned.

Peterboro, Ont.—A fire which wiped out a block of stores and banks in Peterboro early on the morning of Saturday, January 26, also destroyed the Royal theater, the largest moving picture theater in the town. Edward Parks happened to be asleep in a room over the theater and had a narrow escape from death. Nothing was saved from the theater in the way of equipment or films. The house will be rebuilt as soon as possible. The fire did not start in the theater.

Manitoba Theater Tax of One-Fifth Gross

Government's Tax Plans Meeting with Most Stringent Opposition from Film Men —Censors Take High Hand with Comedies.

WINNIPEG, MAN.—Announcement has been made at Winnipeg that after February 28 comedy film subjects will be allowed. This will affect the usual run of one and two-reel comedies and will not cover dramatic farces or five-reel comedy-dramas, it is believed. Just what stand the authorities will take in connection with Charlie Chaplin releases remains to be seen. The Chaplins are admittedly among the best attractions in the film business, and if these are prohibited the theaters will surely be hard hit. First details of the proposed step only are available. To date the Manitoba censors have barred almost all comedies individually.

The powers-that-be are planning to get a slice of the people's money through amusement tax channels and now are also arranging to compel exhibitors to give practically less for the money. The situation in Manitoba is indeed remarkable.

At a meeting of theater managers in the Winnipeg theater, Winnipeg, on Thursday, January 24, the decision was reached to close local houses as a protest against the imposition of the one-fifth war tax by the Government. The managers declared that they believed that patrons would refuse to pay such a big tax and that they would stay away from the theaters. Thus the theater business would be greatly affected.

The managers therefore promise that they will bring matters to a climax quickly by closing their doors. Several expressed the opinion that it might prove cheaper for them to do so than to attempt to continue under such adverse conditions. The leading theater men in Winnipeg are decisive in their attitude and managers of smaller houses are to be brought into line if possible before the war tax measure becomes effective. The small exhibitors will be shown why they should band with the larger houses in the fight, which promises to be a bitter one. The proposed abolition of comedy films is only adding pepper to the fire.

In the meantime the Winnipeg theaters are presenting the best available features and shorter subjects at regular prices and are not eliminating any portion of their shows in anticipation of a general closing decision.

Kentucky Court Upholds Sunday Show Fine

Appeal of the Former Management of the Capital Theater Lost in Court—Fine of $50 Can Be Levied for Each Employe Working on Sabbath.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

FRANKFORT, KY.—Chief Justice Settle of the Court of Appeals, in an opinion last week, upheld the decision of the Franklin Circuit Court, which fined the former Capital theater management $51 for operating the theater on Sunday. In his opinion Justice Settle held that moving picture theater proprietors may be fined $50 for each employee engaged in operating a picture show on Sunday under Section 1321, Kentucky Statutes, prohibiting work of any nature except necessary work, with some specific exceptions. This decision is under that section of the statutes known as the old "Blue Laws."

Gocke Managing the Knickerbocker.

Louisville, Ky.—Charles Gocke, assistant manager of the Ideal theater, has assumed the management of the Knickerbocker theater, at 18th and Market streets, succeeding Dr. Barnes, who was forced to give up the business on account of ill-health. Mr. Barnes has sold the house to the Broadway Amusement Co., which also controls the Ideal, and a long string of local theaters, including several downtown houses.

Must Close Even Where Wood Is Available.

Louisville, Ky.—Reports from some sections of the country are to the effect that theaters burning wood for fuel will be permitted to operate on Tuesdays, but locally the fuel administration has ruled against such operation. However, theaters in various sections of the state have voluntarily used wood for fuel for regular engagements this winter, it being possible in some sections to buy cord wood, mill slabs, etc., for fuel, at times when coal could hardly be had. Wood has been selling much cheaper than coal, comparatively, but requires a great deal more work in handling.

"Nation" Film at 25 Cents a Seat.

Louisville, Ky.—"The Birth of a Nation," shown in Louisville two years ago at $2 a seat for choice seats, has been booked by the Walnut theater, and will be shown at prices not higher than twenty-five cents a seat. A special orchestra will be employed during the engagment. Manager Joe Steuerle believes that at the reduced price the film will draw even better than it did upon the initial showing.

Snows Prove Too Heavy for Roofs.

Paducah, Ky.—Much damage has been done in various parts of the state to picture theaters, etc., by accumulations of heavy snow on the roofs. At the Kozy theater, of this city, the copper and glass canopy at the entrance to the lobby, recently let go, crashing to the street, and narrowly missing three persons who were just leaving the theater. The weight of the snow pulled the heavy anchor chains from the walls. The damage was estimated at about $500. In Louisville the old picture theater and dance hall at Riverpiew Park recently collapsed, and several churches and other buildings have done the same thing.

Fire in Richmond Opera House.

Richmond, Ky.—Loss by fire was estimated at about $3,000 to building and equipment at the Opera House, under lease to the Alhambra Theater Co. Arthur Turner, the operator, endeavored to put out the blaze with a fire extinguisher, but it gave out before he could head the flames, which wrecked all of the electrical equipment, motors, machines, etc., and all of the reels of Dorothy Dalton in "Ten of Diamonds." The Opera House was flooded with water, and it will be some time before it can be reopened. No insurance was carried on the equipment. The show has been partly transferred to the Alhambra theater.

S. & P. Film Buys Big Stock of Film.

Louisville, Ky.—W. E. Carroll and Harry U. Abney, of the S. & P. Film & Supply Co., of Louisville, recently returned from a trip to Cincinnati, where they closed a contract taking over the entire stock of films owned by the Progressive Film Co., arranging to move the stock to the Louisville exchange. This material included 465 reels, mostly two to six-reel subjects, including features, comedies, etc., and a number of Chaplins and Arbuckles. The S. & P. concern does business principally in Kentucky, Virginia, Carolina, Tennessee and Indiana, figuring to cover a radius within easy reach of Louisville.

Many Women Enter Film Business.

Louisville, Ky.—A recent report from a Tennessee point was to the effect that two prominent young women had taken over a moving picture theater and would personally manage and operate it. While there is not much heard on this subject, it has been learned that women are becoming far more numerous in the exhibiting end of the film business. Women operators are now handling machines in many of the smaller towns, where the draft has been especially felt. One woman operator was employed some months ago at Murray, Ky. In central Kentucky a woman has been managing two theaters for some time, and has not only managed them well, but turned deficits into profits.

Monday Attendances Hold Up Well.

Louisville, Ky.—Monday attendances at the Louisville photoplay houses have been holding up so well under the Monday closing campaign of the Fuel Administration that the exhibitors are taking a cheerful attitude toward the closing edict.

Kentucky Business Jottings.

Louisville, Ky.—Louis Dittmar, head of the Majestic Amusement Co., is back from a trip to New York, where he spent about two weeks looking after some important film matters.

J. C. McFerran, of McFerran & Knopf Co., of Louisville, has been seriously ill for several weeks, but is showing some improvement. The company handles special advertising films, screen slide advertising, doing a local as well as national business.

Fred Levy, head of the Big Features Rights Corporation, Louisville, recently returned from a business trip to Chicago. Mr. Levy last week resigned the presidency of the Kentucky Retail Clothing Dealers' Association on account of the press of other business interests.

Hodgenville, Ky.—F. M. Sparks, Earl O'Hara and O. B. Heady have leased the Opera House from R. D. Gaddie, and have arranged to show five times each week, starting with "Babbling Tongues," a show which recently made a hit in Louisville.

Elizabethtown, Ky.—The management of the Masonic Temple theater, a picture house at Elizabethtown, has announced that on account of conditions brought about by the war, bad weather conditions, etc., the house has closed until further notice, but that Saturday shows will probably be started again in the spring.

Dayton News

By P. J. G., Dayton Correspondent.

Manager D. H. Thompson Believes in the Future.

DAYTON, OHIO.—After visiting the Muse-Us theater last week the writer has passed over to that class who think that business conditions will be better than ever within the next year. I have not visited a more hospitable place than the Muse-Us, and Manager D. H. Thompson showed me everything of interest from the projection booth to the heating and ventilation plant in the basement. One thing seen at the Muse-Us, which is very rarely seen in a projection booth, was a wash-bowl with hot and cold water. In discussing the present slump in business, Mr. Thompson said: "At present, owing to the cold weather and other things, the public is not turning out in large numbers. I have lost money since the middle of December, but as long as I can get coal with which to heat my theater the Muse-Us will never close, for I expect to get back all I have lost when the tide turns, and it is bound to turn before very long. Take no stock in the calamity howlers who jump at every chance to magnify the present slump in business." I can now see the reason for Mr. Thompson being elected president of that progressive body of exhibitors who meet in the Rauh building as the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League.

Loew's Valentine at Toledo a Beauty.

Toledo.—Loew's Valentine theater, managed by E. H. Gerstle, is without a doubt the most beautiful theater in Toledo yet visited by the writer and has one of the handsomest stage settings I have yet seen. The Valentine also boasts of the only triple-lighting system in the city and also claims the largest and best orchestra in Toledo. It is directed by Prof. John Koella. For the week of the 27th the Valentine has booked Julian Eltinge in "The Widow's Might." Mr. Gerstle tells me that Eltinge is quite a drawing card in Toledo. Norma Talmadge in "Ghosts of Yesterday" is booked for the week of Feb. 3. Elsie Ferguson made a hit in "Rose of the World" here recently.

Natural History of Salesmen in Dayton.

Dayton.—Advances on Dayton theaters by the various film salesmen who handle this territory are seldom made alone. When I see one film salesman at a local theater I always look for the rest of the crowd, for it seems they plan their attacks at the same time. When questioned about it Eddy Gomersol of Select Pictures said combinations are always more effective. He also worked in the united drive stuff. While scouting the different haunts last week in search of salesmen I suddenly ran across six of these gentlemen at the same place—the League Rooms in the Rauh building. After these men are through, with a few exceptions, Dayton will not see any until the next united gathering. Frequently, after the crowd has migrated elsewhere, one wily fellow will lag behind and go the rounds trying to clean up in the absence of the others and he usually pulls the trick.

New Strand Has Added Space.

Hamilton—The New Strand theater, probably the prettiest film theater of Hamilton, Ontario, has been increased in size by the erection of a seventy-foot addition to the building.

Pick-Up Notes from Dayton.

H. A. Bugie, with the Paramount short-reel department, was seen at the League rooms in Dayton.

R. H. Haines was in Dayton recently. He formerly managed the Mutual exchange at Cincinnati, but now manages the Cincinnati branch of the U. S. Exhibitors' Service. He had much to say for "The Zeppelin's Last Raid."

Albert Staehlin, at the Wyoming theater, joins with those who complain of the poor service offered by many of the exchanges supplying Dayton theaters—business holds up at the Wyoming.

Doc Alexander at the Edgemont theater, says business is at present as good as could be expected. The Edgemont is at present operating on Monday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

It was a feast for the eyes to see the line at the Strand last Sunday for Douglas Fairbanks in "A Modern Musketeer."

The Apollo is now playing the Metro program in Dayton first run. The last house to use this service first run was the Ideal.

Things that never happen: Clay Brehm in his office without a pair of long scissors clipping—oh, anything.

Chief among the notables registered at the League rooms here last week was Paul E. Krieger, manager of the Foursquare exchange at Cincinnati, who had much to say in behalf of the new serial handled by his company, "The Eagle's Eye," with the ever-popular King Baggot and Marguerite Snow.

Jack Campbell and yours truly at the Strand generally thrash out the topics of the day on Thursday of each week.

Bert Fiala announces he is to change policy in regard to pictures and that the next few weeks will see several new programs represented at the Alhambra.

Atlanta News Letter

Atlanta Theaters Keep Open Tuesdays.

ATLANTA, GA.—With the use of hydro-electric current for heating, lighting, and power purposes all the theaters and moving picture houses in Atlanta managed, wthout in any manner violating the fuel administrator's order, to stay open Tuesday, which was Garfield's "fuelless" day for theaters.

Plan New Airdome in Brunswick.

Brunswick, Ga.—Brunswick will have an airdome, which will be ready for operation this summer provided the city council grants the request. Harry M. King, proprietor of the Bijou theater, has petitioned council for authority to erect such a place of amusement; council will no doubt grant the petition, and Mr. King stated that it was his intention to begin the active work of construction as soon as possible.

Crowds See "Birth of Nation."

Atlanta.—Despite the exremely disagreeable weather Monday crowded houses were on hand at every performance of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which opened a week's engagement at the Criterion theater. An hour before the doors were opened the lobby was filled with people waiting for the box office to open, proof positive that this great film spectacle stands without a rival in popularity. The desire to see it seemed equally as great, if not greater, than upon either of its previous showings in Atlanta. So great has been the crowds and so many have expressed disappointment at not seeing it that the Criterion management has held it over for another week.

The employees of the Atlanta exchanges have taken hold of the war thrift stamps with vim and vigor. It is commendable the way they are filling up their cards.

Michigan Theaters May Operate 6 Hours

Fuel Administrator Modifies First Order—Business Generally Fair in Spite of Cold Tuesdays and Curtailed Show Hours.

By Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—After much deliberation the state fuel administrator, W. K. Prudden, modified his order requiring theaters to operate only five hours per day, to six hours per day, with allowance of unlimited hours on Monday, and with the further understanding that they close on Tuesdays. Exhibitors are glad to accept these modifications, although in reality they did expect that Mr. Prudden would grant them nine hours per day, given to other lines of business. The nine-hour allowance was particularly desirable by the big downtown theaters in the larger cities of the state, who operate on a continuous schedule.

Another point won by the theaters was the elimination of the word "consecutive" from the final ruling, thus giving each theater the privilege of running whatever six hours best suited his particular locality. Most of the theaters are running two hours in the afternoon and four hours at night, thus giving them one show in the afternoon and two at night.

Investigation is proving that business on Monday is exceptionally good—nearly Sunday. This condition of affairs is very encouraging to the industry and it means as good as any holiday, and as good as that, after all, the exhibitors will not lose as much as they had anticipated. Some exhibitors told the Motion Picture World that their total sales for the six days of the first week were almost as much as for the seven days of the previous week. We do not believe this is the situation gengrally; nevertheless, it does show that the closing order is not as detrimental as was expected.

Many Changes in Distributing Offices.

Detroit.—This territory is slowly but surely getting a national reputation for "changes" in the handling of film distribution. It seems that more changes have been made in the staffs of the film exchanges of Detroit than any other city in the United States. The latest to be made are the appointments of W. D. Ward, recently with Select Pictures and for a long while with Mutual, as manager of the Universal, Bluebird and Jewel productions, and J. O. Kent, formerly with Harry I. Garson productions, as manager of the Select office. Art W. Blankmeyer, formerly operating the Tri-State Film exchange, will succeed Mr. Kent at the Garson office. On top of these managerial changes are quite a number of shifts in the road salesmen, etc.

P. L. Smith Buys Out State Film.

Detroit.—Col. W. S. Butterfield and Harry S. Lorch, of the State Film Co., 310 Film Building, Detroit, have sold the capital stock and all assets and features to P. L. Smith and associates, the latter already being in complete charge. Mr. Lorch has been placed in the Class One of the new draft, and is expected to join the colors at any time. Colonel Butterfield, president of the company, did not want to continue the business without Mr. Lorch, so it was mutually agreed to sell the exchange. Mr. Smith, the new general manager, says the business will be carried on at the same location and in the usual way, and that, in fact, he will shortly announce some new features. Those already controlled are "Civilization," "The Deemster," "A Mormon Maid," "The Libertine," "The Masque of Life" and the "Conquest of Canaan."

Strand Features Buys Short Reissues.

Detroit, Mich.—Dave Mundstock, of the Strand Features, 94 Griswold street, Detroit, who soon expects to locate in the new film building, has decided to add both a comedy department and a fill-in department, handling one and two-reel subjects exclusively in these departments—of every description. He recently purchased about 50 reissues for this purpose.

George Bohm Joins Sousa's Band.

Detroit.—George Bohm, of the Censor theater, Albion, Mich., has enlisted and is with Sousa's Band at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station.

Detroit Trade Brieflets.

The Majestic theater, Detroit, has booked the Flagg comedies, released through the George Kleine system, and will show each comedy a full week.

A voluntary bankruptcy petition has been filed by Graham and C. A. Hoffman, operating as Hoffman Brothers, Detroit. They were the promoters of the Palace theater on Monroe avenue, and later the new Colonial theater on Woodward avenue, which recently was taken over by Frank Farrington, the theatrical builder.

Nat Lefkowitz, formerly salesman for the Standard Film Service, Detroit, is now with the Pathe, and will travel part of Michigan.

L. J. Gardiner, of the United Theater Equipment Co. branch in Detroit, who also makes the Velvet Gold Fibre screen, reports that his factory is working day and night to fill orders. The eastern branches of the United have swamped him with business.

Canadian Newspaper Man Criticises Detroit.

Detroit.—A very interesting letter was received the other day from a Toronto newspaper man who had visited Detroit, and had attended some of the leading theatres. He complains against a certain large downtown theatre, his letter being, in part, as follows:

"A few days ago I attended a performance at a moving picture theatre in Detroit. I wanted to see what the place was like and to glimpse its adopted policy. Strange though it may seem for a newspaper man, I decided to pay my way into the house. By doing so I experienced the sensation of being 'done.' At least that was my impression and I am passing this word to you for your editorial opinion.

"The doorman announced that only twenty-five-cent seats were left. I looked at the framed schedule of prices and noticed that the scale ranged from 10c. to 25c. In other words, I gathered the impression that all the cheap seats were filled, but that there were some vacancies yet on the main floor. I bit and bought. When I gained entrance I was told to go up. I did so and again I received instructions to go up. Eventually I found myself in the very back of the upper balcony where the 10c. seats are, or should have been, found. I spoke to an usheress who told me that the few seats there were the only ones left. I had paid 25c. for a 10c. seat. I had been overcharged 150 per cent. I told her about buying the highest priced ticket. She declared that the only thing I could do would be to go downstairs whenever I saw anybody get out. From where I stood I could only see part of the screen—let alone the orchestra floor.

"Comparisons are odious. But I do know that Toronto exhibitors make only one charge for a seat. If all the 35c. seats are gone, the box office sells only the others, if there are any of the lower-priced variety left. If the cheap seats are all gone, then prospective patrons are told so truthfully.

"If many other people felt as I did after this one experience in Detroit, the house in question would soon wonder why its patronage had melted.

"I mention this because sometimes exhibitors like to know things from the public's standpoint.

"W. M. GLADISH.

Prosperity Reaching Across Texas Border

Exhibitors from El Paso, Juarez and Chihuahua Visit Dallas and Entertain Exchange Men—Find Improvement in Old Mexico.

By Douglas Hawley, The Times-Herald, Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, TEX.—Things are prosperous down here in Texas. Also the state of well being extends across the border and down into rapidly recuperating Old Mexico. That's the message that several prominent El Paso and Chihuhua moving picture exhibitors brought to Dallas during the week of January 25, and which was delivered to several exchange branch managers who were their guests. Juan de la C. Alarcon, Francisco Aldareti, Jose Manuel Fernandez and Marquis Simon Turk were the theater men. They control houses in El Paso, Juarez and Chihuahua. Their guests included H. D. Naugle, western manager for Vitagraph; J. B. Dugger, local manager Vitagraph; Ned Depinet, manager Consolidated; Cliff Reid, manager Mutual; C. A. Meade, Pathe; "Bunk" McLaughlin, Pathe, and Harry Muster, of Paramount.

The coming of the Western men was heralded by telegrams delivered to all the local folks bidding them for breakfast at the Adolphus hotel on arrival of the train from the "Sunset Trail." The party was a merry one, and the reports on conditions were all optimistic. Mr. Alarcon is very sanguine as to the future in Mexico, declaring that a great improvement is already to be noted.

R. A. Marrow Will Aid Manager Cliff.

Dallas.—Ralph A. Marrow has been named assistant manager Dallas branch of the Mutual, and Manager Cliff Reid declares business is bully, thank you. New contracts recently closed have included the Prince theater, at Houston (Epstein Amusement Company), for exclusive Mutual releases for a week's run; Byars opera house, Fort Worth, four days a week with Mutuals, and the New Royal theater, Waco (Mr. Santegas), which opened with Mutuals.

The New Queen Theater Begins.

Dallas, Tex.—Manager John DeStefano of the Hulsey Queen theater, believes all this talk about Friday being a hoodoo day is piffle. He reopened the new Queen theater on Friday, February 1, with the Metro feature "Blue Jeans," and the opening was most auspicious and to big business.

The new Queen is a study in lavender—its decorations are exquisite and the provisions for its patrons' comfort are almost innumerable. There's a rest room for the men folk as well as the ladies; there's a smokers' mezzanine floor, there's a brand new thousand dollar mirror screen and a particularly fine organ. The theater was burned out some months ago, but its concrete and steel structure permitted quick rejuvenation.

"Tom Sawyer" Pleasing Texans.

Dallas.—Jack Pickford, in the Paramount "Tom Sawyer," with Arbuckle in the new release "Out West," did the biggest business the Old Mill theater has known in weeks, during the week ending January 26. It was a mighty happy thought, picturizing of the famous old river stories of America's greatest humorist. All over the house the observant one heard chuckles from ancient mariners who'd probably been in a picture theater but half a dozen times in their lives. They'd all been Tom Sawyers. It is safe to say that subsequent releases of the famous humorist's never-dying stories will mean additional big receipts.

Matinee Film Company Opens Office.

Dallas.—The Matinee Film Company, Louis Baxley, Will Pulitzer and William Underwood, handling Hart and Sennett-Keystone reissues, is an addition to Dallas exchange row.

Lieut. Tetersek Visits in Uniform.

Dallas.—Lieutenant Tetersek, 133rd Field Artillery, Camp Bowie, Ft. Worth, visited film friends in the Dallas district recently. The lieutenant was formerly with the Dallas Mutual branch, and is back in a uniform as if to his first love. He saw service in the Philippines during the Spanish war under Capt. (now general) Greble, commandant at Camp Bowie.

Kansas City News Letter

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Kansas City Exchanges Report Prosperity.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Although the week of January 20 was said to be one of depression for the Kansas City exhibitors, Kansas City exchanges thrived.

To be more specific the local Mutual office reports $6,000 worth of business on the picture, "The Planter."

W. E. Troug, manager of the World office, announces that the office is being swamped following the World's offer of a free picture or pictures equal in number to those regularly contracted for. He says that the office has been flooded with contracts and inquiries as to contracts.

B. A. Lucas, manager of the United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, announces that the pictures, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay," and "The Belgian," have been booked in every town of over 10,000 population in his territory covering the states of Iowa, Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, and part of Missouri.

A similar statement comes from the Hoffman Foursquare office in regard to the picture, "The Eagle's Eye." Goldwyn announces contracts with the Kansas towns of Emporia, Wichita, Hutchinson, and Great Bend, with Fort Dodge and Sioux City, Iowa, and with Columbus, Nebraska, all of which were secured during the last week.

The other exchanges report good business, so it is obvious that the aforementioned depression is of no consequence to the money making exchanges here.

Fatal Accident in Exchange Office.

Kansas City.—Joseph Howe, who for the last year has been shipping clerk at the Kansas City Vitagraph office, met his death by a fall into the elevator shaft of the Boley building, in which the Vitagraph exchange is located. Mr. Howe had run the elevator to the floor of the exchange, and had left it with the door open while he went into the office. Returning to the elevator in the dark corridor he plunged into the shaft, for some one had moved the elevator to the floor above and left the door open. The accident occured at about nine o'clock the evening of January 22. His funeral was held January 26. He was one of the oldest men in point of service in the Vitagraph office.

Oil Paintings for Lobby Displays.

Kansas City.—The Kansas City Universal office is having two oil paintings made for each release out of the Kansas City office on the regular weekly program. These paintings are about four feet by five feet, and portray some scene in the picture. They will be used as advance advertising. There have been pictures made for about ten or twelve releases, and they will continue to be made indefinitely. L. B. Douglas, assistant manager and publicity manager of the office, is in charge of the work.

A. H. McLaughlin New Select Manager.

Kansas City.—A. H. McLaughlin has succeeded W. H. Bell as manager of the Kansas City office of the Select Pictures. He comes from the Cincinnati Select office, where he was manager. He took up his work here January 21. This is one of the busiest offices in Kansas City, and incidentally one of the most attractive offices.

Mr. Bell had been with the Select company since the opening of the office here. He has been made manager of the St. Louis office of Paramount-Artcraft, and will leave for St. Louis in a few days.

V. E. Simes Local Mutual Camera Man.

Kansas City.—V. E. Simes, one of the owners of the Enterprise Motion Picture Company, has been selected to be cameraman for the Kansas City division of the Mutual Screen Telegram. As this new product of the Mutual is put out twice weekly, and as its material is gathered by cameramen in all cities over 100,000 population thus furnishing keen competition, it is certain that this work will keep Mr. Simes very busy. His company is getting a great amount of commercial work in this territory.

M. J. Frisch Takes Charge in Oklahoma.

Oklahoma City, Okla.—M. J. Frisch has arrived here from Des Moines, Ia., to become branch manager of the Pathe exchange, and has announced that the company will erect a fireproof one-story building at Hudson and Reno avenues.

A. D. Flintom Back from New York.

Kansas City.—A. D. Flintom, president of the Kansas City Feature Film Company, and district manager for the Famous Players Lasky Corporation, has returned from New York City, where he went to attend a meeting of district managers of that corporation.

J. H. Roth Now Manager of the Regent.

Kansas City.—Jack H. Roth, formerly a traveling salesman for the Kansas City Feature Film and the Jewel, has been made manager of Frank Newman's Regent theater here. He succeeds Samuel Frobstein, who has been given charge of the cashiers of the Newman theaters.

Among Kansas and Missouri Theaters.

Junction City, Kan.—The new national army theater (for moving pictures), built on the Zone at Camp Funston, will soon be opened by Manager Joe Silverman. The theater is one of the largest and finest in the Middle West. The building is 92½ by 92½ feet, and the seating capacity is over 2,000.

Burton, Kan.—A. A. Dick has bought Clyde Combe's interest in the picture show and will conduct the show in the Opera House.

Galena, Kan.—F. E. Martin, Kansas City, with a view to building a modern theater here. He has returned to Kansas City to take the matter up with associates.

Council Grove, Kan.—The new Stella opera house now under construction will be opened to the public sometime in April. W. R. Bratton, formerly of Burlingame, is the manager. Mr. Bratton has been in the picture business at Burlingame for the past ten years.

Iola, Kan.—W. W. Weldon, manager of the Grand theater, has sold his lease on the theater to H. R. Barker, Minneapolis, Minn.

Parsons, Kan.—The Elks theater has been sold to S. D. Newton, Miami, Okla.

Cherryvale, Kan.—A. G. Henrikson has bought the Star theater.

Quinter, Kan.—The Electric theater has been opened to the public, Will Friend, manager.

Burr Oak, Kan.—The picture show has been moved into the Fadely building and will open again in a short time.

Elvins, Mo.—The Electric theater will be discontinued except on Saturday nights until further notice.

Belleville, Kan.—The White Way theater has been sold to G. A. Chapin.

Ottawa, Kan.—Earl Van Hyning, former owner of the Drexel theater at Coffeyville, has traded for the Pastime theater here. Mr. Van Hyning will install some new equipment and make other improvements.

Oklahoma Theater Briefs.

Waurika, Okla.—Eugene Mudd has bought two new motion picture machines of the latest model for the Empress theater.

Henrietta, Okla.—The Pickford theater was destroyed by a recent fire.

Duncan, Okla.—A recent fire completely destroyed the Duncan opera house, together with all of the contents, entailing a loss of about $1,000.

Stillwater, Okla.—L. Van Court of Dallas, Tex., has bought the Alamo theater. It will be closed for repairs and will reopen under the name of the Garden theater.

Edmond, Okla.—W. Z. Spearman, of Ryan, has purchased the Gem theater from Mr. Belstrom and has taken charge.

Duncan, Okla.—The opera house was completely destroyed by fire recently. No insurance was carried.

Cherokee, Okla.—A slight fire occurred in the Palace theater recently.

Middle West Theaters and Exhibitors.

Afton, Ia.—Hugh Fleming has bought the Palace theater and will conduct a moving picture show.

Corydon, Ia.—C. B. Barreth has sold his interest in the Auditorium and American theaters to his partner, E. J. Hamlin.

Anita, Ia.—Fire, Jan. 12, destroyed the Hood opera house at a loss of $10,000.

Milford, Ia.—Harry Brumbly has sold the Royal theater to Cecil Waterman.

Clarinda, Ia.—John Waller has bought the Swan theater.

What Cheer, Ia.—The Eureka picture show has been sold to some Oklahoma parties who are going to remodel it.

Canton, S. D.—Floyd J. Cooper is now the manager of the Empress theater and is conducting a moving picture show.

Beach, N. D.—The Bijou theater in this city has been sold to Cowee & Manning of Wibaux.

Santa Fe, N. M.—The Liberty Theater Company of Silver City has been chartered with a capital stock of $25,000 by H. J. McGrath, John A. Shipley and Lee H. Ellis.

Leileville, Ill.—A new brick and stone theater will be erected here at a cost of $40,000. R. C. Kirsch, architect.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Signal Amusement Company will erect Liberty theater on Broad street. Four-story, fireproof, steel and concrete throughout. Seating capacity about 2,100, to cost $40,000 to $50,000.

With Southwest Exhibitors.

Little Rock, Ark.—Fire which broke out Jan. 14 destroyed the south half of the Matthews building, causing a loss of over $100,000, the Princess theater being damaged to the extent of $4,000.

Gallup, N. M.—The B. & M. Amusement Company has been incorporated with a capital of $5,000 by Dominick Rollie, Florence Rollie and Fred McCoy.

Lonoke, Ark.—A recent fire damaged the Magnet theater to the extent of about $1,000.

Santa Fe, N. M.—The Paris theater has been sold by Nathan Soloman to James W. Proves of Albuquerque.

Tucumari, N. M.—The Hurley & Hawkins Company is building a modern theater on Main street.

Kosse, Tex.—L. A. McCollim, manager of the Dreamland theater, is considering closing up the theater for the rest of the winter.

Indianapolis Theaters Giving Full Pay

Fuelless Tuesdays Make No Difference to Employes—Good Business on Mondays Makes It Possible for Theaters to Be Generous.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Theaters in Indianapolis, although closed on Tuesdays, appear to be making up for lost time on Mondays. Reports from a number of the downtown motion picture theaters indicate that the box-office receipts for the holiday Mondays are going to be even bigger than the receipts on other regulation holidays.

The exhibitors of the city express themselves as well pleased with the change from Monday to Tuesday, affording them the opportunity of reaping the benefits of the regular holiday business. The order, as it stands now, will not seriously affect the exhibitors. At any rate all of them appear to be more than willing to do all in their power to conserve fuel.

Monday's business throughout the banned district was so large that it was made possible to pay salaries for full time rather than dock for Tuesday.

Actors, stage hands and all employees of Indianapolis theaters will receive their full pay as a result of notification of the action of the United Managers' Protective Association, a national organization of theater managers, to grant full pay, which reached the city last week. Ben V. Barton, president of the Central Amusement Company, operating the Lyric, Isis and Alhambra theaters, announced that attaches of these places will receive full pay. The Isis and Alhambra are motion picture theaters and the Lyric is a combined vaudeville and motion picture house. Other exhibitors of the city will take similar action, it is said.

Fuelless Days Throughout Indiana.

Kokomo, Ind.—The Howard County Fuel Commission ordered the theaters of Kokomo closed for a period of five days, extending from Friday, January 18, to Wednesday, January 23.

"It was like taking the soup out of the dinner on a meatless day," said John Silk, proprietor of the Star theater, in discussing the inability of the shows to remain open last Saturday. "Saturday is the best day in the week for exhibitors, yet while I do not suppose the closing order hit any other business as hard as it did that of motion picture theaters, I am glad to say that we were willing to make the sacrifice. Although it meant the cutting off of considerable income, there was enough American in us to make the sacrifice without a whimper."

As soon as the exhibitors of Kokomo learned that the ban would be lifted on Wednesday they took special precautions to arrange for especially good programs on the first day of their reopening. As a consequence all of the theaters had excellent programs and in most cases drew unusually large crowds. It was evident from the crowds that the people of Kokomo simply have to have their motion pictures.

In Richmond the theaters resumed "business as usual" Wednesday, January 23, after a five-day period of holidays and near holidays decreed by the county fuel administrator. Business houses, their proprietors chafing under the many enforced layoffs, opened at the usual hour and were permitted to continue open until the customary closing time.

The Washington theater and several of the other motion picture theaters opened for business Wednesday evening, all drawing large crowds. The Murray theater did not open until Thursday because of delayed films, and the Murrette did not open until Saturday afternoon.

At Vincennes the theaters also got quite a jolt from the county fuel administrator, R. S. Jones. The first order was that the motion picture theaters could only remain open from 5 p. m. to 9 p. m. Later this was rescinded and an order was issued compelling them to close on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of each week. They were permitted to remain open Thursday, Friday and Saturday from 2.30 until 9 p. m. All of the orders were rescinded Wednesday, January 23, after it was announced that the crisis in the coal shortage was passed.

In Mishawaka the cold weather and the coal situation have brought about a change of policy at the Lincoln theater. Beginning the week of January 21 no picture will be shown on Mondays as well as "heatless" Tuesdays until further notice. The change in policy will be the means of saving fuel, the management announces, and will also be the means of getting better pictures for the city.

St. Louis News Letter

By Mary Moore, 6035 Kingsbury Block, St. Louis, Mo.

Dupers Send Film to South America.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—An underworld organization has been discovered in operation in St. Louis to steal films, clip their titles and ship them to South America for release there. The plan of the film burglars is to clip from the film all trade marks in the way of titles or perforations, ship the film in its present form to a town somewhere in the state, and let the agents of the organization in this town retitle the film and ship it to South America. The identity of the film is thus destroyed. Another precaution, which is, of course, taken, is to rewrite titles into Spanish or Mexican and issue the film later as an original production.

Joseph Brandt Visits St. Louis.

St. Louis.—Joseph L. Brandt, general manager of the Universal Film Company, was in St. Louis during the week, to inform the local Universal forces on current matters of interest in the film business. He was a guest of local manager G. F. Hennesy.

Theaters Get Easier Fuel Order.

St. Louis.—An appeal made during the week to the State Fuel Administrator by Louis Cella and Frank Tate, owners of a string of theaters, resulted in an abrogation of the closing order in St. Louis, and motion picture houses will henceforth be allowed to remain open on Mondays and until 11 P. M. every night.

E. E. Tally Goes to Pathe.

St. Louis.—Earl E. Tally, assistant manager of the Fox company offices in St. Louis has resigned from that company and has signed up with the local Pathe. D. M. Thomas, manager of the Fox office, has appointed Patrick Garyn, formerly with the booking forces of the Keith circuit, as assistant manager.

S. R. Kent of General in Town.

St. Louis.—Sidney R. Kent, sales-manager for General Film, with headquarters in New York, was a visitor in St. Louis during the week. He was piloted through the byways of this city by Henry Elder, local manager.

Opera House in Herron Burns.

Herron, Ill.—The Grand opera house at Herron, Ill., an Illinois town about 20 miles from St. Louis and in the local distributing area, burned to the ground during the week, and with it a copy of "Draft 258."

Billboard Rates in Frisco Take a Big Jump

Local Exhibitors Concerned Over the Cost of Out-Door Advertising—Newspaper Rates Also High—May Back New Billboard Company.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The high cost of advertising and presenting moving pictures promises to take another upward flight, local billboard interests having announced a huge increase in their rates. Exhibitors, however, are not meeting the new schedule without a fight, and unless the out-door advertising concerns make immediate concessions they will probably find competition in the field, or a change on the part of theater interests to other advertising mediums. Under the existing rate exhibitors pay $1.40 for the posting of the twenty-eight sheet stand, but under the new schedule this service will cost them $3.00.

Billboard advertising is probably used more extensively in this city than in any other community of its size in the world. While there is at least five times the floor space in the eight square miles burned over by the fire of 1906 than there was before this disaster there are still many vacant lots affording unusual facilities for billboards. Newspaper rates are considered unreasonably high here, and this has assisted in turning the attention of theater owners to billboards to secure the desired publicity.

When the increased prices for out-door advertising were announced a meeting of members of the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California was held, this being attended by Van B. Clement, of the Portola theater; Harry David, of the California theater; Leo Weinberger, of the Strand theater; J. A. Partington, of the Imperial theater; Howard Sheehan, of the Rialto theater, and George A. Bovyer, a visitor from St. Paul, Minn. A committee consisting of Norman A. Eisner, secretary of the organization; J. A. Partington, and Howard Sheehan was appointed to confer with a committee from the legitimate theaters in regard to the course to be pursued. One plan that has been put forward is to give financial backing to a new bill-posting concern, while another is to eliminate this form of advertising and to concentrate on newspaper publicity.

Theaters Mark for Robbers and Swindlers.

San Francisco.—Moving picture houses seem to have been made a special target of late for bandits and light-fingered gentry and promoters of schemes designed to drain tills without returning full value. Four prominent houses on Market street recently lost $10 each when their cashiers gave up perfectly good money in exchange for sections of pipe wrapped to simulate coin. On the evening of January 22 a bandit appeared at the box office of the Jewel theater on upper Market street, thrust a gun in the face of Mrs. Reva Wilkerson, the cashier, who was counting the receipts of the evening, siezed a canvas bag containing $117, and disappeared in a vacant lot near the Civic Center pursued by the doorman of the house. The man wore no mask, and his actions did not arouse the suspicions of any of the passers-by.

Ten merchants in the Park-Presidio District were victimized recently by a young man who induced them to purchase theater tickets which were to be given to customers as an advertising medium. When these were presented at the La Bonita theater, at Clement street and Twenty-third avenue, holders were advised that they were worthless, and the fraud was uncovered. A young man had visited the merchants, and offered one thousand tickets to the moving picture theater and a three months' advertisement on the screen for $3. The tickets were to be distributed to customers, and were to be good for admission to the show on Wednesday upon presentation at the box office with five cents. A window card was also supplied the merchants.

Davis Bros. Make Extensive Purchases.

San Francisco.—Davis Bros. recently made extensive purchases of films on a state rights basis, those acquired including Rainey's "African Hunt," Ince's "Battle of Gettysburg," "Neptune's Daughter," "Shore Acres," "Michael Strogoff," "The Jungle," "David Copperfield," "Old Curiosity Shop," "Rip Van Winkle," "Wrath of the Gods," "The Ragged Earl," "In Mizzoura," "Dan," with Lew Dockstader; "Little Lord Fauntleroy," and "Captivating Mary Carstairs," with Norma Talmadge.

New Division Manager Visits.

San Francisco.—W. H. Cree, formerly branch manager at Los Angeles for the General Film, has been made Western division manager, and was here recently on a trip that will include all the branches in this territory. He expressed much satisfaction with the manner in which Harry Schmidt, the local manager, was placing the Paralta productions both in town and in the surrounding territory.

Sam Levin Inspects Theaters.

San Francisco.—Sam Levin, who is preparing to erect a large suburban house in this city, is making a very careful inspection of all the finest theaters here to secure ideas to be incorporated in the new theater. He also made a trip to Los Angeles recently for the purpose of looking over some of the new houses there, and will shortly leave on a tour of inspection through the East.

Sol Lesser Ready for Work Again.

San Francisco.—Sol Lesser, of the All-Star Feature Distributors, Inc., has recovered sufficiently from his recent operation for appendicitis to leave the hospital, and at this writing is about ready to resume his office duties again. He has recently purchased "Raffles," featuring John Barrymore, for California, Arizona, and Nevada. H. Carney, formerly of the local Fox office, is now covering the Coast territory in the interests of the All-Star Feature Distributors, Inc.

Morris Epstein Returns to Former Job.

San Francisco.—Morris Epstein, who for three years was connected with the booking department of the California Film exchange, but who has more recently been with the Consolidated Film Corporation and the Peerless Film Service, has resumed his former duties with the California Film exchange.

New Salesman for the World Film.

San Francisco.—J. L. Souther, formerly with the Vitagraph at Minneapolis, has been lured to this city by the perfect climate, and has joined the selling force of the World Film on the road.

Weekly Makes Big Hit.

San Francisco.—Great interest is being taken in Gaumont Weekly No. 2, recently shown at the Portola theater, the pictures taken at Mare Island, Cal., which made up a large part of the reel, being pronounced one of the finest war preparedness films that has been made in the West. The pictures were made by Cameraman Eugene W. Castle, who spent three days at the naval base securing the scenes that go to make "Jack Tar in the Making." A number of original maneuvers are shown, a unique feature being a manual of arms drill participated in by 4,000 men. Although many pictures have been taken here since the entry of the United States into the war, Commandant Harry George declares that this is the most interesting of all, and has arranged for a special showing of the film, which will be witnessed by all the men who took part in the drill.

Turner & Dahnken's Movie Emporium.

San Francisco.—When the Turner & Dahnken circuit moved to its three-story building at 134-146 Golden Gate avenue a few months ago the increased space at its command was such that its stock of supplies was greatly increased, and many new lines have been added. Not only is it now carrying projection machines, motor-generator sets, carbons, and full operating room equipment, but it has tickets, music rolls, musical instruments, lobby frames, janitors' supplies, chairs, slides, in fact everything used in a moving picture theater. This branch of the business is conducted under the name of the Movie Emporium, and is in charge of A. B. Crawford.

One of the most interesting of the departments, and one that is growing rapidly, is the music roll section. This was started with a library of four hundred rolls from the accumulation of the T. & D. theaters, and has grown until there are more than 20,000 rolls in the exchange department alone, with many more that are offered for sale. A charge of ten cents a roll is made for all music exchange here regardless of its selling price. A rental plan is also followed, a charge of ten cents a roll being made for a period of ten days, while rolls are sold outright at prices from 15 cents to $1.25. The exchange department is becoming widely known, and shipments are being made to points throughout the Pacific Coast territory.

Another innovation has been the establishment of a free employment bureau. Those desiring employment in theaters or film exchanges file their wants on blanks prepared for the purpose, while employers are requested to state their needs. Many positions have been filled through this agency since the plan was inaugurated. The management of the Movie Emporium expresses the belief that it can furnish everything needed in a moving picture theater, including the help, and Eph. Asher, of the film exchange department, declares that he has the attractions that will guarantee the audience and the necessary jingle in the box office.

Triangle Adds Booker.

San Francisco.—Business at the local branch has increased to such an extent that another booker has been found necessary, and the services of Miss Myrtle Hodkinson, formerly with the Progressive company of Los Angeles, have been secured. Miss Hodkinson is a sister of W. W. Hodkinson, and has won signal success in the branch of the film business to which she is devoting her attention.

Strand Has Big Week.

San Francisco.—The Strand theater enjoyed a heavy patronage during the first week it was under new ownership, the leading attraction being Alma Reuben, the San Francisco girl, in "I Love You." Pietro Marino continues in charge of the orchestra, but a new organist has been secured in William E. MacClymont.

Berkeley Theater Reopened.

Berkeley, Cal.—The Berkeley theater, closed for several week, was reopened on the evening of January 25 under the management of Harry Gilbert. The opening attraction was "My Unmarried Wife." This theater has been thoroughly renovated, and many needed changes made. The new management plans to make changes of program on Sundays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

San Francisco Briefs.

The San Jose Hippodrome Company has been incorporated here, with a capital stock of $50,000, by D. Greenan, H. Zanetin, and E. E. Smith.

The name of the Nixon theater on Polk street is to be changed, and a prize of $10 is being offered by the new owner, Sam Sax, for an appropriate name.

The Fremont theater at Menlo Park was opened on January 19 under the management of E. Fried. Music is furnished by an American Fotoplayer.

M. J. Cohen, of the George Kleine system, recently made a trip through the territory north of this city to visit exhibitors and learn of their requirements.

Walter Preddey recently furnished a moving picture outfit to J. M. Deeds, of the Red Bluff opera house, who will use it in giving shows in the small towns around Red Bluff, Cal.

Northern California Notes.

Corning, Cal.—Guy V. Fleming has opened a moving picture theater.

Guerneville, Cal.—The Guerneville theater has been reopened by L. S. Murphy. One show a week will be given at first.

Taft, Cal.—The new house of Claude Langley will be opened about the first of March.

Oakland, Cal.—Crane Wilbur, former moving picture actor, has taken over the Macdonough theater, and will present a stock company.

Liberty Theater Celebrates Anniversary.

SPOKANE, WASH.—The Liberty theater celebrated its third anniversary of its opening the week of January 21.

Douglas Fairbanks appeared the first part of the week in "Reaching for the Moon," and the Liberty patrons appreciated "Douglas" as an adventurer in a far country. "The Kitchen Lady," the comedy which was shown in connection with the Fairbanks picture, delighted the audiences, as it was a scream from beginning to end. "The Public Be Damned," featuring Mary Fuller and Charles Richman, was shown the remainder of the anniversary week.

New brown velvet carpets were purchased for the theater. The ushers appeared in new brown uniforms trimmed in silver, and two suits of bright red with gold braid were added to the wardrobe of the small colored porters. A surprise for the patrons was the addition of another unit to the Wurlitzer Hope-Jones unit orchestra, and special music was a big feature of the anniversary week.

Some Notes About Pictures.

Spokane.—Two Spokane exhibitors withdrew pictures they were presenting after one performance the week of January 20. They were Dr. H. S. Clemmer, who withdrew Eva Tanguay in "The Wild Girl" after the first day, and said it was "a misnomer," and J. W. Allender, who withdrew "The Planter," starring Tyrone Power, after the first day and substituted "The German Curse in Russia." Dr. Clemmer ran Jack Pickford and Louise Huff in "Jack and Jill" two days earlier than its original announcement to take the place of "The Wild Girl."

"The change from 'The Planter' to the Russian war pictures was made for two reasons," said J. W. Allender at the Auditorium. "The Mutual Film exchange of Seattle failed in its contract to deliver the picture in time for me to run it at the matinee advertised Sunday afternoon, and misrepresented the time of shipment when I used the long-distance telephone to find out about the delay.

"The principal reason for the change, however, was because Mr. Power's picture had been much mutilated between the time it was edited and first offered for inspection in Spokane and the receipt of the film at the Auditorium, January 20. There can be no reflection on Mr. Power in this matter, as I know from previous experience that his pictures have been popular, and it is conceded that neither the actor nor the author was properly presented in the film that came here from the exchange."

Portland, Ore., Suburban Theaters Booming

Six-Cent Car Fares in Rose City Helps Neighborhood Houses Even While the Downtown Theaters Are Showing Splendid Bills.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Predictions made a month or so ago that the Portland suburban theaters were coming into their now again, have come true. Portland's six-cent car fare has undoubtedly had something to do with it because the business impetus in the suburbs has come since the six-cent fare went into effect. On the other hand, it cannot be said that the downtown houses have suffered noticeably. However, the past month has seen especially fine productions in most of Portland's big theaters and it is a question how they would do on the same class of pictures as are being shown in the suburbs.

Even the suburban men furthest out are rejoicing over good business. W. E. Lewis, owner of the Scenic theater in the Montaville district, appeared on film row in his auto the other day and declared his business was better than it had ever been before.

William Strahlman, of the Isis, in Sellwood, also reports better business than ever and gives as an example one Tuesday recently, when he broke all attendance records in his theater. The Isis has been established since the beginning of the industry in Portland.

W. W. Kofeldt Returns.

Portland, Ore.—The exhibitors of Oregon will be glad to know that W. W. Kofeldt, undoubtedly the most progressive exchange manager that Pathe has ever had in the Pacific Northwest territory, is again on the job in these parts.

After two months' management of the Minneapolis office, and after Oregon exhibitors had complained about their troubles from long distance shipments from Seattle, the heads of Pathe evidently concluded that Mr. Kofeldt's efforts were needed more in the Pacific Northwest territory than in the middle states, and hence the switch. Mr. Kofeldt says he is glad to be back on the Coast, although his relations with Middle West exhibitors were most pleasant.

Mr. Kofeldt will make his headquarters in Seattle, where he plans to open in the new exchange building on the ground floor by the first of March. He has definitely announced that Pathe will open a subbranch in Portland, with E. R. Simpson in charge, with the title of sub-branch manager, and that some reels will be kept in Portland, with the chances good for the establishment of a real office here again soon. Mr. Simpson will be instructed to form circuits wherever possible in order to reduce express charges to the exhibitor's benefit.

Many Improvements in Oregon Theaters

Portland, Ore.—Reports by visiting road men tell of improvements being made in theaters south of Portland. At North Bend, Oregon, Denny Hull, owner of the Joy theater, is doing some extensive remodeling, contemplating spending several thousand dollars. Bob Marsden, at Marshfield, in the same neighborhood, has installed a Wagner transformer and other projection equipment and firmly believes the business warrants the additional expenditure. O. C. Smith, at Dallas, Ore., is enlarging his stage facilities.

Ilwaco House Nears Completion.

Ilwaco, Wash.—E. R. Saunders, of the Bell theater, reports that his new house will be completed about the first of next month. It is located in a brick building and seats 350.

S. Morton Cohen Gives a Party.

Portland, Ore.—S. Morton Cohen, directing genius of the Strand theater, acted as host at his big showhouse recently, when he gave a party to his theatrical friends. J. J. Parker, of the Majestic theater, who recently returned from a business trip, received most of the honors. Among those present were C. H. Feldman, J. J. Parker, C. E. Couche, Jack Jennings, and their friends. A Dutch lunch was served, and dancing was enjoyed on the big Strand stage.

Fred Simonton Quits General Film.

Portland, Ore.—Fred Simonton, traveling representative for the General Film, has resigned and will soon announce his connection with a new film concern. Mr. Simonton recently returned from a sales trip into eastern Oregon and Idaho for Paralta and reports this service very popular in this territory.

Big Idaho Theater Nears Completion.

Nampa, Idaho.—Herman J. Brown, owner of most of the theaters in Boise, recently took over the Majestic theater here and has been remodeling it. He is making a beautiful show house, installing a balcony and making the seating capacity of the house about a thousand. An organ is being installed, and his expenditures are estimated to be in the neighborhood of $20,000.

Motiograph Representative Here.

Portland, Ore.—W. L. Loudy, special sales representative for the Motiograph Company, has arrived in Portland to spend several weeks. He has just completed a tour of Washington and eastern Oregon and reports good business, especially in eastern Oregon, where everybody seems to have money.

H. C. Wirple Takes Over Ideal.

Portland, Ore.—Henry C. Wirple has taken over the management of the Ideal theater, 24th and Thurman streets, vice Henry Harcke. Mr. Wirple is an old-timer in the show game in Portland, coming here in the pioneer days from Cincinnati. Of late he has been devoting his attention to a chain of theaters in the Willamette valley. Wirple is considered a live man in the business and will undoubtedly make the Ideal a paying house.

Puts Over Patriotic Film.

Portland, Ore.—E. J. Myrick, Liberty theater, recently put over "A Man Without a Country" in good style. He made a beginning of his own for the picture, featuring the American fleet in action, Abe Lincoln, etc., opening with "My Country 'Tis of Thee" slow, then "The Star Spangled Banner."

"Thais" a Distinct Hit.

Portland, Ore.—"Thais" proved a popular attraction at the Majestic during the week of Jan. 19 to 25. Manager J. J. Parker put the picture over with a big advertising campaign, using the society and women's columns of the papers, as well as the moving picture sections, to good advantage.

From Montana.

Butte, Mont.—The Mutual office here will close about Jan. 23. Programs for Mutual exhibitors will be supplied either from Seattle or Denver.

Sheridan, Wyo.—Fred Betzold, Gem theater, is arranging to build a new show house.

Billings, Mont.—A. H. West, Babcock theater, recently was arrested for permitting his waiting line to block traffic. "Come Through" is reported to have been the reason.

Masterpiece Film Buys Jester Comedies.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—B. Amsterdam, of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, reports the purchase of the two-reel Jester comedies featuring Twede-Fan. These releases ought to start about Feb. 15, and one every two weeks thereafter. Mr. Amsterdam intends to start in a big publicity campaign and will give private screening for the benefit of the eastern Pennsylvania exhibitors.

Full Houses on Tuesday the Rule.

Philadelphia—Complying with the orders issued by William Potter, state fuel administrator, all the theaters in this city were "dark" on Tuesday, and resulted in record-breaking attendances for the Monday previous. Several managers were optimistic regarding the ultimate effects of the new order. Some were of the opinion that the increase in business would become more pronounced as the weeks went by, owing to the considerable amount of publicity being given to the theaters through the newspapers.

Making a Theater Attractive to Patrons.

Philadelphia—Sidney Kaufman, manager of the Leader theater, is making a record as one of the most attentive and resourceful managers in the city. Every detail regarding the successful management of the house is faithfully adhered to at all times, and all attendants and ushers are carefully directed regarding their special duties. The consequence is that upon entering the Leader, the patrons find a most inviting theater having an atmosphere of refinement and comfort that always brings them back. Mr. Kaufman is also one of the most popular men in this vicinity and is a member of over twenty clubs, societies and organizations of all sorts.

Records of Films in Philadelphia.

Philadelphia — Clara Kimball Young scored a big hit last week in the new film version of "Shirley Kaye," which has just completed an excellent week's run at the Stanley. "The Spirit of '17," featuring Jack Pickford, was heartily received by the patrons of the Arcadia last week, where it made a strong bid for patriotism.

Mrs. Vernon Castle presented film melodrama at the Victoria last week in "Vengeance is Mine." Mrs. Castle's picture was greatly enjoyed by the spectators.

Constance Talmadge, in a fascinating comedy, called "The Honeymoon," divided honors during the first half of the week. "The Belgian," with Walker Whiteside, completed the entertainment for the week.

"The Birth of a Nation," at the Palace, was the most impressive offering of the week and drew immense crowds up until the very last performance. During the week of Jan. 21 it will be presented at the Allegheny.

Knickerbocker Goes to Films.

Philadelphia—Beginning Jan. 29 the Knickerbocker will commence showing photoplays in lieu of its offering stock plays.

"Les Miserables" Announced at Victoria.

Philadelphia—"Les Miserables," a Wm. Fox production, will have its first presentation in this city at the Victoria theater in the near future, announcement to this effect having just been made by the management.

First Runs of Paralta Booked.

Philadelphia—G. M. Graver, of the Liberty, and H. M. Kendrick, of the Fairmount, have closed with Charles Klang, of the General Film, for the first showing of the new and much-advertised Paralta plays. Both of these theaters are up-to-date photoplay houses which enjoy a large and steady patronage.

Buffalo F. I. L. M. Club Elects Officers

J. G. Montgomery Chosen President—Other Offices Filled—Credit Bureau Established—Co-operations with Other F. I. L. M. Clubs.

By J. A. McGuire, 157 N. Elmwood Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—The F. I. L. M. Club of Buffalo held its annual meeting at the office of Mark W. Comstock, counsel for the club, Monday afternoon, Jan. 28. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, T. C. Montgomery, Triangle; vice-president, E. J. Hayes, General; treasurer, C. A. Taylor, Metro; secretary, Mr. Charles, of the Victor. Directors: Messrs. Montgomery, Hayes, Taylor, Charles, Mack, Green and Hopkins.

It was decided to establish a credit bureau for the protection of the exchanges represented in the club. Attorney Comstock was elected general counsel for the organization. The members will hold some social gatherings throughout the year.

"We will act in hearty co-operation with the F. I. L. M. clubs of New York City, Pittsburgh and other cities," said Mr. Comstock.

Pathe Notes Big Contract from Strand.

A regular gloom-dispeller is H. H. Buxbaum, special Eastern representative of the Pathe, who was a Buffalo caller. He said he had found good business at the various Pathe exchanges, which he had visited. The Pathe, Buffalo, office has closed a contract with Earl Crabb, manager of the Strand theater, Buffalo, who will have first-run on the Pathe plays. "This is one of the biggest contracts made in this territory this year," said Mr. Buxbaum. "The Strand will show all the Pathe plays three days a week, and most of them for week runs. Everything was speeding up in Minneapolis, Pittsburgh and Washington, which I visited lately."

Mr. Buxbaum was tendered a complimentary dinner at the Radisson hotel, Minneapolis. All the exchange managers of that city were present.

J. W. Bengough, formerly assistant manager of the Strand theater, Buffalo, has joined the Pathe forces in this city.

A. L. Skinner has been appointed Pathe road representative.

Business by the Thermometer.

Buffalo.—John A. Pferd, properitor of the Pastime, at Grant street and Forest avenue, Buffalo, and a pioneer exhibitor here, says: "The slump in the business is only temporary. In our neighborhood, if the weather is severe, the people stay at home, and as soon as the temperature rises they go to the shows. The only exception to this rule is the case of some patrons who say they have not heat at home and like to come to the theater to get thawed out. Fortunately, we ordered coal in the spring and received it last summer. We have two ten-cent nights and the rest of them are five-centers. We are located in a middle-class neighborhood and give our customers shows that are uniformly good. Occasionally we give them a high-class feature to break the monotony. These are a gamble during the severe weather."

G. H. Christoffers Heads United Film.

Buffalo.—G. H. Christoffers has been appointed manager of the United Film Service Corporation in this territory. He will handle important independent features. His offices are at 84 Exchange street, Buffalo.

Buffalo Exchanges Open in Cold.

Buffalo.—The Goldwyn exchange, Buffalo, was heatless and lightless Monday, January 28. The Mutual Life office building, which furnishes heat and light to the exchange, observed the "heatless day" ruling to the letter, and the Goldwyn headquarters followed the same course. G. A. Hickey, Goldwyn manager, used an old-fashioned barn lantern "to brighten the corners." The place was so cold that his staff was allowed to go home. All the other exchanges were open on Monday the same as the theaters. A. J. Amm, formerly assistant manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, has been appointed Goldwyn road representative.

Grand Theater Scene of Big Benefit.

Westfield, N. Y.—The Grand theater, Westfield, was filled with a patriotic audience on the evening of January 24. The proceeds of the show went to the local Red Cross auxiliary through the courtesy of William F. Hopper, who bought the entire house for the night.

Felix Mendelsohn Comes to Buffalo.

Buffalo.—Felix Mendelsohn, road representative, has been transferred from the World's Chicago office to the Buffalo exchange. He was formerly a road man for the World in this territory. There is a demand for the World's new picture, "The Cross Bearer."

Imported Pure Water from States.

Niagara Falls, Ont.—The moving picture theaters of Niagara Falls, Ont., are having their troubles because the water supply of that city has been frozen up with the intense cold. The exhibitors and other business men asked for a temporary supply of water from the American side of the cataract. One thousand feet of fire hose was therefore stretched across the lower suspension bridge to convey a supply of pure water to the suffering Canadians. Thus the boilers of the Canadian theaters escaped going waterless. The international courtesy was appreciated.

Thomas Bandes Getting Along.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Thomas Bandes has been appointed booker and assistant manager of the Select Pictures of Buffalo. He was formerly connected with his father, A. Sonin, one of Brooklyn's leading exhibitors, operating the Lincoln theater there. In October, 1916, Mr. Bandes took a position with the Rogson Film, Buffalo, and was with that firm until it retired from business. This live-wire young man is now a member of the Selznick staff in this city. He is a top-notch booster of Select pictures..

MORE PHILADELPHIA NEWS.

Notes from Eastern Pennsylvania.

Philadelphia.—J. Hesser Walraven, director of publicity of the Paralto productions, was a visitor here last week and held a consultation regarding future advertising with Mr. Samuels, manager of the General Film. Charles Clang has signed up the Liberty and the Fairmount theaters for the first showing of Paralta plays.

Philadelphia.—Oscar Morgan, sales manager of the Paramount-Artcraft local exchange, has just returned from a ten days' visit to the Washington exchange branch, where he installed some new systems. While down there he was the guest of the Washington Press Club.

The Stanley Advertising Co., of Philadelphia, took motion pictures of the Adams Chapter of The American Red Cross, who make their headquarters at Gimbel Stores, and are exhibiting the pictures throughout the city and state. The members are shown doing their bit, knitting sweaters and many other things.

Palmerton.—C. La Barre, of the Park theater, was a visitor to Quaker City last week and reports favorable business conditions. There is a big opportunity awaiting some live builder who will put up some 500 homes or more to take care of the overflowing population.

Critical Reviews and Comments

"DODGING A MILLION."

Goldwyn Presents Mabel Normand in a Bright Comedy by Edgar Selwyn and A. M. Kennedy.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"DODGING A MILLION" is a genuine photoplay with plenty of zip in spite of its theatrical leanings. Selwyn and Kennedy have provided an entertainment so good in itself that the rest is purely a question of suitable types and capable handling irrespective of bright and shining stars. The types are exceptionally good straight through, and the handling entirely satisfactory, except in an occasional tendency to stage grouping. The one bad shot is a tiny one, a subtitle in which the author talks to the audience. We are supposed to be watching events that are taking place not being told about them. The story is a fantastic comedy of error woven around a delightful characterization, a young lady of serene and joyous temperament who drifts along amiably, not trying to spin the world around on her little finger, equally satisfied as a helper in a fashion shop or as an unexpected heiress to a great fortune, and Mabel, of Keystone fame, fits the role.

Not burdened with either responsibility or gray matter the fashion shop helper has an impulse to see life on eight dollars a week, and leaves the shop secretly in borrowed finery. She goes to "Shurry's" in a cab, and falls into a series of adventures cleverly associated with the son of a wealthy corset-maker, a young man socially rejected because of his father's occupation. The bringing together of these two is a happy idea, and admirably handled by the authors. There is an air of mystery added by the strange conduct of a Signor Rodrigues, interpreted with skill by J. Herbert Frank. This strange individual is the agent of a vast estate left to the irresponsible young lady, and he is really watching over her conduct to determine if she exhibits sufficient strength of character to handle so great a fortune. Her experiences are swift and bewildering, but she does not lose her head, and there is a happy ending to it all.

Mabel Normand is in many respects a surprise. She has the ease and repose of a screen actress long trained to requirements of the photoplay, and she seems to have envolved a new personality besides, but she is the same bubbling Mabel as a rule, and, as such, she is very acceptable, a veritable artist at times, unafraid to give her feelings free expression at all times. The story met with approval at a Strand presentation, which crowded the house.

"FLARE-UP SAL."

Paramount Presents Dorothy Dalton in a Story of Border Life by J. G. Hawks.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"FLARE-UP SAL" is the story of a girl who accompanies a small group of emigrants from a farm in Missouri to the gold regions. At a stop over in a disreputable mining town her adopted father gambles away the family outfit, and Sal redeems it by giving herself as a pledge to the gambler, with the understanding that she shall dance in his joint, but that no man shall lay hands on her. Meanwhile a thief who has been robbing stage-coach passengers wounds a clergyman, and takes his clothes away. He disguises himself as the clergyman, and visits the mining town for the purpose of having a look at Flare-Up Sal. He has no great difficulty in persuading the decent element of the town that he is the "gospel sharp" they expect to guide them. He is also called a "sky pilot" and a "devil dodger" in the subtitles. The rest of the story is concerned with the rescue of the dance-hall inmate, Flare-Up Sal, by the ex-thief, whose disguise leads him to feel the error of his ways. There is a fight between the thief and the gambler who runs the dance hall, during which the place is set on fire, and, in conclusion, the reformed thief marries the perfectly good dance-hall inmate.

Such is the story designed to show the talents of Miss Dorothy Dalton, a bright and interesting personality of larger capability than opportunity. She makes a very attractive Flare-Up Sal, but she does nothing new. The performance is a repetition of previous stories, almost destitute of characterization, except that of Tin-Cup Casey, a hopeless drunk of the comical kind. Miss Dalton's own charm and some good directing enabled the story to hold fairly well at the Rialto, but the third element, a story of definite aim and vital theme, is lacking.

"THE BARGAIN."

W. H. Productions Co. Presents W. S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in Six-Reel Revised Version of Early Success.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

BACK in the days when William S. Hart was becoming known as a screen actor of unique and telling power, "The Bargain" was produced by Thomas H. Ince, and it went far to establishing the actor in his present position as a star. This six-reel melodrama has most of the primitive virtues. In the first place the ground over which it treads was virgin soil, so far as the screen experience of the leading player was concerned. Most important of all it offered him the opportunity to do the sort of thing he does best—the impersonating of a reckless and unlettered male being whose conception of right and wrong is badly jumbled until he develops a pure love for a good woman, and his moral regeneration is advanced with rapid and complete success. Added to this, "The Bargain" has the advantages of a simple and direct story that has been transferred to the screen by Director Ince with keen insight into its dramatic requirements and careful observance of the correct local color.

The plot of "The Bargain" demands that there shall be something doing all the time. The strenuousness of its action prevents too close a study of its moral standards, and also thwarts any tendency toward sickly sentiment. The exploit which gives the picture its title is not at all unlikely when the conditions surrounding it are weighed. The character of Bud Walsh, the sheriff, makes it possible that after gambling away the money he has recovered from the ex-bandit the officer of the law should be only too glad to give Walsh the chance to steal it back for him. It is even easy to understand his state of mind when he carefully locks Walsh in the hotel room after handcuffing him to the bed-post, and leaves wide open a window that would easily lead to freedom once the manacled man were free of the bed. All sheriffs, whether of the early Western or modern Eastern variety, have not been or are not now perfect examples of honesty and penetration. The main point about this photoplay is that most spectators will believe in and sympathize with its outcome, and it is for this result that its story is told on the screen.

It is hardly necessary to enter into a detailed review of William S. Hart's performance of the bandit-hero. It is common knowledge that he has made such screen characters his own, and is practically without a rival in the particular field he has chosen for himself. Not that he is the only screen actor who can impersonate the reformed bad-man, but his sort of mottled hero bears the distinctive Hart brand.

Clara Williams, as Nell Brent, the ranch-raised heroine, is the genuine article and not the Broadway soubrette that occasionally does duty for a girl of this type. F. Frank Burke as Bud Walsh, Barney Sherry as Phil Brent, James Dowling as Rev. Joshua Wilkes are valuable members of the cast.

"BROKEN TIES."

Three-Star Cast in Five-Part World Melodrama Includes June Elvidge, Montagu Love and Arthur Ashley.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

MELODRAMATIC situations abound in "Broken Ties," a five-part World production, written by Woodbridge Clapp, and starring June Elvidge, Montagu Love and Arthur Ashley. The last-named actor also directed the picture. The author has taken full advantage of the freedom allowed makers of melodrama, and has built up the complications around a murder case with more regard to their leading up to the climax he desires than to any other consideration. The chief motive is one that has served both the novel and stage fiction faithfully and well. The heroine has negro blood in her veins, her father having been shipwrecked on an island inhabited by blacks and became the husband of the chief's daughter. The girl is reared by a wealthy friend of her father's, after she hears her parent confess on his deathbed the facts about her birth.

The girl's name is Corinne La Force and she falls madly in love with Arnold Curtis, the nephew of her guardian, Henry Hasbrook, who does not approve of the match. Hasbrook tries to keep Arnold away from Corinne and when he thinks he is not succeeding starts to write his nephew a letter telling him the truth about his ward. Corinne comes upon him before the letter is finished and stabs him to death. Arnold has entangled himself in an affair with a married woman and she and her mother-in-law are both suspected of the murder. Arnold is arrested for the crime, however, and believing that the married woman with whom his name is connected is guilty, he takes the crime upon himself. Before he can complete his false confession, Corinne, who still loves him, springs up, cries out that she struck the blow and buries the dagger in her own breast.

The strongest acting part in the picture is Corinne, played with real emotional power by Pinna Nesbit. June Elvidge, as the wife who carries on the flirtation with young Curtis, looks and acts her role with usual success, Montagu Love as John Fleming, the forgiving husband, does the part full justice without overtaxing himself, and Arthur Ashley as easily fills the role of Arnold Curtis. Kate Lester as Mrs. Fleming, Alec B. Francis as Henry Hasbrook, Arthur Matthews as Mr. La Force and Frances Miller as Mammy Liza round out the cast.

"THE OTHER MAN."

Five-Part Vitagraph Starring Harry Morey and Grace Darmond Will Please.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

MIDDLE-GRADE romance has the call in "The Other Woman," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, starring Harry Morey and Grace Darmond. It was written by Rex Taylor, and its story will delight the heart of the maiden who loves to devour fiction of this sort. The handsome hero who is living under a cloud and the beautiful heroine who is supposed to be a por working girl, but who turns out to be an adventurous and wealthy young person earning her own living on a ten thousand dollar bet are both in the story, and are beset with interesting trials and tribulations. The entire tale keeps well within its class, and has been competently directed by Paul Scardon.

John Stedman, a young physician of great promise, finds that he has an unfaithful wife and the shock is too much for him. He gives up his practice and rolls down hill so rapidly that in a year he is little better than a bum. He is doing odd jobs around a cheap boarding house when the real woman comes into his life. Her name is Dorothy Harman and he rescues her from a beating when she is unable to pay her check at an east side lunch counter, and gets her a place as "general help" at the boarding house. The two fall in love. Stedman is living under an assumed name, and does not tell Dorothy this when he decides to go back to his old profession and make himself worthy of her. They meet some time later, in their proper social sphere; but as Dr. John Stedman and the owner of a carefully cultivated beard Dorothy does not know him. John proposes to her, and she confesses she loves another man. She goes on a visit to the old boarding house. John follows her, after sacrificing his whiskers, and introduces himself under his assumed name. They are married at once, and the bride then discovers that the man she refused and her husband are one and the same person.

Harry Morey and Grace Darmond are admirably fitted to their respective parts of Stedman and Dorothy. They are excellently supported by Florence Deshon as Lucia, Frank Norcross as a political boss, Jessie Stevens as Mr. Holahan, Stanley Walpole as Canfield, and Mrs. Chapin as Aunt Isabel.

"TARZAN OF THE APES."

Eight-Part Screen Version of Novel and Interesting Story Presented by National.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS, author of "Tarzan of the Apes," has not written another "Robinson Crusoe" or that other classic of adventure, "Cast Up by the Sea," but he has given to fiction a novel and interesting tale that loses none of its grip from the fact that it never did and never could happen. As shown on the screen, it is not always a skillfully constructed piece of work. Many of the scenes are laid in England, and there is too much space devoted to them and they smack too much of melodrama from the Surrey side of the Thames. The merits of the picture, however, so far outweigh its defects that it should duplicate the success of that other unique screen production, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

Scott Sidney directed the picture. Aside from the jungle scenes his task was not at all difficult, but it is gratifying to be able to credit him with achieving such excellent results with the unusual and knotty problems presented in reproducing the portions of the story showing the personal side of Tarzan's life. They are handled with fine judgment, and the one regret will be that there are not more of them.

Gordon Griffith, a youthful actor of uncommon gifts, impersonates Tarzan as a boy. He is a fit subject for a sculptor, as he climbs through the trees in company with the apes, his naked body showing its grace of line in every move. Elmo Lincoln as Tarzan, the man, although not quite so unconventionally clad, moves about through the trees with the same ease and picturesque effect. The scene where he tracked a native in this manner while the black man travels on the ground below brought a round of applause from the spectators. The actor's understanding and playing of the part leave nothing to be desired. Enid Markey as Jane Porter has a number of difficult scenes with Tarzan and acquits herself with much honor. The other important members of the cast are True Boardman, Kathlee Kirkham, Thomas Jefferson, Bessie Toner, George French, Jack Wilson and Colin Kenny.

"LOADED DICE."

Five-Reel Pathe Play Tells Dramatic Story, Based on Novel by Ellery H. Clark—Frank Keenan in Leading Role.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

FRANK KEENAN gives a remarkably effective portrayal in this offering of a man who takes a gambler's chance with life—a man who swore there was no God and whose hands were twice stained by murder before retribution came and he saw the awfulness of his philosophy. It is a study of cool, premeditated crime that leads to an inevitable end, but the story and its presentation will live in the memory. In plot and workmanship the offering is unusual.

Gilson Willets adapted "Loaded Dice" from the novel of Ellery H. Clark, adhering quite closely in most respects to the original story. Mr. Keenan appears as Richard Gordon, a promoter as shrewd as he is unscrupulous. Needing money to combine forces with some crooked financiers, he conspires with an actress and Rose Ashton, the girl who loves him, to dupe a young millionaire. They lure the latter, Harry Palmer, to a hunting lodge, where the girl remains all night with him, after drugging the victim. Gordon and the actress appear in the morning, where they set in motion a blackmailing scheme, which nets Gordon a hundred thousand dollars.

As a result of this night's work, Gordon later kills Palmer, who has learned the truth through Ethel Mason, one of Gordon's former friends. This murder is followed by the killing of Ethel Mason herself. Both crimes are handled by suggestion rather than direct exposition and are, by this method, made doubly sinister.

The direction is clear-cut and gripping throughout. The settings are attractive, both as to interior and exterior scenes.

Florence Billings plays creditably the part of Rose Ashton, Guy Coombs appears as Palmer, and Madeleine Marshall portrays the scorned woman, Ethel Mason.

O. HENRY SUBJECTS.

General Film Company Releases Broadway Star Features, Depicting Two of His Lighter Bits of Fiction.

"The Hiding of Black Bill."

THIS two-reel number, adapted by F. H. Buckley and directed by David Smith, features W. L. Rogers as a hobo who hires out as sheep herder and Chet Ryan as Henry Ogden, the ranch owner. The hobo is first seen after he has quit the ranch and is telling his adventures to a boon companion. He relates how the net was being drawn tighter and tighter in the search for "Black Bill," until it reached the ranch. The officers came and the hobo gets a hundred dollars from them for "information." He tells them Henry Ogden is the badly wanted outlaw, but it develops, with the usual O. Henry twist, that the hobo himself is Black Bill.

This subject is naturally and cleverly handled and gets its point over nicely. It makes a good offering of the imaginative type.

"The Fifth Wheel."

Another good two-reel number, of the whimsical sort. It tells of a Chaldean professor of the occult who attempts to find a wealthy woman's missing son. By a curious error he picks up the coachman she had but recently discharged. He thinks the coachman is the son and is greatly enraged when the mistake is discovered. But, as the story develops, the maid recognizes the coachman, with whom she is in love, and the coachman has already been making friends with the missing son on a park bench. So the story ends happily for all concerned, except possibly the fake professor.

"NEW LOVE FOR OLD."

Universal Presents Ella Hall, Emory Johnson and Gretchen Lederer in Pleasing Outdoor Subject.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A WEALTH of attractive woodland views does much to keep alive the interest in this offering, written by Waldermar Young and produced by Elsie Jane Wilson. The story itself is one of simple elements, with numerous interesting sidelights in the way of amusing characters and unlooked for incidents. It has no difficulty in holding the attention at any time, and from a photographic standpoint is a superior production.

Emory Johnson is cast as a young man named Kenneth Scott, who falls in love with a woman named Marie Beauchamp at a mountain resort. She trifles with his affections and later he discovers that she is about to open a roadhouse nearby. Gretchen Lederer handles the part of Marie with her usual skill, bringing out the rather abandoned character of the woman and yet maintaining the sympathy of observers.

Kenneth Scott, after losing Marie, goes, heartbroken, with an old peddler-poet to a little village not far distant, where he subsequently falls in love with the daughter of the storekeeper. Daphne, which is the role very naturally and easily assumed by Ella Hall, is also beloved by an Italian, Louis Bracchi. In the course of the story Kenneth saves the girl from Louis and it later develops that Marie Beauchamp is Daphne's elder sister, driven from home years before by the father's cruelty.

There is an abundant story interest of a rather obvious sort and the character touches at times are excellently handled.

"HANDS DOWN."

Unusual Story of Mining Country Is Unfolded in This Five-Reel Bluebird Offering, with Monroe Salisbury in Cast.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

MONROE SALISBURY appears in this feature number, written by E. J. Clawson and produced by Rupert Julian. He plays the part of Dago Sam, a smiling young Italian, who goes about doing good wherever he can, and that happens to be very frequently in this particular story. The part is one of the best pieces of character work seen on the screen for a long time. Mr. Salisbury both looks and acts his role, and he brings out convincingly Sam's revulsion of feeling when, after all he had done for others, he exclaims: "Nobody believes in me!"

The story is a lively one, excellently constructed and decidedly dramatic at times. It quotes at the beginning numerous lines from the familiar poem by Arthur Chapman, "Out Where the West Begins," and there is a real atmosphere of the West in evidence throughout. Dago

Sam wanders forth with his pack, promising his sweetheart he will bring her a present from the nearby town. He sees an attempted murder and the theft of some valuable papers; he interrupts a crooked gambling game; he saves the life of Tom Flynn and later that of his sweetheart, Hilda. All of these events are staged in a graphic and convincing manner.

Ruth Clifford is cast in the role of Hilda, which she fills attractively; Rupert Julian plays Tom Flynn acceptably, and others in less conspicuous roles are W. H. Bainbridge, Reta Pickering and Al Filson.

"HER BOY."

Powerful Metro Picture Gives New Angle to Slacker Question.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

FOR the first few months following America's entry into the great war many high-strung people suffered from a passing hysteria, a disease in which the emotions, like Bolsheviki, take control away from reason and make their human victim act out of character and often in a most contemptible way. The story in "Her Boy," the recent Metro picture in five reels, brings before us one of these unfortunates, a mother, played with beautifully restrained art by Effie Shannon. She cannot let her only child, a youth, just turned twenty-one, go to war. Her experience is told with remarkable truth and pictured most convincingly. Her tragedy begins with the small matter of her persuading the boy not to enlist, but step by step she has walked her path till in the time of the draft, she is willing to commit perjury as to his age. She never realized that in doing so she branded herself and made him seem the son of someone not his father. To save him she sticks to it and tastes the whole bitterness, including the boy's contempt and repulsion and his leaving her to enlist under an assumed name.

The boy, played with sincerity and effectiveness by Niles Welch, has been anxious to go from the very first. He is a natural leader, is owner of a big factory in the South and has made a speech to his employees asking them to enlist with him. His mother makes him back down from this, but he hopes for the draft. Then the mother swears that he is not twenty-one, but was born in 1897, forgetting that this was eighteen months after his father died. The growing situation as pictured by these two players is effective to a degree not reached in every picture; but the picture is not wholly without jarring notes. The playing of several of the cast is not up to that of the leaders and the director or scenario admitted several theatrical things that harmed the impression somewhat. One rough character irritated the spectator and added nothing thereby. The doctor's roughness also spoiled a chance subtlely to illumine the situation from a new angle. The way the climax scene in the church was put on was more theatrical and less convincing than anything else in the picture.

George Irving directed the subject and A. S. LeVino made the script from the story by H. C. Wonderly. The continuity is good. It is a big picture truly.

"THE FORBIDDEN PATH."

Melodrama with Theda Bara—Should Make Good Entertainment for the Majority.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE is an unexpected and a more than usually vigorous twist for a melodrama to the story of "The Forbidden Path," a recent Fox Standard picture in six reels. Theda Bara plays the heroine, betrayed, forsaken and outcast, who finds interestingly melodramatic means of getting revenge on the villain. She forces him to come to the church where, that same day, he was to have married a rich girl and before the fashionable guests invited to the other wedding, now broken off, she makes him say, "I will take this woman," but in her turn she spurns him as unfit to wed any woman, even her, the disreputable outcast. He had hoped to save his yellow back from wearing the stripes; but when she is through with him the detective leads him off to the prison.

The picture is a melodrama and uses all the privileges of such that it needs, and it has, by way of return, all the forceful effectiveness of its straight and unhampered path to justice. It has been staged and photographed beautifully. This kind of story gives Theda Bara a fine chance and she appears to good advantage. Her large following will take especial pleasure in it. The villain, Hugh Thompson, is a handsome devil and the artist who paints the heroine as the Madonna when she is still innocent and later when he finds her the worst slattern in a dive, the lowest circle of the Tenderloin's hell, paints her as the "End of the Forbidden Path," is no less pleasing in appearance. The picture will be liked by the women. The villain meets the heroine in the Madonna days in the artist's studio and again he comes with his fiancee and she is there in rags. Then she hounds him, makes him steal from his bank, makes him confess that he has stolen and at the church waves the money he took to give her to keep her from betraying him and tells the authorities all.

"THE HIDDEN PEARLS."

Sessue Hayakawa Plays Strong Role in Good Story of Hawaiian Islands.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

A STRONG role is that of Tom Garvin, played by Sessue Hayakawa in "The Hidden Pearls," released by Famous Players-Lasky on February 18. It is a part something out of the usual Hayakawa line. In the first place, it is not as a Japanese, but as a half American, half native islander, that we see the player from the Flowery Kingdom. The production is stern drama, with an intermingling of the tragic. There is hardly a light note in the five reels. It holds, nevertheless.

A bit of a love story there is in "The Hidden Pearls," but it does not dominate. What does stand out is the power of conscience, the remorse of the islander-American chief over his betrayal of his people. Hayakawa's interpretation of this phase of the action is of his best; seemingly he steps out of the native reserve, he shows more of the tumult raging within the breast of the pearl-stealing Garvin than he is accustomed to do in his characterizations of the Japanese.

The picture has notable value on the scenic side alone. The views of the islands—and there is a satisfaction in knowing they really are Hawaiian—and of the volcano with its vapors and flames, have deep interest. The scenes about and in the volcano are all too short. Then there are rare views of surf boats in action—crude craft that ride the high waves in smashing style.

Supporting Hayakawa are Theodore Roberts as the cold-blooded trading uncle of Garvin; Margaret Loomis as Tahona, the daughter of a chief, who falls in love with Garvin, for him procures the secret pearls, and when that misled young man fails to return is in punishment led to sacrifice; James Cruze, Noah Beery, John Burton, Florence Vidor and Jack Holt, as well as a host of islanders.

The story is from the pen of Beulah Marie Dix. George Melford directed.

"WATCH YOUR NEIGHBOR."

Comedy May Not Reach the Sennett High Water Mark, but Contains Amazing Comedy Nevertheless.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

CHARLES MURRAY has a serious job in "Watch Your Neighbor," the Paramount-Mack Sennett release for February 3. That is, of course, it would be a serious job for the average male individual, but Charlie, as an undertaker, provides mirth for others. He has an associate in business—a next door neighbor—and partner in crime, as it were, in a doctor, played by Wayland Trask. Mary Thurman is the wife of the doctor and the object of admiration on the part of the undertaker.

The picture may lack the 100 per cent. touch of the Sennett craftsmanship, but, nevertheless, it contains its share of stunts of the hair-raising sort and a good bunch of laughs at that.

It is the over-anxiety on the part of the undertaker to enroll the doctor among his "uncomplaining" former customers and thereby make clearer his path to the heart of the wife that starts things toward the real finish. Here it is that the Innocent Stranger, called in by the wife to eject the persistent undertaker, makes the mistake of his life and slugs the returning husband. And the wife, as in "One Round O'Brien," from behind the curtains swings the big mallet on the head of the doctor instead of on that of the undertaker. Mix-up there is in large chunks. Of course, the police get in on the party, and parachuting, automobile chases follow.

"Watch Your Neighbor" is pretty good comedy.

"THE NAULAHKA."

Pathe Releases Strong Six-Reel Version of Famous Story by Rudyard Kipling and Wolcott Balestier.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

"For East is East and West is West,
And never the twain shall meet!"

ATMOSPHERE is perhaps the strongest of several enjoyable features of "The Naulahka," a Pathe play adapted from the original story by George Fitzmaurice. It has an abundance of plot material, so many threads of genuine interest in fact that it contains little of suspense. But it is a rich, colorful production and has a human quality that holds the attention firmly.

Antonio Moreno and Helene Chadwick carry the love interest and are both well suited to their roles. Doraldina, who has recently been appearing in this country in Hawaiian dances, has the part of Sitahbai, the gypsy girl who has won the love of the Maharajah. Her's is a vampire role and she brings to its performance a wealth of native fascination and temperament. Warner Oland appears as the Maharajah and other parts are assumed by Mary Alden, Edna Hunted and J. H. Gilmour.

The general presentation is lavish in the way of settings and well-worded subtitles with artistic embellishments. The story interest flows quite naturally, beginning with scenes taken in two rival Colorado towns, which are both angling to capture a new railroad line. These scenes have a refreshing flavor of real life about them and the observer catches the spirit of the hero's desire to obtain the jeweled girdle known as "The Naulahka," for the wife of the railroad president, in order to win the railroad for his native town. The quest for this girdle takes him to India, where his sweetheart, Kate, has already preceded him. She is a young woman doctor and has ambitions to help the suffering natives of India.

The adventures of the lovers in weird, mysterious India are packed with a continual threat of tragic consequences, and not the least enjoyable part of the story is that both survive and eventually return happily to their Colorado town, which they find has captured the railroad.

The story as a whole, while not intense in character, has an agreeable charm and leaves the observer with a sense of satisfaction at having seen it.

"THE WIFE HE BOUGHT."

Bluebird Number, in Five Reels, Features Carmel Myers and Kenneth Harlan—Story Has Bright Situations.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

ONE of the pleasing features of this story of an unusual love is the way in which it skims over the obvious and brings out fresh and amusing situations. It relates the experiences of a young man who returns from the Northwest and finds his father dying, after being ruined by a Wall street rival. The young man, named Steele Valiant, swears to have the usual revenge, but he does not occupy several reels in getting it.

Instead he goes without delay to Brieson, the man who crushed his father in a financial deal, and tells him what he can expect. Within a very short time young Valiant corners a certain stock and Brieson faces a prison term as the result, having embezzled a large sum to cover his margins. The young man then goes directly to Brieson and says he must have the hand of Brieson's daughter in marriage or the prison sentence will follow. Brieson is unwilling to make the sacrifice, but the daughter, Janice, offers herself to save her sire from punishment.

The situations which grow out of this strange marriage are very diverting. Valiant loves Janice, almost without realizing it, but he will not give up the idea that he is still having his revenge. Not until another man appears, whose life he is forced to save unwillingly, does he awaken to the truth. The rescue scene, the sprained ankle and later the saving of the girl after an explosion on the yacht are all good incidents.

The story was adapted by Harvey Gates from a tale by Larry Evans and directed by Harry Solter. Carmel Myers and Kenneth Harlan do exceptional work in the leads and Howard Crampton and Sydney Dean are strong as the rival financiers.

"THE MARIONETTES."

Clara Kimball Young in Screen Version of Pierre Wolff's Stage Play of Social Life—On Select Pictures Program.

Review by Edward Weitzel.

AN EXCELLENT subtitle for "The Marionettes" would be "He Fell In Love with His Wife." This five-part screen version of Pierre Wolff's stage play, in which Clara Kimball Young and her company are now appearing, is simple in theme and shows the advantages and also the disadvantages of the French custom of having the parents arrange the marriages for their children. Fernande de Monclars, the part taken by the star, is a young girl brought up in a convent who is married to a man she loves devotedly, but her husband has consented to the union for the sole reason that it will relieve him of his debts. Fernande's childlike innocence is typical of the French stage ingenue, and she begins her married life by wearing the simplest frocks and making no effort to fill her position as the mistress of a fine establishment.

One night, after becoming sensible of her husband's neglect, she goes to a private marionette performance and sees a forcible example of the consequences of a wife's dressing unbecomingly and not trying to keep her husband at his own fireside. The marionette heroine is left to mope at home, while hubby goes gallivanting off with another charmer. Fernande starts in the next day to profit by the lesson. She orders all sorts of gay feathers and starts a number of flirtations, in imitation of the most experienced woman of the French social world. Her husband begins by having his jealousy aroused and ends by falling madly in love with Fernande. She keeps him at a distance for a time, then capitulates. Contrary to the usual construction of such a story, no mention is made of a dual.

Taken on its own grounds, "The Marionettes" is good screen material. The plot is not at all complicated and is free from any suggestion of the darker side of life. It introduces a number of well-bred persons in pleasing surroundings and has been produced under the direction of Emile Chautard with understanding and liberality. The society scenes are especially well done and the French atmosphere is maintained with skill.

Clara Kimball Young is a trifle mature looking for Fernande in the earlier scenes, but acts the part convincingly and makes a series of stunning pictures in the elaborate toilets worn in the latter half of the picture. Negel Barrie is excellent as the husband, and important roles are competently filled by Mrs. Ethel Winthrop as Marquise de Monclars, Carey Hastings as Julie, Corliss Giles as Pierre Vareine, Edward Kimball as Ferney and Alec B. Francis as Zizerolles.

TRIANGLE PRIZE PLAY.

"Real Folks," Winner of Recent Contest, and "The Captain of His Soul," a Murder Mystery Story—Both Five Reelers.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"Real Folks."

MRS. KATE CORALEY, who wrote the story of "Real Folks" and walked off with the $1,000 prize in the recent Triangle contest, can claim one great merit for her work—it has a straightforward plot that is never in the least involved. It is full of homely humor and is a pleasant reminder of the kind of drama made popular by a long line of Irish comedians of the spoken stage. Not the slightest pretense is shown to anything of the highbrow order, but it will supply a lot of good, honest folk with the kind of entertainment best suited to their taste.

The Dugan family become millionaires when oil is found on their farm in California. The elder Dugan at once buys a high hat and goes in for society without discarding his old clay pipe. This method does not advance him rapidly in the social scale, but he is determined that his son Jimmie shall be among the elect. To this end he fits him out in the most expensive fashion and sends him off to an eastern college. Jimmie stays only one day. Three of the students undertake to chaff him and he thrashes the trio and leaves for good. After he disappears his parents come east and start a search for him. Mrs. Dugan, who does not take kindly to the new life and prefers to putter around in her garden, is greatly pleased when Jimmie is found in partnership with a florist on Long Island. The boy comes to deliver an order next door to where the Dugans are stopping and meets his mother.

He also meets Joyce Clifton, a pretty young girl who has only her face as her fortune, but Jimmie promptly falls in love with her. Joyce has a friend in Lady Blessington, the mistress of the estate, but Mrs. Dugan takes her ladyship for the housekeeper. The elder Dugan is still strong for a match with some social leader's daughter, and picks out a wife for Jimmie. He threatens to disinherit the boy when young Dugan objects, but becomes reconciled when Jimmie and Joyce are married and he finds that his new daughter-in-law is a thoroughbred.

Nothing at all novel in the story, but plenty of kindly humor and honest people. "Real Folks" is cleverly acted. J. Barney Sherry gives an unctious performance of the elder Dugan, and Alberta Lee is natural and amusing as his wife. Francis MacDonald is likable and real as Jimmie and Fritzi Ridgeway is attractive as Joyce. Marion Skinner as Lady Blessington, Betty Pearce as Margaret Van Arsden and George Pearce as Van Arsden complete the cast.

The picture was admirably directed by Walter Edwards. The scenario is by Jack Cunningham. Photographer, C. G. Peterson.

"The Captain of His Soul."

The opening scenes of "The Captain of His Soul," a five-part Triangle photoplay story by Eleanor T. Kinkade, scenario by Lillian Ducey, gives promise of an unusually strong plot, but the promise is not realized. One thing that works against the picture is the manner in which it is constructed. There are too many complications, and the author's sense of proportion is defective. The greatest stumbling block in its path to success is the turning of the theme into a mysterious murder case and keeping the spectator guessing as to the identity of the assassin. Such a motive has its good points, but it is constantly being used and brings the picture down to a commonplace melodrama.

The murdered man attempts to cheat Ebenezer Boyce, the President of Boyce Automatic Pistol Works, and the aged man dies from the shock. His two sons swear to avenge their father's death, and when the schemer, Martin, is found with a bullet through his heart both boys think the other fired the shot. Two more characters are implicated and the air is full of suspicion until it turns out that Martin accidentally shot himself.

Most of the cast is satisfactory. Charles Gunn is not well suited to the part of Henry Boyce, but Walt Whitman, William Desmond, Jack Richardson, Mitzi Gould, Eugene Burr and Claire McDowell meet all requirements. The picture was directed by G. P. Hamilton and photographed by Tom Buckingham.

"LEST WE FORGET."

Eight-Part Feature, Starring Rita Jolivet, Finely Produced and Has Strong Patriotic Appeal.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is much that is excellent in "Lest We Forget." This eight-part feature, in which Rita Jolivet, the French actress, who survived the sinking of the Lusitania, is the central figure, has been produced at a lavish expenditure of money. The result is generally artistic and justifies the outlay. The story was written and directed by Leonce Perret. As in most attempts to weave historical facts with an equal proportion of fiction and take full advantage of dramatic license, the construction is rather complicated at times.

The scenes following the sinking of the Lusitania are not as interesting as the preceding ones. They come down to ordinary melodrama and the spectacle of the heroine strangling the German diplomat with a cord seems a poor revenge on one of the men who plotted the destruction of the ill-fated liner. The situations leading up to the sinking are much more in keeping with this never to be forgotten event.

Rita Heriot, the part played by the star, is a French opera singer who becomes engaged to Harry Winslow, a wealthy American. The singer is also loved by Baron von Bergen, a German diplomat, who is supposed to be a friend of Winslow's but is far less honorable in his intentions toward Rita. Returning to France with her mother to spend the summer at the little village where she was born, Rita is drawn into the vortex of the great war. She is caught by German troops sending messages to help her native land and is sentenced to be shot. Word is brought to Winslow that the order has been carried out. He hurries to France and enlists in the French service that he may do all in his power to avenge the murder of his sweetheart.

Rita escapes execution by a miracle and succeeds in getting back to the United States. Here she meets the Baron again. When she tells him of an offer she has to sing in England he begs her not to sail on the Lusitania and assures her he knows it will never reach the other side. The sinking of the ship is lead up to with absorbing detail and the great horror is shown with realism. At the finish the lovers are united, after Winslow has displayed an entirely unexpected lack of confidence in the woman he is supposed to trust.

Rita Jolivet's performance of the heroine could hardly be improved upon. She is natural and forceful and her physical qualifications are equally in her favor. Hamilton Revelle as Harry Winslow, and

L. Rogers Lytton as Baron von Bergen are leading and thoroughly capable members of her support. Kate Blancke as Madame Heriot, Emil Roe as Mayor le Roux, Clifford Saum as Fritz Muller and Harry Smith as General Joffree are also well cast.

"Lest We Forget" is released through Metro Pictures Corporation.

"MADAM JEALOUSY."

Allegory in Which Symbolizing Figures Play a Drama of Human Fates.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE object of allegory is to make emotions real and vivid by bringing them bodily before us and making them act in accordance with the character given to them. It is a remarkable illustration of the faculty of accepting and blending impressions when a spectator who would be affected by seeing a lover's sorrow is even more deeply moved by seeing a figure in sable weeds whom he knows is Sorrow's self walking at the lover's side, her hand upon his arm. Yet the unimaginative, critical faculty is highly developed in our modern, well-instructed minds.

The less naive a man's mind is, the slower he is to see reality in personified Sorrow or Jealousy; they look too much like ordinary human beings to him. Allegory was supposed to be dead. Then we had a revival of "Everyman," and since that time there have been many allegories and they have made much money for producers and theaters. Here is another allegory by Paramount called "Madam Jealousy," with Pauline Frederick in the leading role. It is most interesting, but the dramatic illusion grows thin at times. As entertainment it is not a failure by any means, yet I believe it the least effective of all recent Paramounts I have seen.

The picture is marked by magnificent and beautiful settings and backgrounds. The players are intelligent in acting and keep the story clear-cut. The love story played by Valor and Charm, with Finance and Pride as parents of the one and Commerce and Display as parents of the other, with Charm's uncle, who is called Good Nature, and all the others, holds as a human love story in the background of big human things; but the "House of Heavy Hours," where Madam Jealousy lives with her servitors, Mischief, Rumor, Treachery and all that belong to her, fails to get over with the same effectiveness—of course, it is all unbelievable. There is no experience in its symbolism.

Among the players, Elsie McCloud takes the role of Charm; Thomas Meighan, Valor; Frank Losee, Finance; Charles Wellesley, Commerce; Isabel O'Madigan, Pride; Ina Bourke, Display, and Frances Cappelano plays Mischief. Robert Vignola directed it.

"A PETTICOAT PILOT."

Delightful Story of Cape Cod by Joseph Lincoln Makes a Winning Paramount Release.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE tang of real Cape Code life is in the Joseph C. Lincoln stories and his "A Petticoat Pilot," picturized for the Paramount program, is a greatly pleasing five-reel production. Vivian Martin, with her usual charm, naturalness and common sense, fills the role of Mary 'Gusta in a way to satisfy any lover of the character. But the big thing about the picture is the illusion of character and individuality in the work of every one of the players. In Cap. Zoath and Cap. Shad, two retired seamen who are running a general store in the village, played respectively by James Neil and Theodore Roberts, and no less truly in Isaiah, their hired man, played by Tom Bates, there is a convincing mannerism and loyalty to the type that is well worth seeing.

These four with a young lad, Crawford, played by Harrison Ford, the juvenile character opposite to Mary, carry the theme and they are ably supported. The sets and backgrounds are as usual in this brand of film; there are no jarring notes. The direction was in charge of Rollin Sturgeon, who has many excellent pictures to his credit.

Mary is left an orphan and her father's two partners gradually bring themselves around to signing adoption papers. They saw stormy seas ahead in raising a youngster and took on "the new pilot" with a reluctance that was more apparent than real. In this lies a good part of the humor of the early scenes. How she grew up and they became accustomed to taking "sailing orders" from her; how they nearly ruined their business trying to give her advantages and how her common sense saved them; how she fell in love with the son of a man who had long ago run away with Zoeth's wife and his money, and how in the end it turned out to be all right, makes an engaging tale that the spectator will watch with lively interest and appreciation.

"THE CRUCIBLE OF LIFE."

General Enterprises, Inc., Release Seven-Part Feature, Based on Stage Play, "Fairfax," by Bartley Campbell.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A SOCIETY melodrama with strong patriotic moments, is the combination found in "The Crucible of Life." It was adapted from Bartley Campbell's play, "Fairfax,, for the Authors' Film Company, by Capt. Harry Lambart. It features a well-balanced and interesting cast of people, which includes Grace D'Armond, Frank O'Connor, Jack Sherill, Winifred Harris and Edwin Frosberg.

The story concerns a young girl, named Gladys Dale, who loses her mother and then makes an unhappy marriage with a man who proves to be a crook. The girl leaves him and becomes governess for Mrs. Dorset, a prominent society woman, who, besides younger children, has a grown-up daughter and a ne'er-do-well son. The latter steals a necklace from his mother and frames things for some crooks to rob the family safe. One of the crooks is Gladys' husband, and the girl is suspected of the crimes. She leaves the Dorset home and goes in for Red Cross work, which takes her to France.

In France she meets Edwin Fairfax, a brother of Mrs. Dorset, who loves her. He receives wounds on the battlefield, while making a valiant defense of the flag, and Gladys nurses him back to health and happiness.

The patriotic moments in this are apt to arouse the most enthusiasm with an audience. These are well staged and inspiring. The story is rather loosely built and moves slowly in the first reels. It could be cut to advantage, as no particularly dramatic events occur until later. The production is delightfully presented in the way of social atmosphere, settings, photography and the like. The subtitles are artistic and well worded and the lighting effects deserve commendation.

"WHO LOVED HIM BEST."

Five-Part Edna Goodrich Feature for Mutual Program Projects Pleasing Story of Greenwich Village.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story of "Who Loved Him Best?" a five-part production appearing on the Mutual Program, with Edna Goodrich as the star, is pleasing and somewhat unusual. It is the story of a young sculptor of the Greenwich Village section of New York City, and is purposeful in its intention. The picture has been directed with considerable skill, but could be improved by the use of more effective subtitles. Edna Goodrich appears to advantage in the role of Dorna Dane, a moving picture actress, who forsook her profession for the purpose of helping a certain young sculptor go straight and find the road to success. She is well dressed and plays the picture against artistic settings. Frequently during the production one is impressed with the fact that a more tense dramatic interpretation might have been given the story. A pretty and clever child is seen in the first and second reels of the picture. She plays the role of the daughter of the moving picture producer who engaged Doria Dane as his leading woman, and in her childish way tries to make a match between her father and the pretty leading woman. The big scenes of the picture occur during the period when Doria Dane poses for the prize-winning marble "America Militant." During this period a designing widow, who frequents the artist's Bohemia, throws her evil influence on the scales against the nobility of spirit of the other woman in an unsuccessful attempt to destroy the man's moral fibre and win him for her own wicked ends.

"HELP WANTED."

Metro-Drew Comedy Destined to Awaken Spirit of Patriotism—Based on Red Cross Theme.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A TIMELY subject has been used to good advantage in the Metro-Drew Comedy entitled "Help Wanted," and upon it the Red Cross Society has set its seal of approval. In this number Polly Minor has developed into a society butterfly, forgetting completely the patriotic responsibilities that are the natural heritage of the feminine of the species while the nation is at war. Henry, while not yet fully awakened to the seriousnesss of the occasion, receives a letter from the Red Cross presenting their side of the question and asking for help. A visit to one of the busy branches of the society serves as a further inspiration and Henry returns home determined that his household shall do its bit. He buys yarn and knitting needles and, with Mandy, the colored cook's aid, gets Polly under way on a sweater. Polly's friends also get a surprise when she invites them to spend the afternoon with her and provides them each with the necessary material and implements for the creation of a sweater. Henry makes the discovery that a man can also do his bit for the Red Cross by turning the crank of a knitting machine. The result is that his friends are enlisted in the cause and that a large addition to the stock of socks for the soldiers is expected. The comedy of the picture is good.

"PAINTED LIPS."

Universal Presents Louise Lovely in Screen Story by Charles Kenyon, Assisted by Lewis Cody and Hector Dion.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE story of "Painted Lips," written by Charles Kenyon, author of "Kindling," is an unusual one. It presents what might have been a rather sordid little problem play in a well-acted and enjoyable manner. The careful handling, which lifts the photoplay well above the average, is a credit, both to the director, Edward Le Saint, and to the performers.

Louise Lovely is cast in the leading role, that of the pretty daughter of a sea captain. Her father goes on shore and has a quarrel with his mate, which the girl witnesses. The captain is thought to be dead and the girl allows herself to be carried away by a fast woman, named Kate. Concurrently with this appears the story of Jim Douglass, who has determined to revenge himself upon Andrew Solman for an insult to his sister. This he expects to do by encouraging Solman to marry a fast woman. As the plot brings out, in a deft and natural way, Jim befriends the daughter of the sea captain, whom he thinks is just the person he is looking for. But after a series of dramatic events he discovers that the girl is not what he thought and he falls in love with her himself.

The plot offers abundant opportunities for bad handling, but escapes this and is more than ever interesting from the fact that it does so. Louise Lovely is strong in the leading role and gets good support from a cast which includes Alfred Allen, Lewis Cody, Hector Dion, Beatrice Van and Betty Schade.

Comments

General Film Company.

THE SOUP AND FISH BALL (Essanay).—A comic number, featuring two Irish characters. Their dress suits are stolen on the eve of a ball and each thinks the other guilty. They meet at the ball and a "rough house" ensues. This is entirely of the knockabout style of humor and makes only an average offering of the kind.

THE FIFTH WHEEL (Broadway Star Feature).—A two-reel O. Henry subject, with W. L. Rodgers, Lydia Yeamans Titus and Chet Ryan in the cast. The Chaldean professor attempts to find the rich patron's missing son. He succeeds in discovering the coachman she had discharged a day or two before, but the coachman finds the son, so all ends happily. A typical number of the whimsical type, which will amuse the average audience.

THE HIDING OF BLACK BILL (Broadway Star Feature).—A two-reel O. Henry subject, featuring Walter Rodgers as a hobo who hires out as a sheepman. The owner of the ranch is a mysterious individual, whom the observer suspects of being Black Bill, a badly wanted man. But it develops that the hobo himself is Black Bill. This is a whimsical, amusing subject, with a typical O. Henry ending.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE WIFE HE BOUGHT (Bluebird), Feb. 4.—A five-reel number, based on a story by Larry Evans, which features Carmel Myers and Kenneth Harlan. The tale concerns a young man who forces a marriage with a girl, out of revenge upon her father. The way in which true love develops out of seeming hatred is worked out in an original and amusing way. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

HANDS DOWN (Bluebird), Feb. 11.—An excellent five-reel subject, written by E. J. Clawson and directed by Rupert Julian. Monroe Salisbury appears in the cast as Dago Sam, a part which he plays in an appealing, sympathetic manner. This character portrayal alone makes the offering distinctive, but it contains also a lively and engrossing story. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE FORBIDDEN PATH (Fox Standard), Feb. 3.—A six-reel picture with Theda Bara, telling a very melodramatic story, but with a new and effective twist. It is beautifully staged and photographed and will almost certainly be a most popular release with Theda Bara's following. A longer notice will be found on another page of this issue.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

DODGING A MILLION, Jan. 28.—A bright and attractive comedy by Edgar Selwyn and A. M. Kennedy, presenting Mabel Normand in a role which she makes very charming.

Greater Vitagraph.

THE OTHER MAN (Vitagraph), Feb. 4.—Harry Morey and Grace Darmond have the leading roles in this five-part romance, which was written by Rex Taylor, and is conventionally pleasing. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

LEST WE FORGET (Special Release).—Founded on the experience of Rita Jolivet during the sinking of the Lusitania this eight-part picture is finely produced and acted. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

UNDER THE INFLUENCE (Drew), Jan. 28.—A comedy in which the Drews do excellent work. The picture is based on a new idea, and in the refurnishing of the Minor home with antiques an interesting and amusing situation develops. A full review will be found elsewhere.

HER BOY (Metro), Jan. 28.—A picture with an unusually telling situation. Its central figure is a slacker mother whose only son wants to go to war. Effie Shannon and Niles Welch have the leading roles, and do splendidly. It is an offering to make talk and leave a good impression. We recommend it highly. For a longer notice see on another page of this issue.

HELP WANTED (Drew), Feb. 4.—A useful comedy, featuring the Drews. It has been passed by the Red Cross Society and will no doubt serve as an inspiration to patriotism. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SOMEBODY'S WIDOW (Strand), Jan. 29.—A pleasing comedy, featuring Billie Rhodes. Cullen Landis plays opposite her with William Bevan and several pretty girls giving good support. The story is about a young writer who has come to the seaside to finish a serial. He ignores the girls on the beach, but one of them, prettier and bolder than the rest, poses as a widow determined to win him. An amusing incident happens when one of her friends gives her secret away. The picture has been nicely directed by Scott Sidney.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 6 (Gaumont), Feb. 4.—Interesting items of this number include scenes around Jerusalem showing the Allied troops approaching it at the time of its surrender, the launching of the first ship of the new government fleet, Harry Lauder opening a sale of war stamps, scraping the snow off the ice of a skating pond at Boston by old and new methods, and the Japs working in conjunction with the Allies somewhere on the Atlantic.

WHO LOVED HIM BEST? (Goodrich), Feb. 4.—A five-part production, featuring Edna Goodrich. The play is laid in New York's famous Greenwich Village and deals with the career of a sculptor who was loved by two women, one of whom proved to be his salvation, while the other sought to bring about his downfall to serve her own miserable ends. A full review will be found elsewhere.

HER FRIEND BROWN (Strand), Feb. 5.—An amusing number in which a mix-up occurs between a husband and wife and an old friend who has come to town. The friend is a bachelor and invites the young wife to take dinner with him, pleading loneliness. The husband, responding to a note left by his wife, appears on the scene and gets in deep water because of the presence of an old flame. The comedy is not quite up to some other Strand numbers, but is moderately entertaining.

National Film Corporation of America.

TARZAN OF THE APES (National).—This eight-part screen version of the well-known novel is full of novelty and is excellently produced. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

HE GOT HIS (Klever), Jan. 28.—The subtitles of this comedy are so cleverly written that they practically carry the picture, and are evidently intended to do so. The production is based on a strife between a broker and a doctor, in which the broker tries to inveigle the doctor's wife into buying stock in a certain proposition. Some amusing scenes take place in a hospital, where the broker goes to try to get even with the doctor and is placed on the operating table by main force. A chase, in which the broker tries to escape his fate, is very funny.

WHO IS NO. 1? (Paramount), Jan. 28.—The 14th episode of "Who Is No. 1?" is thrilling in quality and again Graham Hale barely escapes death at the hands of the T-T-T. He is rescued by the interference of Aimee, his ward, who swings through the window by means of a rope just as the assassin is about to plunge his knife in the heart of Hale. With her revolver she holds the masked men at bay, makes them give up the key to the adjoining room where they are holding their meetings, and locks them in. Dr. Kent, the old minister who married Graham Hale and Camille Arnot, is also kidnapped, and is saved from death by Aimee, who has watched where the kidnappers have taken him. The title of this episode is "No Surrender."

WATCH YOUR NEIGHBOR (Sennett), Feb. 3.—One of the funniest of Mack Sennett comedies. It is a two-reel production with its principal characters living next door to one another as undertaker and doctor. Some good slapstick comedy occurs in the last reel. A full review will be found elsewhere.

FLARE-UP SAL, Feb. 4.—A story of dance-hall life in a mining town. A reformed thief rescues a dance-hall inmate, Flare-Up, portrayed attractively by Dorothy Dalton.

MADAM JEALOUSY (Paramount), Feb. 4.—An allegorical picture in five reels. It is magnificently put on and has much to recommend it as a screen offering. The story is clear and interesting and the actors are pleasing. For a longer notice see another page of this issue.

A PETTICOAT PILOT (Paramount), Feb. 4.—One of Joseph Lincoln's fascinating Cape Cod stories and a most engaging picture. Every character in the cast is commendable and the touches of Cape Cod temperament and peculiarities are especially worth while seeing. It is an especially good film. For a longer notice see another page of this issue.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

TRAPPED BY TREACHERY (Pathe), Feb. 3.—Episode No. 11 of "The Hidden Hand." This instalment is full of melodramatic incident. Doris has no sooner been rescued from the coal chute by Jack than she is lured to the Whitney Island house, where she expects to find the missing will. Here she is set upon by the gang, bound and threatened with death unless she gives up the locket. Jack arrives after she has shot a man after freeing her bands, and been forced to submit to blood transfusion to save his life. The number closes with both their lives in peril.

THE CATSPAW (Pathe), Feb. 3.—Episode No. 3 of "The Price of Folly" series. In this number, which tells a story distinct from the others, Ruth Roland appears as the tomboy daughter of a crooked broker. Frank Mayo appears as her lover, a young politician, who is pledged to break up the band of wild-cat brokers. The girl is used by her father in an effort to get some papers from her lover. The action is melodramatic and has interesting moments, but the story is one of only about average strength.

HELLO TEACHER (Rolin-Pathe), Feb. 10.—A knockabout number, featuring Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. The former plays the part of a hobo who is mistaken for the teacher of a country school. The scenes in the school house, where the unruly pupils play all sorts of tricks on the visiting trustees, are laughable. The number is a successful one of the type.

LOADED DICE (Pathe Play), Feb. 10.—A strong tragic number, in five reels, adapted from the novel by Ellery H. Clark. Frank Keenan appears as a crooked promoter, who commits two murders in his efforts to gain wealth. The crimes are handled by suggestion and the general presentation of the entire story is powerful and impressive. There is a love interest, but it is of secondary consideration. The promoter is shot on the night of his election as governor and repents of his crimes on his deathbed. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

ALL FOR THE LADIES (International-Pathe), Feb. 10.—A half-reel animated drawing, in which Happy Hooligan tells a wonderful story to the kids. His adventures with the Indian squaw and her pet snakes are extremely funny. An excellent subject.

THE NAULAHKA (Pathe Play).—A six-reel adaptation of a famous story by Rudyard Kipling and Wolcott Balestier, with Antonio Moreno, Helene Chardick and Doraldina in the leading roles. The first two play the lovers, who go on different missions from a Colorado town to India, where they meet with many adventures. Doraldina, a well-known Hawaiian dancer, plays the part of a gypsy favorite of the Maharajah, which she handles with fascinating distinction. The story is notable for its lavish settings. It is not particularly intense in character, but the plot is really absorbing and, in spite of threatened tragedy, it arrives at a happy ending, which is very satisfying. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

BEHIND THE MASK.

Sterling Pictures Corporation Presents Catherine Calvert in Charles T. Dazey's Masterly Melodrama of Love Behind the Screen of Blindness.

Cast.

Margaret Stanton.....Catherine Calvert
Lord Strathmore.....Richard Tucker
Mark Harrold.....Kirke Brown
Stanton.....Charles Dungan
Helen Harrold.....Flora Nason
Larrabee.....Charles Halton

Directed by Mme. Alice Blache.

The Story: Margaret Stanton's father has been ruined by Mark Harrold, and Margaret determines to avenge her father's wrongs by wrecking the happiness of Harrold's daughter, Helen. Helen is engaged to Lord Strathmore, and Margaret deliberately plans to compromise herself with Strathmore that he may feel it his duty to marry her. He does so, but she leaves him after the wedding night, explaining the deception. She goes away, and supports herself by teaching school, later losing her eyesight. Strathmore, who really loves her, locates her, but fearing the effect of shock, passes himself off as an old friend of her father's. An operation is performed, and for the first time Margaret finds that she has learned to love the man whose life she sought to wreck, and a revulsion of feeling comes. In the end this strange situation finds satisfactory solution.

For the Program: An original story by the author of "In Old Kentucky."

Wife of famous playwright stars in stirring drama.

Advertising Phrases: An unusually strong combination of star, dramatist and producer.

Love may fool you, but you cannot fool love.

Feature These Players: Catherine Calvert, widow of the late Paul Armstrong.

Richard Tucker as her titled sweetheart.

Stunt Suggestions: For the lobby use the mask suggestions contained in the press book. For window work cut out large masks of black paper, and back of the enlarged eyeholes place advertisements for the play, or a card back of one eye and a still behind the other. Letter, "What's behind the mask?" on the front to attract attention. Offer tickets to the person or persons correctly guessing the identity of the person behind the mask used in street work, on the lines of Raffles' idea.

Advertising Aids: Posters, 2 ones, 1 three, 1 six. Heralds (rotogravure). Lobby display photographs 11x14, twelve subjects; 18x22, twelve subjects (hand colored); 22x28, one subject (hand colored). Single and double-column coarse screen newspaper cuts. Slides. Press matter.

THE CRUCIBLE OF LIFE.

General Enterprises Presents in Vivid Action Bartley Campbell's Drama, Fairfax, a Story of the Present War, in Seven Stirring Acts.

Cast.

Gladys Dale.....Grace D'Armond
Edwin Fairfax.....Frank O'Connor
Robert Dorset.....Jack Sherrill
Mrs. Dorset.....Winifred Harris
Fritz von Hoffbert.....Edwin Forsberg

Produced by Capt. Harry Lambert.

The Story: Gladys Dale is engaged as the companion to Diana, the daughter of Mrs. Dorset, a prominent society woman. Her refinement and charm quickly gain for her an honored place in the household, but Robert, the graceless son, makes her position difficult through his advances. She is strongly attracted to Edwin Fairfax, younger brother of her employer. Robert becomes involved with von Hoffbert, a German spy, and becomes a common thief, stealing his mother's necklace and throwing the blame upon Gladys, who takes the burden of the crime rather than tell the mother her son is the thief. She enlists in the Red Cross, and both she and Fairfax are wounded, but not until Fairfax has killed von Hoffbert. A war-time wedding follows.

For the Program: Bartley Campbell's famous drama, Fairfax.

Love finds its mate 'neath bursting shells.

Advertising Phrases: Society thief implicates innocent girl.

Took burden of crime to save a mother's tears.

Feature These Players: Grace D'Armond as Gladys.

Frank O'Connor as Fairfax.

Jack Sherrill as Robert.

Stunt Suggestions: This story does not lend itself to easy stunting. If some store in your town stocks Red-Cross uniforms, you can hook up with a display with stills and a card: "Gladys Dale went to France with the first Red Cross contingent and there found the love she feared was forever to be denied her. See The Crucible of Love. (House and date.)" The ticket seller may wear a Red-Cross headdress or you can open your lobby to a Red Cross solicitor.

THE BIRTH OF DEMOCRACY.

Franco-American Films Presents Lyda Borelli and a Sterling Cast in a Dramatic Story of the Momentous Events of 1872 in France.

Cast.

Mme. Fontani.....Lyda Borelli
Tallien.....M. Novelli
Robespierre.....Md. Fabiani
Jean Guery.....M. Barni

The Story: Today the struggle is for the democracy of the world. In 1872 the fighting was in France, but the citizens fought the aristocrats for true democracy as the poilu today battles against the power of the junkers of Prussia. And from another angle history repeats itself, for the upheavals in Russia originated in apparently unimportant love-intrigues just as the loves of Mme. Fontani altered the political complexion of France. It is an always interesting historical romance, now made doubly interesting through the close duplication of events in the present war.

For the Program: The story that was three years in the making.

A century-old forecast of today.

Advertising Phrases: Romance, realism and revolution.

A production that will stand the test of the ages.

Feature These Players: Lyda Borelli is the featured star. There are so many other players of importance that it would be better not to particularize, but to dwell upon the fact that more than ten thousand persons were used in this production, many of them well-drilled companies of players.

Stunt Suggestions: Get the newspapers interested. Point out that events of history now find their duplicate in the present war. Make a wide appeal to schools of all grammar and higher grades, and, if possible, arrange special performances. Lay special stress upon the fact that this is not a war play of today, but a drama of France's internal struggle for democracy. Play up the press criticisms in your advertising and in the lobby. If there are any French societies or a large French population, make appeal to them direct. Emphasize the fact that it is in France, the birthplace of democracy in Europe, that the present struggle for democracy is being waged. Arrange for the electrical displays to be rented from the exchanges. If you cannot use them in your lobby, try to obtain window space elsewhere. Use plenty of pasted paper away from the house.

Advertising Aids: One, three, six and 24-sheets. Three-color window cards. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28, all hand-colored. One, two and three-column cuts. Heralds. Press sheets. Press clippings and criticisms. Specially built lobby displays, electrically lighted, 12x20 feet, on rental. Two special figures.

BLUE BLAZES RAWDEN.

Thomas H. Ince Presents William S. Hart in the Story of a Logging Boss, a Dance Hall Girl, a Remittance Man and His Mother.

Cast.

Blue Blazes.....Wm. S. Hart
Babette .....Maud George
The Mother.....Gertrude Claire
Joe La Barge.....Hart Hoxie
Ladyfingers .....Robert McKim
Eric Hilgard.....Robert Gordon

The Story: "Ladyfingers" Hilgard is the black sheep of a fine English family. He runs a dance hall at Lumber Cove and Babette is his favorite. But Babette turns her affections to Blue Blazes Rawden when he leads his men into the Cove for a spree, and Hilgard taunts him into a duel, the winner to take the money, the resort and the girl. Hilgard is killed, but Babette finds Rawden's gun has not been discharged and fires one shot, persuading Rawden that he shot in self-defense. Hilgard's mother and younger brother come to camp and the old lady shows a motherly affection for the man she believes to have been her boy's pal, but Babette, scorned, tells the brother

Rawden killed "Ladyfingers" and, unable to deny, Blue Blazes again hits the trail—alone, in spite of Babette's frenzied entreaties.

For the Program: The wilderness claims him for its own.

Hart pays the penalty of another's crime.

Advertising Phrases: See Bill Hart run a dance hall.

A night of pleasure and years of misery.

Feature These Players: Hart in the title role.

Maud George as Babette.

Stunt Suggestions: Use boughs or logs or the outside slabs from a saw mill, if you can get them, to create the suggestion of a log hut, or merely build around the box office, if this is exposed to the street. Display a card reading, "Bill Hart's dance hall. Admission (prices). Check your guns." Have the ticket seller heavily rouged and flashily dressed, but not in evening dress. For a street wagon use the sign, "Bill Hart runs a dance hall in Blue Blazes Rawden, tonight. House)."

Advertising Aids: Two designs each, one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet rotogravure. Photos, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Ten cuts each on star and production, one to three columns wide. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

Released Feb. 18.

BROADWAY BILL.

The Yorke Film Corporation Presents Harold Lockwood in the Five-Act Metro Wonder Play of Love and Regeneration. By Fred J. Balshofer.

Cast.

Broadway Bill.....Harold Lockwood
Muriel Latham.....Martha Mansfield
Jack Latham.....Cornish Beck
Godfrey St. Cleve.....Raymond C. Hadley
Buck Hardigan.....Stanton Heck
Creed .....Bert Starkey
John Underwood.....W. W. Black
"Irish" Fallon.....Tom Blake
"Daddy" Dunningan.....William Clifford
Wabishke .....Art Ortego

Directed by Fred J. Balshofer.

The Story: Bill Clayton is known as Broadway Bill because he is the most prominent Bill in the night life of the white way. Muriel loves Bill, but loathes his mode of life, and for her sake he goes to Underwood's lumber camp to work the alcohol out of his system. Hardigan, the foreman, thinks he is sent to spy upon his actions and makes several efforts to get rid of him, but in the end Bill thrashes the foreman, takes his place and wins the girl, though not before a curious chain of cross purposes.

For the Program: Winter life in the heart of the forest.

The story of a man whom love made over.

Advertising Phrases: Licked John Barleycorn, then cleaned up the foreman.

Broadway missed Bill, but Bill didn't miss Broadway.

Feature These Players: Harold Lockwood as the man who found himself.

Martha Mansfield as the girl. She was formerly in support of Max Linder under the name of Martha Early.

Stanton Heck as the foreman.

Stunt Suggestions: Letter a tack-card to be used on all thermometers publicly displayed along the business section. "Perhaps you think it is hot, or cold. When the Metro players were making Broadway Bill the warmest day was 10 below and the coldest 48 below zero. You should see those winter scenes in the woods. They're great. You can get it at the house and date)." The same idea can be used for the lobby, but here an ornamental thermometer may be used instead of the large display instruments. For street work get the huskiest six-footer you can hire. Dress him as a woodsman and on his chest use a sign, "Can you lick this man?" On his back have another, "Bill Clayton did, in Broadway Bill. See it at (house and date). It's the fight worth while."

Advertising Aids: Two designs each, one, three and six-sheets. Press sheet. Filler sheet. Ten-minute novel for newspaper use. Slide. Herald. Lobby sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x29. Cuts.

Released Feb. 11.

THE LIAR.

General Enterprises Presents Jane Gail and Stanley Walpole in a Six-Act Romance of a Girl Who Won Back from the Easier Way.

Cast.

Not stated.

The Story: Lucille, ambitious for better things than her sordid life knows, falls a ready victim to James Lambert and the appeal of the Broadway night life. She resigns herself to the world of gayety with no thought of the morrow, but the morrow comes when Lambert announces his engagement to Irene Wallace. Lucille is not a girl to sink, as did Lambert's last victim. She denounces him before his people and goes again to her own family, where the repentant Lambert follows and atones for the wrong he has done.

For the Program: The story of a girl whom Broadway burned, but did not brand.

Those who play must pay.

Advertising Phrases: Denounces Lothario at the altar.

Don't die for love—fight for it.

Feature These Players: Jane Gail as Lucille.

Stanley Walpole as Lambert.

Stunt Suggestions: Use the 22x28 enlargements for window work. Get out throwaway pocket cards printed up, "Are You a Liar?" in heavy type, and below, in six-point, "Whether you are or not, you cannot afford to miss seeing The Liar at (house and date)."

Advertising Aids: Lobby displays, 8x10 and 22x28. Slides. Newspaper cuts. Heralds.

THE LIGHT WITHIN.

First National Presents Mme. Olga Petrova in the Story of a Beautiful Girl's Escape from a Mistaken Marriage.

Cast.

Laurel Carlisle, M.D.....Madame Petrova
Clinton Durand.....Lumsden Hare
Doctor Leslie.....Thomas Holding
George Raines.....Clarence Heritage
Donald Durand.....Freddie Verdi
Rosa .....Evelyn Dumo
Joe .....Fred C. Jones
Doctor Green.....Frank McDonald
Trained Nurse.....Matilda Brundage

Directed by Larry Trimble.

The Story: Marrying a millionaire instead of the man she loves that she may carry on the research work begun by her father, Laurel Carlisle lavishes her love upon the little son who comes to them and Durand becomes jealous of her love for the boy. Staying in the city to help combat a plague of scarlet fever with a serum she has discovered, Laurel pays a hurried visit to the little Donald, and when he later dies of pneumonia Durand declares that it is scarlet fever and she has killed the child by bringing infection to him. He goes on a riotous cruise and the yacht is reported lost, but Durand turns up just as Laurel is about to demonstrate a new serum for anthrax. Doctor Leslie, her old sweetheart, insists that he be inoculated with the virus, and Durand, knowing the supply of serum cannot be duplicated, steals the remedy, but inoculates himself. A serum is obtained, but while Leslie recovers, Durand's constitution cannot pull him through, and Laurel is free to find happiness.

For the Program: Mme. Petrova's second big role.

A play with power—plus plot.

Advertising Phrases: Can save either husband or the man she loves. Which did she choose?

Woman scientist faces terrible ordeal.

Feature These Players: Centre the interest upon Mme. Petrova.

Lumsden Hare as the husband.

Thomas Holding as the man she loves.

Stunt Suggestions: There are some capital catch phrases and ready-sets in the press book. Play these up. If you have not yet used the Petrova souvenir portraits, use them now. Display them about town in frames and arrange with local picture-framers, or some of them, to make a special price on frames for these. Feature the fact in your lobby display in return for a splurge in the window of the framer. Get a choice of two or three styles, if possible, or at least one plain and one ornamental moulding. Display framed portraits in store windows with, "These portraits will be given all who attend the showing of Mme. Petrova in The Light Within at (house and date). Special prices on frames at (mention framer)."

LEST WE FORGET.

Metro Presents Rita Jolivet in Leonce Perret's Eight-Act Story of the War—A Patriotic Production de Luxe.

Cast.

Rita Heriot.....Rita Jolivet
Harry Winslow.....Hamilton Revelle
Baron von Bergen.....L. Rogers Lytton
Mme. Heriot.....Kate Blancke
Mayor Le Roux.....Emil Roe
Fritz Muller.....Clifford Saum
Gen. Joffre.....Henry Smith

Directed by Leonce Perret.

The Story: Rita Heriot, a favorite opera singer, is betrothed to Henry Winslow, a young American millionaire. Belgium is invaded and her home is in the path of the Huns. A telegraph operator before her voice developed, Rita replaces the operator at the little village and is captured by the Germans. She escapes after many perils and makes her way to America to find that Henry has enlisted with the Army of France to avenge her supposed death. Baron von Bergen, a German conspirator, renews his unwelcome attentions, and when he learns that she is about to go abroad on the Lusitania, seeks to dissuade her, thereby revealing his own connection with the plot. She is a passenger aboard the ill-fated vessel, but is saved, and when von Bergen seeks to kill her to hide his connection with the plot, she strangles him. Seeking solace from her memories in hospital work she comes again to her fiance.

For the Program: An intimate story of the greatest event in history.

The Lusitania disaster staged by one of the actual victims.

Advertising Phrases: Why are we at war? Find the answer in Lest We Forget.

See what war is really like.

Feature These Players: Rita Jolivet, one of the Lusitania survivors.

Hamilton Revelle, Mary Garden's leading man in Thais.

L. Rogers Lytton as the German spy.

Stunt Suggestions: You might get the local paper to print you up a fake extra with startling headlines concerning the attack upon a liner with the loss of hundreds of lives. Frame the display so the fact that it is the Lusitania is concealed until the small type is reached. Watch the distribution carefully to see that the boys do not try to sell the paper or the stunt will boomerang. It might be safer to use emergency bulletins running into a small letter announcement of the play and playing date. With comparatively little trouble you can get up a show-window display of the sinking of the ship, with or without motion. Use a generous lobby display of stills with the flags of the Allies. Much can be done with the newspaper with such an ample supply of photographs of vivid interest.

Advertising Aids: One-sheets in four designs, three designs in three-sheets, two designs each, six and 24-sheets. Half-sheets in three colors. Window cards. Special art program. Special folders. Press sheet. Filler sheet. Poem by Capt. Stanley Hunt Lewis. Lobby displays, 8x 10, 11x14 and 22x28, in addition to about 150 photographs of various sizes and styles.

Special release.

THE MORAL LAW.

William Fox Presents Gladys Brockwell in E. Lloyd Sheldon's Story of the Girls of Two Americas.

Cast.

Isobel de Costa, Anita de Costa, Gladys Brockwell
Maruja de Costa.....Rosita Marstini
Chinta .....Cora Rankin Drew
Robert Grant.....Colin Chase
Don Pedro.....Bertram Grassby
Umberto .....Joseph Singleton

Directed by Bertram Bracken.

The Story: The two girls were half-sisters and much alike in face and form, but the soul of one was pure and white and that of the other black with the dregs of sin. Isobel, in New York, is carefully guarded until her father's death from the knowledge of her father's divorced wife and a daughter by that marriage. She seeks to aid them and meets only treachery and deceit, nearly perishing in a South American prison.

For the Program: Gladys Brockwell in vividly contrasting roles.

The girl of sin and the girl of the snows.

Advertising Phrases: Thrown in jail for her sister's crime.

Beautiful girl sounds depths of sordid sin.

Feature These Players: Gladys Brockwell in a powerful dual role.

Colin Chase as Grant.

Rosita Marstini as the divorced wife, known as Jezebel.

Stunt Suggestions: For window work, get the local paper to set up a news announcement of the wedding of Isobel de Costa and Robert Grant. Make it brief. Mount on an ordinary sheet of paper and below write "The girl in prison will explain." Attach this to a card lettered "If you cannot find the girl in prison, look for her at the (house and date). A thrilling tale of the two Americas." For the lobby make up about a dozen half-ounce bottles of differently colored waters. Attach them to a frame card and letter: "There is enough poison here to kill 500 men." In smaller letters below, add "But skilled as she was in the use of poisons, Anita could not get rid of her inconvenient husband in The Moral Law, and found death only for herself (date)."

Advertising Aids: Two each, one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x 14 and 22x28. Slide. Mats. Press sheet.

Released Feb. 17.

THE OTHER WOMAN.

Pathe Presents Peggy Hyland in Frederick Arnold Kummer's Story of the Woman Who Realized Her Position in Time.

Cast.

Eleanor Gates.....Peggy Hyland
Mr. Harrington.....Milton Sills
Mrs. Harrington.....Anna Lehr

Directed by Albert Parker.

The Story: Eleanor Gates comes to the city to complete her art education. On the train she meets Harrington, a broker, who is about to be married. A year later success has come and she turns to the friend of the train for advice on investments. She finds him more charming than ever and Harrington is attracted by the bohemian life of the studios. As the friendship becomes more apparent to Mrs. Harrington, husband and wife drift further apart. Eleanor realizes, before it is too late, that she is becoming "the other woman" and goes back to her sweetheart who is waiting in the little country town.

For the Program: The story of a woman who wouldn't.

The pitfalls of society, and the snares of the studio.

Advertising Phrases: Plato meant well, but he didn't know much. Friendships cannot stay platonic.

The society man and the studio girl.

Feature These Players: Peggy Hyland as Eleanor.

Milton Sills as the broker.

Stunt Suggestions: Here is a chance for some good newspaper work in a contest on the question of just how far a platonic friendship goes. Print the synopsis and offer a prize for the best letter telling just when Eleanor should have dropped out. For snipes and liner teasers use "Are you his wife or the 'other woman?'" or "Does your husband know The Other Woman?" For the lobby use a portrait frame with a light cloth curtain lettered: "Do not lift the curtain. It conceals the portrait of The Other Woman. You can see her (date)." The frame contains a white card lettered "Rubber!"

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two designs in three-sheets. One each six and 24-sheets. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x 28. Slide. Campaign book. Two one-column cuts.

Released Feb. 3.

MOTHER.

General Enterprises Presents Elizabeth Risdon in George Loane Tucker's Masterly Production of the Novel by Eden Philpott in Six Acts.

Cast.

Not given.

The Story: The story of mother-love that endured all things and finally brought her boy into the right paths, through memory of her loving care. Avisa Pommeroy is wrapped up in her wild and headstrong son, Ives. Ives is jilted by Jill Wickett, who marries for money, and this accelerates his speed along the downward path. His own mother deliberately gives him over to the constable when he is discovered poaching, in the hope that the lesson may prove salutary. He curses her action, but in the end he comes to realize all this gentle, sacrificing, adoring mother has meant to him and her sacrifices are not in vain.

For the Program: A story of the mother-love that passeth understanding.

Mother love is the truest love of all.

Advertising Phrases: Sent son to jail that he might be saved.

The love that lasts past life itself.

Feature This Player: Elizabeth Risdon in the title role.

Stunt Suggestions: Get at the ten-cent store the motto verses on Mother. Mount these as the centre of an announcement of the play. Use a coming slide while your vocalist sings the musical setting of Mother o' Mine, or use the McCormick phonograph record. If you have the production for a run offer free admission one night to any young man who brings his mother, or give a special morning performance for mothers only, requiring the son or daughter to obtain the admission card from the box office. Have a flash made of the audience and use in the local paper if it will take cuts. Dress your ticket seller as an old lady for a lobby attractor. If she is well known, any change in her appearance will attract attention.

Advertising Aids: One and three-sheets in several designs. One six-sheet.

State rights.

TREASURE ISLAND.

William Fox Presents a Spectacular Production of the Famous Stevenson Story with the All-Kiddie Cast That Made Aladdin Famous.

Cast.

In the Prologue.

Jim Hawkins.....Francis Carpenter
His Mother.....Eleanor Washington
Louise Trelawney.....Virginia Corbin
Bill Bones.....Herschel Mayall
Long John Silver.....Elmo Lincoln
Black Dog.....C. Gorman
Blind Pew.....Ed Harley

In the Story.

Jim Hawkins.....Francis Carpenter
Louise Trelawney.....Virginia Corbin
Long John Silver.....Violet Radcliffe
Black Dog.....Lloyd Perl
Ben Gunn.....Lew Sargent
Captain Smollett.....Buddie Messinger

Directed by C. M. and S. A. Franklin.

The Story: Treasure Island is by no means the best of Robert Louis Stevenson's work, but it is his most enduring monument and will live as long as Robinson Crusoe and Swiss Family Robinson. William Fox has Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship!

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

The Management of this Theatre
desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good
clean entertainment.
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00

given added charm to the delightful romance of adventure by staging it with a cast composed largely of clever children whose earnest efforts give an added touch of piquancy to the charming fantasy.

For the Program: A romance that will live as long as English literature exists.

Like a page from a fairy volume.

Advertising Phrases: Direct from an extended New York run.

One of the plays you will never be able to forget.

Feature These Players: Francis Carpenter as Jim.

Virginia Corbin as Louise.

Stunt Suggestions: Get up a run on the book stores with the Stevenson works. The ten-cent and novelty stores have many mottos and post cards with Stevenson sentiments, and will hook up with you by means of stills. Use a street wagon with lithographs. For a big clean-up arrange a free costume party for Saturday morning, whether you play the film Saturday or not, all guests to be in costume as one of the characters in the play. If you cannot show Treasure Island give them a couple of comedies. This will have an after-effect for weeks if you work it right, and should not cost much. For a more direct money-making scheme offer a small prize for the best costume and parade the contestants. Appoint disinterested judges. Announce such features well in advance and display the stills for costume suggestions.

Advertising Aids: Two designs each, one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Slide. Mats. Press sheet.

Special release for Jan. 27.

THE PHANTOM RIDERS.

Universal Presents Harry Carey in a Stirring Story of Strenuous Western Life by Henry McRae.

Cast.

Dave Bland.....Bill Gettinger
"Pebble" Grant.....Buck Connor
Molly .....Molly Malone
"Cheyenne" Harry.....Harry Carey
"The Unknown".....Vester Pegg

Directed by Jack Ford.

The Story: Theoretically all Government land is open for grazing purposes, but through terrorism Dave Bland reserved Paradise Creek for himself, and swift was the vengeance of his "Unknown" upon anybody who dared question his rights. Then came "Cheyenne" Harry with his little band of cattle, and the reign of the self-crowned king was over. He fought him to a finish with the aid of the Forest Rangers.

For the Program: A self-crowned king and self-elected conquerer.

A well-known magazine story brought to the screen.

Advertising Phrases: Lynching was not a punishment, it was just a threat of the phantom rider.

Cowman fights all-day battle for the freedom of the range.

Feature These Players: Harry Carey as Cheyenne.

Molly Malone as Molly.

Buck Connor is a well-known author of Western stories.

Stunt Suggestions: Use a rider in a white domino and a black mask for street work. For the first day or two use no sign, then blanket with "I am The Unknown. Find out who I am in The Phantom Riders (house and date)." For the lobby work get a boy scout to signal across the street, apparently to some companion. When he has attracted sufficient attention he places on an easel a card reading: "Cheyenne Harry taught Molly to signal with a heliograph. Later it saved his life when he was attacked by The Phantom Riders and he could signal her to go for help. Now showing."

Advertising Aids: One style each, one, three and six-sheets. One-sheet of star. Black and white lobby displays. Slide. Player cuts. Heralds. Press book.

Released Jan. 28.

THE THING WE LOVE.

Paramount Presents Wallace Reid in H. G. and M. B. Daniel's Story of the Man in Whom Love of Country Could Not Be Killed by Injustice.

Cast.

Rodney Sheridan.....Wallace Reid
Margaret Kenwood....Kathlyn Williams
H. D. Kenwood.....Tully Marshall
Mrs. Kenwood.....May Kelso
Adolph Weimer.....Charles Ogle
Kenwood's Agent.....Billy Elmer

The Story: Rodney Sheridan serves seven years in prison for a crime of which he is innocent and comes forth embittered against the country which has so unjustly treated him. But the war revives the inherent patriotism his ancestors have given him, and when it comes to a choice between self and the country that has wronged him, he places country before self and wins his manhood and happiness.

For the Program: The story of a man in whom patriotism could not die.

You cannot put your country out of your heart from puny motives of self.

Advertising Phrases: The red of the flag was the blood of his ancestors.

Stood by the nation in time of crisis.

Feature These Players: Wallace Reid as the man.

Kathlyn Williams as the girl.

Stunt Suggestions: For a window display use an American flag kept fluttering by a concealed fan. On a card letter: "There is something about the flag that is bigger than sense of wrong. Rodney Sheridan found this out in The Thing We Love (house and date)." Use a similar display for the lobby.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one, three and six-sheets. Rotagravure. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Ten cuts each for star and production, one to three columns wide. Slide. Advertising layout mats. Press book.

Released Feb. 11.

Sterling Pictures Corporation Presents Alma Hanlon in a Comedy-Drama of Youthful Hopes and Aspirations, by Frederick Rath.

Cast.

Dorothy Miller.....Alma Hanlon
Spitfire .....Florence Short
Mrs. Miller.....Mrs. Tansey
Frank .....Harry Benham
Lucius .....Robert Mantell, Jr.
Randall .....Louis Sterns
Miller .....Louis Thiel

The Story: Dorothy Miller's parents wanted her to marry a young farmer and settle down, but she wanted to be a writer. Frank's father wanted him to be a publisher, and he wanted to be an artist. Naturally the two exiles from family are drawn together when they meet in the famous Greenwich Village section of New York. Frank paints a magazine cover of Dorothy and sells it anonymously to his father. Dorothy sells him the story of her own life and aspirations in fiction form, and it is given to Frank to illustrate. In after years they read with interest the story of When You and I Were Young.

For the Program: The story of a girl who would write and a man who would paint.
The fires of genius burn brighter for parental opposition.

Advertising Phrases: Love and literature in "The Village."
Though their parents said they couldn't, they did.

Feature These Players: Alma Hanlon, daughter of the famous pantomimist.
Harry Benham as Frank.

Stunt Suggestions: If you can get hold of copies of the old song, "When You and I Were Young, Maggie," you can use these for window work, or use the palette frame suggestion for stills offered in the press book. For the lobby it would be effective to use a phonograph with this record, which is to be had in several combinations of voices.

Advertising Aids: Posters, two ones, one three, one six; lobby display, photographs, 8x10; twelve subjects, 11x14; twelve subjects (hand-colored), 22x28; one subject (hand-colored); slides. Single and double-column coarse screen newspaper cuts. Heralds (rotogravure). Press matter.

THE WHIMS OF SOCIETY.

William A. Brady Presents Ethel Clayton in William Addison Lathrop's Intensely Interesting Story of New England Factory Life.

Cast.

Nora Carey.....Ethel Clayton
Marlinoff.....Frank Beamish
John Travers.....Jack Drumier
Hugh Travers.....Frank Mayo
Katherine Carey.....Katherine Johnson
Mrs. Van Schuyler.....Zadee Burbank
Eleanor Van Schuyler.....Pinna Nesbit

Directed by Travers Vale.

The Story: A vivid and authentic picture of life in the New England mill towns where modern slave-drivers grow affluent on the fruits of the toil of suffering women and leave them victims to their overseers. Nora Carey slaves to save her sister from the streets, but it might have been the same old story had not the son of the proprietor seen the beauty of her nature and saved her from herself and others.

For the Program: The merciless grind of mill-town life.
The story of a girl who fought to save herself.

Advertising Phrases: Lincoln only freed the negro slaves.
Bursting bomb saves hero his inheritance.

Feature These Players: Miss Clayton as the mill girl.
Frank Mayo as Hugh.
Frank Beamish as the foreman.

Stunt Suggestions: As the scenes of this picture are laid in a ribbon mill, get the dry goods stores to make special runs on ribbon displays in their windows with stills showing the factory scenes and a card: "Ever see how ribbon is made? The Whims of Society shows some wonderful scenes in a ribbon mill in the course of its gripping story (house and date)." Follow the press-sheet suggestion for a newspaper contest. You can get some surprising material if you will arrange to guard the identity of the writers. Mount nine dirty one-dollar bills on a card lettered: "Could you support yourself and young sister on this? Yet, in The Whims of Society, a welfare worker asked Nora Carey how much she saved out of this munificent sum. See what the answer was (house and date)." Decorate the lobby frames with streamers of bright ribbon.

Advertising Aids: Two designs each, one and three-sheets. One six-sheet. Free advance poster. One and two-column cuts. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Two-color heralds. Slide. Press sheet.

THE WARRIOR.

General Enterprises Presents Maciste, the Giant of Cabiria, in an Even More Thrilling Display of His Marvelous Strength and Acting Ability.

Cast.

Not stated.

The Story: During the first advance against Italy by the Austrian troops, Maciste, with many others, is surprised and captured. Maciste, with his wonderful strength, effects the rescue of the prisoners, who take refuge in the castle of an Italian Count. Later Maciste learns that the Count is a prisoner in his own castle and is about to pay the penalty for his patriotic deed. Maciste rallies the Alpine troops and rescues the Count and his family just in time to save the aged nobleman's daughter from the advances of an Austrian officer. The play abounds in displays of strength that seem to verge upon the supernatural.

For the Program: The giant of Cabiria in a gigantic production.
Marvelous Maciste more wonderful than ever.

Advertising Phrases: See Maciste carry a 500-pound gun carriage upon his back.
Uses living man as a club with which to fell his enemies.

Feature This Player: The cast is an Italian one, and the players, with the exception of the star, are not known to America. Centre the publicity upon him. Dwell upon the wonderful feats of strength that made him the real star of Cabiria and tell of his even greater achievements in a play specially designed to exploit his prowess.

Stunt Suggestions: Nothing in the way of the ordinary stunts can equal in value the enlargements of scenes from the play showing Maciste's marvelous feats. There are nine of these in a set. Get them all and use them for window work at least a week in advance of showing, if possible.

Advertising Aids: Several styles of one and three-sheets. One each, six and 24-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Nine different frames with scenes and enlargements. One and two-column cuts. Press books.

later all are aghast when she enters his studio, where a group of friends are admiring his masterpiece, and shatters it with the remark that as he has broken her heart so she destroys his statue, but she shows the repentant Steele his own statue in the apartments of a neighbor and explains that the statue she destroyed was one the envious artist had copied. Steele realizes at last that her love is far deeper than the whim of the society woman.

For the Program: Hearts and hopes in Greenwich Village.
A vivid picture of America's only Bohemia.

Advertising Phrases: Artist's model shatters his masterpiece to regain his love.
Motion picture star sacrifices career for man she loves.

Feature These Players: Edna Goodrich as Doria.
Herbert Evans as Steele.

Stunt Suggestions: For window work get plaster statues in pairs, stain them with dye to suggest clay. Smash one and place it beside the other with a card: "To win back the love of the sculptor, Doria apparently destroyed his masterpiece, but she really smashed the replica made by an envious fellow artist. A thrilling story of art life in New York in Who Loved Him Best? with Edna Goodrich (house and date)." For a street wagon use, "Attend the Greenwich Village Bazaar at (house) tonight. America's Most Bohemian Celebration." Decorate the lobby with lanterns and streamers and repeat the advertisement for the festival.

Advertising Aids: One design each, one, three and six-sheets. Unmounted banner. Half-column cut. One to three-column cuts and mats. Program cut, 4x4. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Slides. Press sheet.

THE WOOING OF PRINCESS PAT.

Vitagraph Presents Gladys Leslie and an Unusual Cast in a Blue Ribbon Romance of Royalty. By William Addison Lathrop.

Cast.

The Princess Pat.....Gladys Leslie
Eric .....J. Frank Glendon
Gen. Marask.....Bigelow Cooper
Count Ladislaus.....William Dunn
Grand Duke of Paxstadt.....Charles Kent
His three sons.....{ Carlton King, Templar Saxe, J. Albert Hall }

Directed by William P. S. Earle.

The Story: Princess Pat is the daughter of the Grand Duke of Paxstadt, whose kingdom is threatened by Eric, the Iron Duke of Warburg. Geieral Marask adviser of Eric and a close friend of the Grand Duke, sees in a marriage between Pat and Eric the only means of averting the war, but Pat is not willing to be married for policy until she realizes the great need for sacrifice. She treats Eric with disdain and disregards his overtures until her three brothers come to rescue her from her supposedly tyrannical husband, when she suddenly realizes the worth of the man she has married and proves that it is never too late for a woman to change her mind.

For the Program: Kings are just ordinary people with crowns instead of hats.
The Princess Pat was every inch a queen and every inch a woman.

Advertising Phrases: Married to save a kingdom, she loves to save her king.
Shielded royal husband from brothers' swords.

Feature These Players: Gladys Leslie as Pat.
J. Frank Glendon as Eric.
Bigelow Cooper as the General.
Charles Kent as the Grand Duke.

Stunt Suggestions: Place a gilt paper crown in a window display of millinery with the card: "The Princess Pat, of Paxstadt, wore a crown instead of a hat, but she was just as much a woman as any who will wear these dainty confections (house and date)." The display of any commodity can be hooked up through the use of stills and a card lettered "The Princess Pat (you can see her at house and date) might have been a queen, but she never had your chance to enjoy our 39c chocolates. That's where you have the advantage of Royalty." Any item may be used in place of the chocolates. For a lobby attractor put large gilt paper crowns on your ticket seller and doorman with a sign, "Come in and visit the Princess Pat."

Advertising Aids: One design each, one, three and six-sheets. Window cards. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Slide. Heralds. Plan book. Press sheet.
Released Feb. 11.

THE WOMAN BETWEEN FRIENDS.

Vitagraph Presents, as a Blue Ribbon Feature Alice Joyce and Marc McDermott in a Screen Adaptation of Robert W. Chambers' Novel, Between Friends.

Cast.

Cecelie, the flower girl.....Alice Joyce
Herbert Drene.....Marc MacDermott
Jack Gaylord.....Robert Walker
Cecelie's father.....Bernard Seigel
Herbert Drene's wife.....Edith Speare
Cecelie's sister.....Florence McCafferty

The Story: Drene is a sculptor who is completing his masterpiece with his wife for his model. Gaylord, his friend, has won and discarded the wife, and he now turns to Cecelie, the flower girl, who loves Drene. Cecilie has seen Gaylord and Mrs. Drene together and supposed from their actions that they are man and wife. Mrs. Drene's dress catches fire at a street fete and Drene's grief reveals their relationship to Cecelie, whose knowledge of the unworthiness of the wife is discovered by Drene. He vows to be avenged by Gaylord's death, but Cecelie averts a tragedy and brings peace to both.

For the Program: Robert Chambers' vivid picture of Paris art life.
Lost wife to find more worthy love.

Advertising Phrases: Reads guilty wife's secret in eyes of woman who loves him.
The vivid life of the Latin Quarter.

WAR PRICES—Going Down
The well-known "Orpheum Collection" consists of melodramatic music almost exclusively, and is one of the best collections of agitatos, hurries, mysteriosos, short plaintives, etc., on the market. Particularly useful in serial pictures for bringing out the dramatic points. My last edition is printed from the same plates as the first, on a good quality of paper, and sells for these reduced prices: Piano (solo), 1st, 2d or 3d series, 35 cents each; Violin (1st, 2d or 3d series), 25 cents each; Cornet (1st, 2d or 3d series), 20 cents each; Flute, Clarinet, Trombone, Drums (1st or 2d series), 20 cents each.

Simplex

Looking at Things from the Right Angle

The grocer who magnifies the importance of quality of merchandise to the extent of neglecting courtesy, appearance of store and neatness of clerks is bound to fail. And so is the one who installs mahogany fixtures and employs a Beau Brummel to sell flour with weevils in, rotten potatoes and rancid butter. All this applies equally to the Motion Picture business. A House with dirt floors, grocery boxes for seats and mouth-organ music would be a financial failure with the best of projection. On the other hand, it is folly to magnify the trimmings at the expense of the main thing—projection. Take a hint from the Master Exhibitor, of Rialto and Rivoli fame. After going the limit in beauty, music and appointments he didn't say: "Now it doesn't matter much what kind of projection I give the people." Not on your life he didn't! He looks at things from the right angle. His success is due to that. Therefore, Simplex projection for him. Now the beauty of all this is that you can have projection exactly as good as these Motion Picture Palaces, and it will cost you less in the long run. For the Simplex is so built as to be almost repairless. That's one of the reasons for the permanence of its perfect projection. (When the better costs less, is there any excuse left for choosing that which is less good?)

A proposition as good as the SIMPLEX looks good from any angle

Feature These Players: Alice Joyce as the flower girl.

Marc MacDermott as the sculptor.

Stunt Suggestions: Get the libraries to advertise the coming of the story and offer window cards to book sellers as an attractor to copies of the book. Work the literary list, if you have one, with special cards. You might arrange with a local florist to have a girl in fanciful costume sell flowers in the lobby for the benefit of the Red Cross or other charity, sharing the publicity with the florist. The papers will always give space to a benefit feature and you can letter your lobby cards to fit.

Advertising Aids: One style each, one, three and six-sheets. Window card. Herald. Lobby displays. 11x14 and 22x28. Slide. Plan book. Press sheet.

Released Feb. 11.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

ISSUE NO. 56 (Feb. 2).

If civilians even do not know how to rescue wounded or injured or unconscious persons in the least painful manner, this issue of Screen Magazine explains in detail all of the holds taught by the Red Cross to its thousands of men and women who go into the battlefield of Europe to rescue the wounded and bring them to base hospitals. Under the heading of Science, the Screen Magazine shows the food models which Hoover is using to show the country what to eat and how best to cook it. The Screen Magazine goes behind the model and shows the manner in which it is made, prepared and decorated. The Screen Magazine also takes one behind the scenes in the Punch & Judy theater in Greenwich Village, and shows how the strings are pulled in this puppet show. The entire science of shipbuilding as it relates to the building up of an immense American merchant marine is another interesting subject in this magazine, which closes with a "Miracle in Mud," produced by Willie Hopkins, entitled "Joan of Arc."

ISSUE NO. 57 (Feb. 9).

Education—Making blind kiddies see. These children were almost blind; if they had been left at regular school work they would soon have gone totally blind. Work at the Museum of Natural History enables them to keep up with other children without injuring their eyes.

Engineering—Coal economy. It is proposed to build a great dam and power plant at Niagara Falls for the purpose of transmitting electricity to cities within a 500-mile radius. Millions of tons of coal can be saved every year. The Niagara River flows from Lake Erie to Lake Ontario and is 30 miles long. New York City lies within the 300-mile belt. The 400-mile belt includes Cincinnati and other large cities.

What We Eat—Shrimps for "Milady's Salad." Those delicious little fish that you eat in salad are caught down off the coast of North Carolina. They are chiefly found on muddy bottoms—generally three miles from shore in about 30 feet of water.

Industry—Cutting ships in two for the great U-Boat drive. Great Lakes steamers—too large to go through locks of canals—are being cut in two and taken to the Coast to relieve the shipping shortage.

Art—"Miracles in Mud," produced by Willie Hopkins, noted sculptor. "Sad but True."

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 8 (Jan. 23).

Everywhere in the East—Factories close and millions of people stop work as all industry east of the Mississippi halts for five days by order of Fuel Administrator Garfield. Subtitles: Business districts in all cities are deserted. Broadway, New York, on the first of the ten "workless" Mondays ordered. As it appears on the ordinary business day. The effect in Park Row. Meanwhile long lines of coal cars are rushed to needy places. Barges carrying coal to ships that have been delayed for weeks on account of the lack of fuel.

San Francisco, Cal.—Everybody everywhere is knitting something for the Boys; even bellhops spend leisure moments weaving new yarns. Subtitles: The Chinese cook also tries his skill with milady's knitting needles. This outfit comes in handy these wintry days.

Crawford Notch, N. H.—Two are killed and thirty cars are smashed to pieces when a freight train jumps the track while going 60 miles an hour. Subtitle: The wreck catches fire from burning cinders.

With the Stars and Stripes "Over There" (Official U. S. War Films. Released by the Committee on Public Information through the American Red Cross). Subtitles: French aviators demonstrate to American troops in France the use of an observation balloon, attaching the basket for ascent. The big gas bag is controlled from land by means of a cable. This balloon is especially designed for observation work and must be dragged from location to location. Official war pictures of the activities of the U. S. army in France will be shown regularly in the Hearst-Pathe News.

Chicago, Ill.—One of the severest blizzards in history sweeps the Central States, stalling trains and paralyzing the transportation of coal and other necessities. Subtitles: The streets of the Windy City are buried under several feet of snow. Powerful snow-plows bore a path through the heavy drifts.

San Francisco, Cal.—What! Mechanics all enlisted! So the blithe debutantes get right on the job to study the whys and hows of their autos. Subtitles: And when they balk in the middle of the road. A "smart" class.

Turin, Italy.—Once more the legions of France sweep through Sunny Italy, but this time on a mission of help—rushing to the aid of Italy's resolute forces. Subtitles: First pictures of the arrival of Allied troops in Italy after the Teuton invasion. A company of chasseurs marching through the city of Brescia. Huge throngs acclaim the warriors of Italy's noble ally. 'Neath the shadow of the historic Cathedral of Milan. Off for the front where, side by side with Italy's forces, they will turn the tide against the Huns.

MUTUAL WEEKLY.

ISSUE NO. 5 (Jan. 28).

New York City.—Fireman Dies in $150,000 Scenery Fire. Stage settings are destroyed in big warehouse blaze.

Salisbury, Mass. — Longest wooden Bridge in the World Swept Away by Tide and Ice. It was one of the main arteries between New England and Canada.

Wilmington, Cal.—Heavy Fog Causes Trolley Collision. Passengers escape with slight injury to seven only.

Squantum, Mass.—Zero Weather Freezes Harbor. Dynamite is used to blast a passage through two feet of ice to Government shipbuilding plant.

Paris, France.—The Famous Sculptor, Rodin, Who Died Recently.

Somewhere in Italy.—The Allies are Throwing Reinforcements Along the Piave Front. The German advance was halted by quick co-operation.

Somewhere in America.—Aeroplanes for Our Flyers in France.

Paris, France.—The Zeppelin L-49, Captured at Bourbonne-Les-Bains, is Exhibited at the Invalides.

Chicago, Ill.—Citizens Mobilize to Dig City Out of Record Snow Fall. Food supply halted—trains tied up three days.

Bemis, N. H.—Freight Wreck on Mountain Division Blocks Traffic for Days. Failure of brakes to work piles up 35 cars in famous Crawford Notch.

An Open Letter from OSCAR M. SHECK, General Organizer of the I. A. T. S. E., to the Moving Picture Machine Operators of America

International Alliance Theatrical Stage Employees

Of the United States and Canada

107 West 46th Street

New York City, January 19, 1918

Dear Brothers:-

So many members of our order have written me for information concerning the SHECK UNIVERSAL ADAPTER for utilizing MAZDA lamps in motion picture projection, that I have thought best to make a public acknowledgment of these letters and a public reply to them.

Through the courtesy of the MAZDA engineers, I was invited to be present at the first semi-public demonstration of MAZDA lamps in the projection of motion pictures. I realized at that time that I was witnessing an epoch-making event in the motion picture industry, and the thought occurred to me that the fruits of this wonderful invention would be more quickly available if some one were to perfect an appliance by which any existing make of motion picture projection machine could be adapted to the use of these MAZDA lamps immediately, instead of waiting for the machine manufacturers gradually to awaken to the importance of the discovery. Then the thought came to me: Why not design such an appliance myself? This idea was the inception of the SHECK UNIVERSAL ADAPTER. Its development is too long a story to tell here. Suffice to say the adapter, passing through various stages of experimental evolution, is now standardized and is operating satisfactorily in many theaters in this country. And the demand for the adapter is far in excess of our present factory capacity! So much for that; now a word as to the lamps.

Like every new thing, incandescent projection has encountered the usual number of scoffers. Many fellows who watched Robert Fulton's steamboat on its first trip up the Hudson laughed at the "hair-brained inventor who imagined that any such fool contrivance would ever work!"

I have even heard of operators who have opposed MAZDA projection on the theory that it would make projection so simple that experienced men would not be needed in the booths. To this objection I reply that it is sheerest nonsense. I take it as a trite proposition of industrial ethics that any invention which improves the conditions under which a man works, automatically raises the standard of his craft and tends to increase remuneration for his services. The linotype machine, at first bitterly opposed by the printers of this country, is one of many proofs of this axiom.

Successfully to project pictures with MAZDA lamps requires as complete a knowledge of the art as under the old arc-lamp regime, while the steady quality of the incandescent light gives an operator more time to watch his picture on the screen and to keep his films clean and in first class running condition.

But the big advantage of MAZDA Projection from the operator's standpoint is the matter of health! No more fumes in the booth--no more tuberculosis! That's the thing which should recommend these lamps to all of us who are familiar with the disastrous inroads of this terrible disease in our brotherhood.

And finally, the saving of operating costs! In the great majority of installations, my adapters and MAZDA lamps save the theaters 75% of the cost of current, so our grateful friend, Mr. Exhibitor, is not likely to commit himself to a policy of further retrenchment.

It is my firm conviction, therefore, that incandescent projection stands for better working conditions, improved health, an elevated industrial standard, and in the long run, a higher wage scale.

Yours fraternally,

Oscar M Sheck

Sure Fire Helps to Success

The CHALMERS PUBLISHING CO., publishers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and CINE MUNDIAL, the leading trade papers devoted to the Motion Picture Industry, are also publishers of the only library of practical text books dealing with the cinema art adapted to the every-day needs of those already engaged in the business or about to engage in it.

These text books, six in number, have been written by men carefully selected for their proven knowledge of the subjects to be covered, being almost without exception veteran members of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S editorial staff; entirely without exception these men are at present actively engaged in the motion picture business—they are not dreamers or theorists.

Each text book has been written to provide real help to the individual who reads it—consistent with the unswerving policy of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD—a genuine "Dedication to Service."

Motion Picture Handbook

for Managers and Operators

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Third Edition

The most complete, exhaustive and instructive work ever published on the projection of moving pictures. Contains complete instruction with detail illustrations on all leading makes of American projection machines and practical information on wiring, lenses, carbon settings, screens, theatre equipment, etc., etc. 700 pages and over 300 illustrations, $4.00, postage paid.

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A real help and business builder for exhibitors, theatre managers and owners. It tells all about theatre advertising, type, printing and paper, house programs, lobby displays, newspaper advertising, posters, heralds, etc., etc. 300 pages. $2.00, postage paid. P. S.—Mr. Sargent conducts a weekly department in this same style in the Moving Picture World, which contains many up-to-date business-getting ideas.

Motion Picture Electricity

By J. H. HALLBERG

An up-to-date work on the electrical equipment of picture theatres by a practical electrical expert. Contains chapters on electricity, D.C. and A.C. current, resistance and resistance devices, electric service, wiring, lighting, etc. Also contains practical suggestions and all necessary reference tables on wire sizes and capacity, weights and measures, heat units, etc., etc. 260 pages, illustrated. $2.50, postage paid.

Modern Theatre Construction

By EDWARD BERNARD KINSILA

Our newest book is one that will fill a long-felt want to those contemplating the building of a theatre. This is a very complete and exhaustive work by an architect with many years of practical experience in theatre and studio construction. Fully illustrated, with considerable data as to requirements, construction cost, building laws, etc. $3.00, postage paid.

Technique of the Photoplay

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Third Edition

Complete instruction in photoplay writing, including study of plots, how to obtain and how to develop; writing the synopsis; studio requirements; script preparation and marketing; technical terms; examples of actual scripts in facsimile typewriting, etc. 400 pages. $3.00, postage paid.

Screencraft

or the Making of a Photoplay

By LOUIS REEVES HARRISON

A comprehensive and thought-provoking treatment of the subject in a series of chapters, similar to a university course of lectures, by a successful writer of photoplays. Also contains a complete working scenario and several sample pages of manuscript. 150 pages; illustrated. $2.00, postage paid.

SPEER ALTERNO CARBONS

Have Revolutionized Alternating Current Conditions

Intense Illumination Noiseless Projection
Wanderless Arc Perfect Operation
No Change in Carbon Holders

The operators' difficulties, which included a wan dering light, ghosts in the picture, sputtering of the arc, and a noise almost intolerable, have all been rele gated to by-gone days.

The adoption of SPEER "ALTERNO" CARBONS, merely necessitates the proper placing of the carbons in the upper and lower holders. No new hou sing, no additional lamp jaws, no adapters—simply the same equipment used for other carbons.

The exceptional advantages and possibilities now afforded for alternating current counteract the arguments formerly used for the installation of elab orate and expensive apparatus for the changing of alternating current to direct. Operators and project ion experts now declare that perfect projection is obtainable with alternating current equipment.

Write today for the folder describing SPEER "ALTERNO" CARBONS.

RIVOLI THEATRE
is cooled in hot weather and perfectly ventilated at all times by the TYPHOON
Cooling and Ventilating System

The owners had before them the perfectly satisfactory service given by Typhoons in their famous Rialto Theatre for three years.

They knew from experience that only the Typhoon System could give them the same satisfactory cooling and ventilating service in the Rivoli Theatre.

And for that reason they selected the Typhoon System for the Rivoli.

Isn't it a mighty good reason for installing Typhoons in your house?

Let us give facts and figures. Write us to-day--NOW--while you think of it.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

DO YOU KNOW?

that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN." Insist on that name and save money.

You ought to have our latest catalogue. Write us today.

ORGANIZATION

The early process of development and growth being passed, the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has effected a systematic organization of thoroughly competent men whose officers, agents and general staff are working together for one common end——

EXHIBITOR SERVICE

That we have attained this end cannot be denied. That the Exhibitor is being served and served well is shown by the amount of weekly circulation this publication enjoys in excess of any other paper. Following is one of the many letters we receive daily:

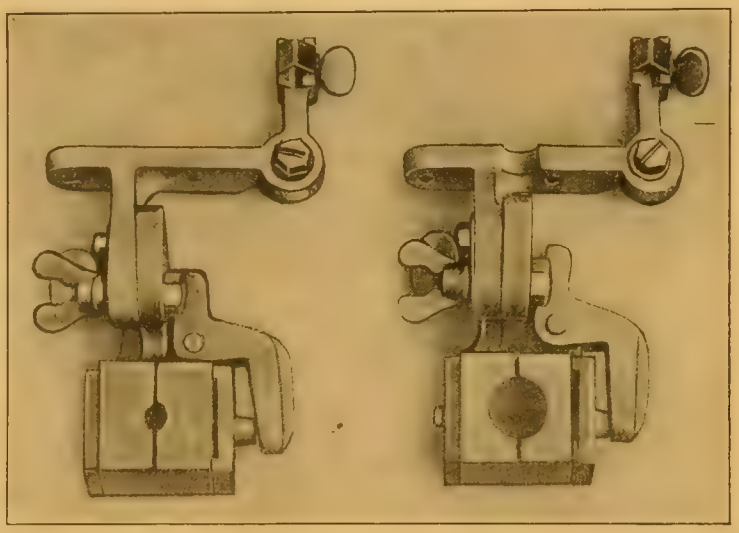
"GRIP-O"



"GRIP-O" is the name of our New Carbon Holder. The clamping member consists of two heavy inserts held fast between two walls by means of a screw. Each insert is grooved to fit half the circumference of a carbon. When the carbon is placed between the inserts and the screw tightened, the result is a perfect contact extending almost around the entire circumference of the carbon. The inserts are grooved in a number of sizes to fit any carbon.

TRIANGLE

Here's the Proof

You have read our recent advertisements describing the new Triangle policy towards exhibitors? We have told you of the box office value of Triangle pictures, of the fair and square business methods of Triangle, and of the fact that Triangle prices enable any exhibitor to make money.

We have also told you that exhibitors appreciate the policy of Triangle and as a result are flocking to the Triangle standard.

Here is a letter from Mr. H. R. Mason, who operates the Acme, Crystal and Rex Theatres at Goldsboro, N. C., which will give you the experience of an exhibitor who is using Triangle service.

"Regarding using Triangle Service, will say that ever since the majority of the manufacturers adopted the plan of shifting the Film Footage Tax to the exhibitors, we have been using from one to three Triangle dramas and comedies every week, besides the two-reel Keystone Comedy every Saturday for the past year or more. It gives me much pleasure to say that both the dramas and the comedies have been entirely satisfactory to me and my patrons, and business I am glad to say has not fallen off and if anything increased as a result of the change. On the days that we run pictures only, we get just as good if not better results from the Triangle Service as the Taxed Service, and what's most interesting to us is that we are getting the service for almost half of what we have paid for the Taxed Service.

I am indeed glad that you, together with a few of the other recognized manufacturers, decided to align yourselves on the side of the exhibitor, for to defeat the exhibitor, you have defeated the whole business, and you are to be commended by the exhibitors for the stand you took and are now taking in their behalf.

TRIANGLE

If the service we are now getting from your company continues to hold up as it has since we began with you the last time, it would not surprise me a bit if your Atlanta exchange will not receive shortly an order for their entire output.

While attending the convention of the North Carolina League held in Raleigh last week, I came in contact with a number of the real North Carolina exhibitors, and those that are using and have been using Triangle service for the same reason and beginning at the same time I did, had everything to say in its praise, and naturally with the endorsements Triangle received from these influential men, your Atlanta office should be taking on a bunch of new business.

I sincerely trust that exhibitors all over the country will rally around the TRIANGLE banner and accord you the support you so much deserve, and in doing so they will not only help you but help themselves by getting a consistent and well balanced service at a price they can afford to pay, and no WAR TAX.

Assuring you of my appreciation for the stand you have taken, and for the excellent service I am getting from your company, and that should the occasion arise that I can be of any assistance to you, I am yours to command.

Yours sincerely,

H. R. MASON, (Signed).'

Do not Mr. Mason's statements inspire you? Are you satisfied with the service that you are now securing for your theatre? Let us suggest that you get in touch with the Triangle Exchange nearest you so as to know exactly what Triangle has to offer you.

MARY PICKFORD
in
"STELLA MARIS"

BY WILLIAM J. LOCKE, SCENARIO BY FRANCES MARION
DIRECTED BY MARSHALL NEILAN

An ARTCRAFT Picture

"STELLA MARIS" already has taken its place as Mary Pickford's masterpiece. It is the picture the fans will use as a basis for judging all pictures for years to come.

"Almost as good as 'Stella Maris'" will mean a photoplay "almost" perfect. Here's what the New York City newspapers told their readers about "Stella Maris" when it was presented by Harold Edel at the Strand Theatre:

The Sun—"Such artful mimicry in the simultaneous delineation of two sharply contrasted characters is rarely to be seen as Mary Pickford is doing it this week on the screen at the Strand Theatre. . . . The picture, with its many novel incidents, extraordinary photography and its interesting story undoubtedly lifts the actress as high as she has ever gone in her art."

The Tribune—"Mary Pickford did wonderful character work as the little waif who bore slight resemblance to her beautiful Stella Maris. If any there be who think that Mary Pickford is not a great actress let him go to see 'Stella Maris' and be converted."

The Evening Telegram—"When worshippers at the shrine of Mary Pickford have seen 'Stella Maris' which is at the Strand this week, they will probably be more devoted than ever."

Goldwyn Pictures

4,000 Exhibitors now have "That Goldwyn Feeling"

EXHIBITORS everywhere are making a profit by presenting Goldwyn Pictures in their theatres—and today profits come ahead of everything else.

Goldwyn productions are stronger and the Goldwyn stars have gained tremendously in popular favor. Next to profits these points are second in importance to exhibitors.

Only a letter like this one from Ned Burns, manager of the New Theatre, Staunton, Va., can describe the enthusiasm and confidence of the 4,000 Goldwyn Pictures exhibitors of North America:

"Goldwyn has established a record for consistency in high-grade production. A feeling of pride goes with the presentation of Goldwyn Pictures. This feeling makes a manager want to stand in his lobby and say to his people: 'Come in and see what I've got. Nobody in the world has anything finer.' . . . .

"We are pleased with the service you give us. We are a small town customer and we value the fair and kindly consideration we receive."

Goldwyn invites the many exhibitors who have not yet booked Goldwyn productions to test the strength of our stars and productions on the basis of box-office profits.

A VERY wise man once said: "By their works shall ye know them."

Paralta Plays were planned to make good. They were taken in hand by W. W. Hodkinson because they were solidly good. The ten plays already finished have all passed the one test of MAKING GOOD. The full twenty-four pictures of the three star series, already laid out, are planned with one end—to make good.

Back of these promises is the word of W. W. Hodkinson, who never put over an ounce of bunk in all his history.

But TODAY you need take no man's promise, because the Paralta Plays are making good before your eyes, in theatres, in reviews, in letters, in the enthusiasm of fans. And

That's Performance

Take the first four Paralta Plays, four of the most solid, substantial successes ever shown in the theatres which have booked them. Four of the most uniformly successful plays in the judgment of the trade reviews. Four of the most consistently good pictures that the hardest headed men in the business ever handled.

The star, the director and the writers who have been associated with the greatest money-making successes the business has ever seen, have collaborated to make the New Pathe serial, the most phenominal box-office attraction that has ever been presented to the exhibitor.

The HOUSE of HATE

"The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine," "The Iron Claw," "Pearl of the Army" and "The Fatal Ring," all serials, have built new and better theatres, paid off mortgages, proved that no season is a dull season if you give your audiences the show, and made many exhibitors rich. And the proof of these facts lies in every town in the land!

Now Pathe presents this greatest of box office stars in the most interesting, thrilling and expensive serial she has ever been in, with the most popular leading man she ever had—

Antonio Moreno

There can be no question but what it should be the triumph of Miss White's career

Newspapers, Public and Exhibitors Acclaim
PEARL WHITE
As the Greatest Motion Picture Box-Office Attraction in the World.
The HOUSE of HATE
is absolutely certain to increase that reputation.
It is estimated that the public paid over $5,000,000.00
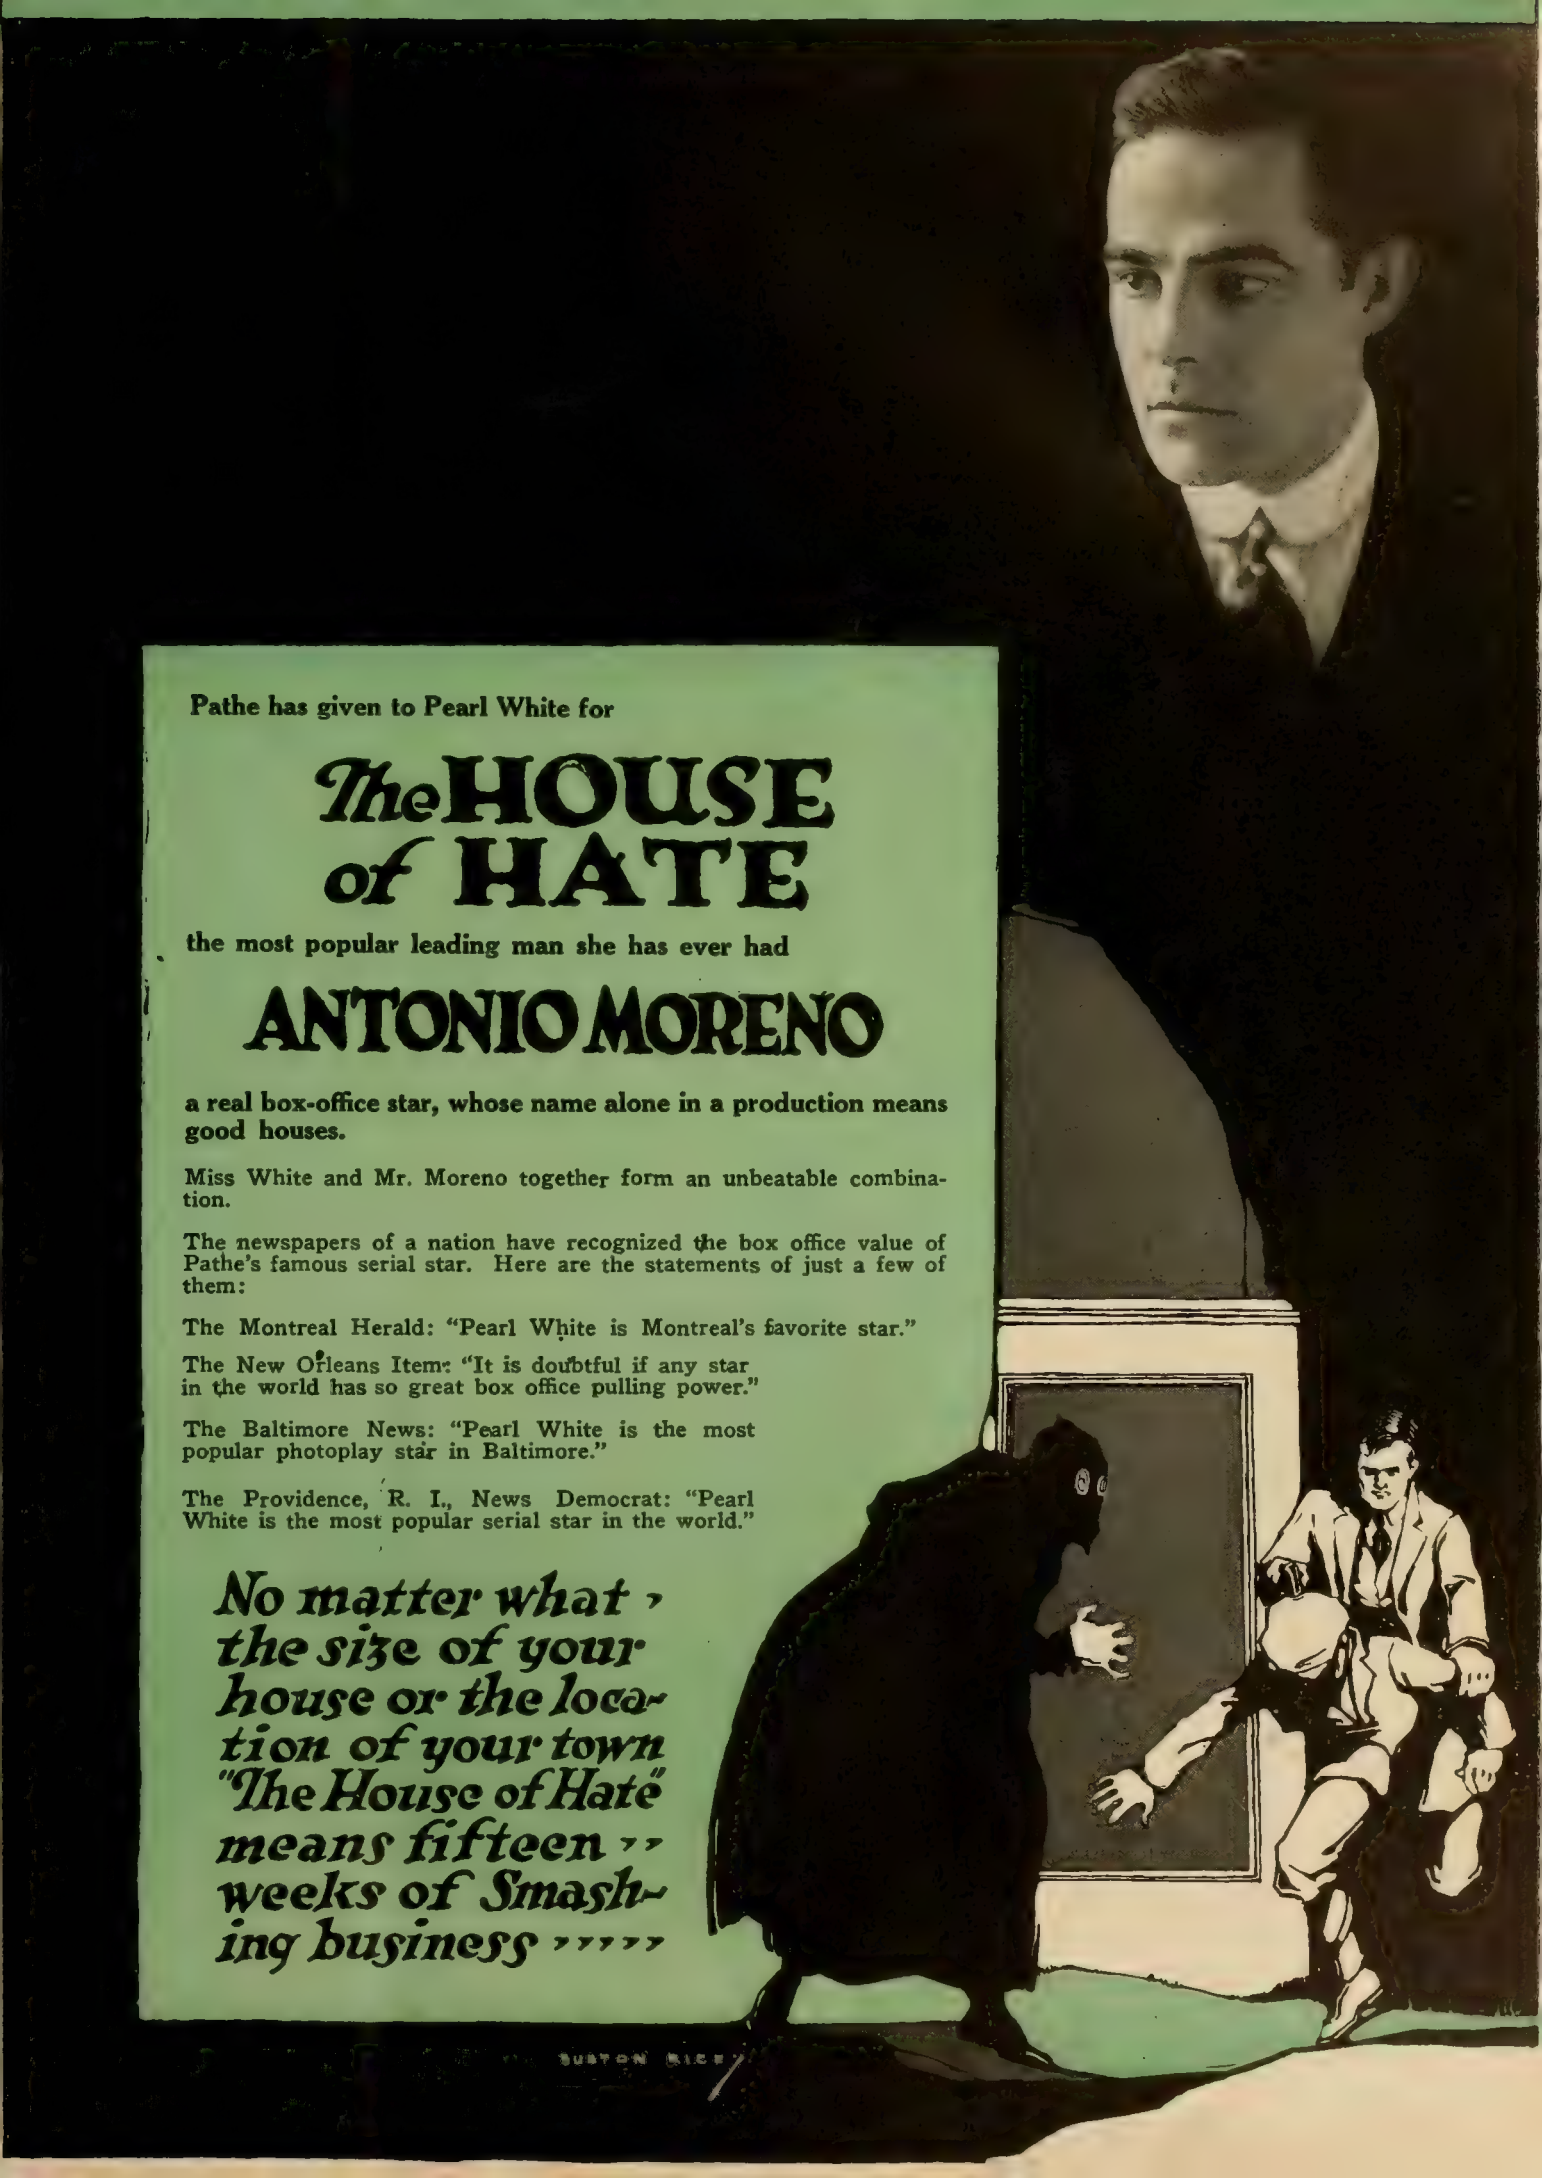
to see "The Iron Claw" alone. Pathe considers "The House of Hate" to be far superior to "The Iron Claw."
What just a few of the exhibitors say (Pathe received over a thousand letters from exhibitors on "The Fatal Ring" only):
J. J. Cluxton, manager of the Pantages, San Francisco, reported that he had increased their matinees over $50.00 per day with a Pearl White serial.
The Queen Theatre, Omaha, reported that they could not handle the crowds on Pearl White in "Pearl of the Army."
M. S. Marks, president of the Marshfield Amusement Co., of Chicago, owning four big houses, wrote: "In view of the tremendous drawing power of Pearl White, don't you think it would be advisable to increase 'The Fatal Ring' to twenty-five episodes? She is a sure money getter."
H. C. Cooley of the Bijou Theatre, Wilmington, N. C., wired: "Audience cheered Pearl White in 'Fatal Ring' so loud today could be heard a block away."
Rain or snow, melt or freeze, past performances prove that Pearl White in "The House of Hate" will fill your house for fifteen successive weeks
BURTON RICE



Pathe has given to Pearl White for

The HOUSE of HATE

the most popular leading man she has ever had a real box-office star, whose name alone in a production means good houses.

ANTONIO MORENO

Miss White and Mr. Moreno together form an unbeatable combination.

The newspapers of a nation have recognized the box office value of Pathe's famous serial star. Here are the statements of just a few of them:

The Montreal Herald: "Pearl White is Montreal's favorite star."

The New Orleans Item: "It is doubtful if any star in the world has so great box office pulling power."

The Baltimore News: "Pearl White is the most popular photoplay star in Baltimore."

The Providence, R. I., News Democrat: "Pearl White is the most popular serial star in the world."

No matter what the size of your house or the location of your town "The House of Hate" means fifteen weeks of Smashing business

The Director and Writers of
The HOUSE of HATE
Have proven by past successes their mastery of serial art
George B. Seitz, the director, wrote the scenarios of "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine," and "The Iron Claw," all phenomenally successful. He directed "The Fatal Ring," another clean up. No director in the business has been associated with so many or so popular serials. The sets, photography, and direction of "The House of Hate" are perfect.
Arthur B. Reeve is the author of the famous "Craig Kennedy" stories in the Cosmopolitan. He was also the author of "The Exploits of Elaine" serial. With Chas. A. Logue, another successful author, he wrote "The House of Hate."
Bertram Millhauser, the author of the scenario, also wrote the scenarios for "Mystery of the Double Cross," and "The Fatal Ring."
Louis J. Gasnier, president of the Astra Co., which produced "The House of Hate," directed "The Perils of Pauline," the first of the long line of successful serials put out by Pathe. As president of the Astra he supervised the production of "The Iron Claw," "Mystery of the Double Cross" and "The Fatal Ring."
Pathé has released seventeen successful serials: No other house can anywhere near approach that record. Pathé goes on record as saying that "The House of Hate" is the greatest serial of them all!!

CHIEF FLYNN

FACTS Mirrored in "THE EAGLE'S EYE"

FACTS about Imperial Germany's spies and plots in America are the foundation of the marvelous story in each of the twenty episodes of "The Eagle's Eye"—

FACTS obtained by William J. Flynn, recently retired Chief of the Secret Service, when he was combating the enemy plotters against American lives and American industries—

FACTS in the first episode—"The Hidden Death"—show how Imperial German agents in America made plans for torpedoing the Lusitania.

FACTS about how Imperial German Secret agents conspired to blow up the Hotel Ansonia in New York City the night of the Naval Ball, are pictured with powerful dramatic tensity in the second episode—"The Naval Ball Conspiracy."

FACTS of how the Kaiser's arch-conspirators schemed to destroy a part of the Atlantic Fleet with electrically controlled torpedoes, while it steamed down the Hudson river on Presidential Review, are pictured with exciting suspense in the third episode, "The Plot Against the Fleet."

SAY FILM EXPOSE OF BERNSTORFF IS HAMPERED
Are there enough Prussian sympathizers in New York to make it unprofitable to show a motion picture serial laying bare the activities of Count Johannes von Bernstorff, Captain Boy-Ed and other plotters in this country?
The Whartons, producers of "The Eagle's Eye," founded on cases described by William J. Flynn, formerly Chief of the United States Secret Service, yesterday said Marcus Loew and Joseph M. Schenck, managers of the New York Theatre and other motion picture houses, had declined to book the picture on the ground that it would offend their German patrons.
Mr. Loew last night denied the statement. "I have not seen the photoplay ever exhibited before government officials and pronounced all right. The first instalment was exhibited before the Committee of Public Information there to-day, I am told. I haven't heard the result. If the federal authorities say it is not pro-German, I will look at it and I will rent it if I think it good enough."
Moving Picture World
LOEW HOUSES REJECT "THE EAGLE'S EYE."
Marcus Loew and Joseph M. Schenck, managers of the New York theater and other leading moving picture houses here and in other cities, have refused to book the new serial photo-drama, "The Eagle's Eye," founded on a story by William J. Flynn, who recently retired as Chief of the U. S. Secret Service, exposing the machinations of the Imperial German Government's spy army in this country, on the ground that it would prove detrimental to their business, because "it would be too great a contrast to the thoughts and opinions of their German patrons."
In Washington, recently, the first three episodes of "The Eagle's Eye," as shown at the Strand theater, were reviewed by Chairman George Creel, of the Committee of Public Information, and were approved by that committee. The films were shown at the Washington Press Club, and viewed by many prominent officials and journalists.
New York Times
BARS GERMAN SPY FILM.
Ex-Chief Flynn Says Theatre Owner Fears It Will Offend Teutons.
A prominent moving picture theatre proprietor of New York City, according to a statement made last night by William J. Flynn, ex-Chief of the Secret Service, has refused to exhibit in his chain of theatres a moving picture serial dealing with the activities in this country of von Bernstorff, Boy-Ed, and other German plotters and agents for fear that it might not meet with the approval of his German patrons. The story of the picture is based on information given to the producers by Chief Flynn, who supplied the data to them when he was at the head of the Secret Service. The Chief imparted the information with the consent of his official superiors.
The picture was shown at a private exhibition in this city a few days ago. It is known as "The Eagle's Eye," and in it such well-known plotters as Bernstorff, von Papen, Dr. Albert, and other prominent members of the German spy organization are impersonated. The sinking of the Lusitania and others acts which the Germans have committed, or threatened to commit, in the present war are featured.
The picture will be exhibited before the Committee on Public Information in Washington today.
The New York theatre owner who refused to exhibit the picture gave as his reason, Chief Flynn stated last night, that he did not care to hurt the feelings of his German patrons, of whom he said he had a great many. He was afraid, according to Chief Flynn, that it would be too great a contrast to the thoughts and opinions of his German patrons.

WOULD CHIEF FLYNN SPONSOR A PRO-GERMAN PICTURE?

WOULD THE COMMITTEE FOR PUBLIC INFORMATION IN WASHINGTON PASS A PRO-GERMAN PICTURE WITHOUT A SINGLE CHANGE OR ELIMINATION?

What Official U. S. Government Censorship Thinks of

"THE EAGLE'S EYE"

The Committee on Public Information, composed of George Creel, Chairman; the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, officially passed and endorsed the first three episodes of this patriotic serial.

Is the Kaiser's censorship and approval also necessary to permit American propaganda pictures to be shown to American audiences?

Everyone knows that the sinking of the Lusitania was planned in the United States by Imperial German agents. They do not know that it was also planned to blow up the Hotel Ansonia, New York, and kill 800 American naval officers attending the Naval Ball. Nor do they know that an attempt was made to torpedo the Atlantic Fleet while in review before President Wilson in New York Harbor. These, and many other facts generally unknown, are revealed by Chief Flynn in "The Eagle's Eye."

Every American should know of the Imperial German Government's deliberate crimes of murder, arson and sabotage against America and its people—all the while posing as a friendly nation.

"ONE PICTURE IS WORTH MORE THAN A MILLION WORDS"

—Arthur Brisbane

Exhibitors should give their patrons the opportunity to witness these revelations because the purpose of this serial is to inspire patriotism and foster loyalty.

Pro-Germans may thus be led to change their allegiance and disloyal Americans influenced to alter their unpatriotic views.

Facts and Comments

IS Marcus Loew slipping? We have always considered him a good showman, but his recent decision not to run the Chief Flynn Secret Service series known as "The Eagle's Eye" in his houses because they might offend his German patrons has us guessing. Mr. Loew's solicitude for his German patrons is pathetic. It would indeed be heartless to harrow their tender sensibilities with pictured interpretations of such incidents as the sinking of the Lusitania and the murder of hundreds of its passengers and of the cold-blooded machinations leading up to that catastrophe, framed and executed by other tender-hearted Germans. But it shall not be so. Marcus has decreed it. Therefore, if red-blooded Americans want to see "The Eagle's Eye" they will have to go to some other theaters than those controlled by the amiable Marcus.

It was rather impolitic of Marcus to express himself thus openly on a subject so delicate at this particular time. These tender-hearted Germans have just sunk another ship which was laden with American soldiers on their way to fight the battles of democracy. Would Marcus have us believe that it would not be good for his German patrons to know how atrocious and how indefensible were the acts, by Germans, that compelled this Nation to take up the cudgels in behalf of humanity? We have every sympathy for the man of German extraction or birth, now living in this country, who has to contemplate the terrible deeds of his Fatherland, but we do not understand where he comes in for any consideration in a matter of this kind.

The picture in question has been shown in Administration circles at Washington and received the official O. K. It may, therefore, be justly considered as a good picture for everyone, including our German motion picture fans, to see. When we are pouring out our treasure and giving our lives to preserve the institutions of this nation against the assaults of a merciless power it is no time to prate of the feelings of anyone. In the meantime many other patriotic theater managers will book "The Eagle's Eye," so that all good and loyal Americans, no matter what their origin may be, will have an opportunity to see to what depth German diplomacy has descended.

SPEAKING of "The Eagle's Eye," Courtney Ryley Cooper, publicity man for the Whartons, who are making the picture, dropped into the MOVING PICTURE WORLD office the other day with a regular whale of a pike which he had caught through the ice near the Wharton studio at Ithaca, N. Y. It was a beautiful specimen of its kind and was fully three feet long. No, we didn't weigh it—we ate it and can assure you that it was a prime pike. Cooper was very modest about it; said it was really a very ordinary catch and calmly told of hooking one a few days before as long as himself and which later engaged the attentions of nine hungry persons. Once Cooper was a circus press agent.

SPECIAL Moving Picture Ambassador to Spain and Italy, Frank J. Marion, contributes an article on conditions in Spain which appears in this issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and in which there is much food for thought and stimulus for action. According to Mr. Marion the picture in Spain is about where it was in America ten or twelve years ago, which condition should suggest something interesting to enterprising American promoters looking for new fields to conquer.

DOESN'T look as though this business of exhibition of motion pictures was going to be scrapped just yet. From everywhere comes news of new theaters opening or projected. Los Angeles is now "pointing with pride" to a brand new million-dollar picture house. We also print an interesting story of the remarkable development of the Schoenstadts' enterprise in Chicago and of the fine new picture house they are now building. Is it reasonable to suppose that the man on the ground—the exhibitor—would be able to put over these great projects if he and his friends didn't have faith in the permanence of pictures? Buck up, all you weak sisters; become optimists.

THINGS have taken a turn for the better in the Virginia censorship situation. Last week, when the news first broke, we were all ready to take a hack at Jake Wells for what seemed to be a surrender to the reactionary forces in that state. According to the reports received it looked as though a Virginia censor law was but a matter of a few hours. We now learn that Mr. Wells has made such a hot fight against the proposed law that the committee in charge of the bill has been compelled to change its plans materially.

Knocking Elbows With Drama

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THE foundation of a successful play is usually made of plain, hard facts. The ornate superstructure which rises from the rude unseen part may appeal powerfully to the imagination, yet the very security it enjoys results from a solid and unadorned groundwork of actuality. Real events may constitute so many piles of dirt and stone by the roadside, so much loose material only partially related, but the right stuff is there. When the skilled workman comes along he knows at a glance the value of what others have passed by with indifference. He can shape that stuff into the substructure of an intense story, and just such material is lying all around us, within easy reach.

There is not space enough on this page, nor on many others to follow, for me to give even a summary of the infinite variety of dramatic material, near at hand, yet almost wholly unsuspected. To the keenly observant eyes of the instinctive dramatist there is enough at hand to keep a thousand like him busy all their lives. But the business man, occupied with a multitude of claims on his attention, may regard some of the finest of this material as commonplace, if he notices it at all, because it is so abundant.

"By way of illustration," as the orator says when he wants to tell a funny story which has no bearing on the subject matter of his speech, I went to a well known producer, once the editor of a big daily paper, to see if he would not send some of his best pictures to the boys in camp. He responded generously, and we fell into a general conversation. He was seated at a flat top desk signing letters. It was very late in the afternoon. Lights were blinking in neighboring office buildings. His typists were preparing to join the crowd rushing homeward through slush and mud. I felt a little stupid and hungry.

Suddenly, in illustration of a point he wished to make, he related an incident of newspaper life. It was a simple recital of fact, brief and to the point, but I grew interested and pressed him for details. He pushed aside his work and gave the causes which led to results he had barely mentioned. Without affectation, almost unconsciously, he told a better story than I have read in many a day, on the screen or in print. I became so fascinated I forgot the humdrum office, the threatening weather and the weary commonplaces of monotonous workaday existence.

There sat a producer of motion picture plays most innocently engaged in telling what could be shaped by the skilled hands of a dramatist into the substructure of a deeply sympathetic screen story. In his own hands were some of the finest kinds of material, only half recognized as such, if at all. No eternal principle applied to what he was telling, no dogma, no arbitrary ideal, nothing based on works of art already known and admired. There was involved simply the tenacious concrete of a tense and absolutely true human experience.

Is that not strange? Really great dramatists refuse to do what theorists want them to do, just as really great writers refuse to put forth what others wish them to write. Stories were told long before any rules and regulations for telling them were propounded, because they were imaginative creations only on that part of them to be shown, while deep down beneath them were the cold and hard facts of life in its infinite variety. They may be beautiful creations above ground, but they stand strongly and firmly when they are resting on the bedrock of actuality, the sound basis of what has really occurred.

You are at table in a hotel with a dramatist, telling him that the one essential demand of the drama is action. You get an example of it at the next table. A handsome man and a beautiful woman are entertaining some friends. A plain man comes up, says a few words to the handsome man, and not only causes him to disappear but takes his place and soon has the company in a roar of laughter, all save the beautiful woman, who sits pale and terrified. There is your action. The material incident is there without the motive and the spiritual action. There is some revelation of character, but the underlying passions, impulses and disclosures of soul are visible only to the man of observation and imagination who has been listening to your theories.

He watches and listens, his temperamental sensibilities on edge, and gets at an unveiling of the inner life of those people at table. The handsome man was about to elope with the beautiful woman when they ran across some of the husband's friends in the restaurant and attempted to disarm suspicion by entertaining them at dinner, but one of them managed to send word to the husband, the plain man, and he proceeded to make the handsome man ridiculous in the eyes of all.

The actual fact is there and the action, but they spring from deep-lying motives. The cleverness of the handsome man in disarming suspicion pales before the cleverness of the husband who turns the menace of tragedy into a comedy, in his unrolling the scroll of his magnanimous character and that of his contemptible rival at the same time. You believe in action because you are accustomed to regard only the outside of human conduct and do not make a business of probing the depths of human consciousness. Action is simply the means to ends more profound.

In the crossing of designs at that table it was not necessary for the husband and lover to come to blows, the easily conceived result of their meeting, the regulation and theatric idea. In actual life we are given these surprises instead of the generally accepted deeds of violence. The husband's grief may have been just as poignant, particularly if it was largely his own fault, but he was the modern man, clear-headed and resourceful in an emergency. We get at a finer idea of what drama means, "the illumination of life," when we go to actual life for our materials and found our story on modern facts.

We get these facts from knocking elbows with the drama going on all around us, and when we have material which is true, which is vital, we enter a conspiracy with the audence which leads to an acceptance of treatment, no matter how imaginary and romantic. We engage the sympathies of people in front, appeal to their emotions by natural means, evoke their conviction that what they see is really happening, not being told, and get them into vibratory response with a definite purpose.

Such is drama of today, not a preachment to arouse a spirit of resistance, not a theatric exaggeration of the conventional, not the projection of a picture which holds us at a distance, obviously the vehicle for some complacent actor, the assertion of the ego, but a story which appeals to our common elemental emotions in accord with our common interests and beliefs. It is far from being an easy matter to define all this in a few words but drama may be educative, humanitarian, social, spiritual, what it will, or what creative genius may wisely select, but it is best when it inspires and when it is what Shaw calls "an illumination of life."

The Comic Trinity of the Screen

By Edward Weitzel

HAVING been instructed to jot down a few impressions of the art of the three leading comedians of the screen, I am apprehensive that, like the character in one of Bulwer-Lytton's plays, "Mine office is one of danger." The question is: which one to name first? Each is a leader in his own particular field. The entire world of moving picture supporters are agreed on this point; but that does not settle the matter of precedence. All screen fans know their names, but each has his or her favorite, and the merits of all three actors are so pronounced that the matter is difficult to decide. For my part, I am not going to attempt it and, that I may not be accused of prejudice, I shall permit neither age, weight nor manly beauty to have any voice in the decision, but will follow the safe and sane course of naming them according to the letters of the alphabet. This puts Roscoe Arbuckle first, Charles Spencer Chaplin second and Douglas Fairbanks third. It also puts the lightweight of the trio between the heavy and the middle weight; but brains and not brawn is the chief stock-in-trade of all three, so the chances are even.

Arbuckle, Chaplin and Fairbanks! It would be almost impossible to name three comedians whose methods are so dissimilar, but all three achieve the same result—unrestrained mirth that acts as a tonic to the overwrought nerves of humanity and lightens the burden of life. Serious business it is, and one that can only be followed successfully by giving it the careful thought and arduous physical effort that have marked the careers of the leaders in every profession. There is no royal road to eminence in making people laugh. Whatever of special fitness any of the trio may possess has been developed and kept in good working order by constant labor and striving after greater perfection. Here is the ground upon which they all meet and it accounts for the deftness shared in common by the three comedians.

Without intending any reference to his size, the comedy method of Roscoe Arbuckle may be set down as being broad only in its intent, not in its execution. This actor's claim that he depends upon his skill as a comedian and not upon his bulk to beguile his admirers of their smiles and laughter is founded on fact. The exaggerated costume generally worn by him is merely a minor aid to the effect he wishes to create and loses most of its force after the first few minutes. He must then depend upon the amount of speed and comic suggestion he can give to situations that would cease to be funny if the spectator were permitted to realize how slight the reason for his mirth. Comedy of the Arbuckle brand never plays itself, and must be treated with the delicacy of touch acquired by long practice and strict attention to the matter in hand. The gifted and dexterous gentleman from Japan who keeps a dozen plates spinning in the air at the same time is not compelled to be any more intent upon his task.

The points of attack in the Chaplin comedy method have been clearly defined for hundreds of years and have been handed down, from generation to generation, as the proper places at which to launch a comic assault. This actor is a master of the slapstick, knows every trick of this branch of the art and fully realizes that all comedy is born of the misery of others. The mental or physical suffering suggested by one of his comedies would drench the screen in tears, if there were the slightest indication that the pain was real. Knowing that there are never any serious consequences in reality to the pokes, jabs, falls and slaps to which the actor is constantly subjecting his victims, we roar with laughter at the mishaps and applaud the skill with which they are brought about. Charles Chaplin's comedy method is that of the clown—one of the greatest clowns that ever lived. His fertility of invention and sureness of execution is rivaled only by that other great clown—Fred Stone.

In one regard the comedy method of Douglas Fairbanks is unique. He is probably the first comedian to rely upon his own personality and the frequency with which he risks that personality's neck to win the laughter and applause that put the Fairbanks films in such good demand. His smile is a large asset, also his manner of sudden and determined love making; but no actor before him ever created anywhere near the amount of delighted amazement. To most of his spectators the wonder is not that he performs this feat or that, but that he performs it at all. He combines positive apprehension with comic surprise as his chief aid to favor and finds it comparatively easy to turn the sigh of relief into a gale of laughter, as he emerges safely from one dare-devil stunt after another. As the inventor of the acrobatic-stop-at-nothing school of comedy, Douglas Fairbanks deserves the thanks of a public only too willing to welcome a novel method of exciting its mirth.

Screen and Press

By Robert C. McElravy.

MOVING pictures have been fortunate in these times of stress and general upheaval in being able to render definite and world-wide service, in addition to the usual entertainment. In this they have not differed from the stage or literature in willingness or generous desire, but they have demonstrated a speedier adaptability and accessibility to public needs. The older arts are cumbersome and slow to respond to sudden changes; they suffer in nothing so much as their own sluggishness and glacier-like movement. Moving pictures, on the other hand, are still in the first impetuous rush of a young pugilist just learning his powers; they are striking out in so many directions that their performance is as varied as it is fascinating.

The films invade many fields of interest. There is scarcely a department of human activity in which they do not play some active part today—theatrical, literary, educational, scientific, civil, military, industrial—any form of endeavor you please. The camera is indeed swift in its work of delighting and informing the masses.

In timeliness the screen has certain functions which hitherto belonged almost exclusively to the daily press. These functions are happily more complementary than competitive. In certain respects these two great publicity mediums supplement each other with wonderful clarity. The news of today is the screen topic of tomorrow, or the succeeding day, and between the printed and pictorial treatment of an event the public gets an excellent idea of what is going on in the world.

The public in attending a moving picture show is not entirely in search of amusement. It goes for instruction as well. It is impelled by a genuine thirst for information at first hand, and the wiser portion of this public has long since learned that if it stays away it is more than apt to miss something of importance.

The screen today is unfolding manifold wonders before its patrons. In times like these it is idle to speculate on "what the public wants." This was perhaps a live and burning issue prior to August, 1914. But the public of today is not so much concerned with mere wants as it is with actual needs, and the thing it needs above all else is a better understanding of some of the things it is already getting. Hence the popularity of the screen as a purveyor of war activities on land and sea, of new inventions and discoveries, of scientific data, of travel and description and the innumerable things uppermost in the minds of an awakened people.

Both the screen and press thrive upon concurrent happenings with a news interest, and in times like the present almost everything has a news end. While the other arts are executing a great turning movement, in a bewildered and somewhat reluctant, but entirely perceptible way, these mediums are putting before the people the daily history of things as they occur. They are broadening and deepening the general intelligence in an amazing manner. We are learning new things about geography and government and the rights of the common people to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" every hour.

That the public is thinking over present events very seriously is not to be doubted for a moment. If there was ever any truth in that old obsession that the tired business man did not care to think, it can scarcely be held true at this time. He thinks when he reads his newspaper and he thinks when he goes to see moving pictures. There is something about the films that brings out thought at first hand, for they have the desirable faculty of leaving much to the imagination. Even in the course of an ordinary screen narrative, the observer is encouraged to build out the situations depicted in his own way. His eye follows the movements of the characters and his mind elaborates and fills in certain things of its own account. Each observer draws heavy drafts upon his own philosophy of life and he literally tells the story to himself in his own way.

In other ways than in the proffering of news events have the screen and press become good allies. They have collaborated repeatedly with success in the simultaneous publication and presentation of serial stories. The reading of serial instalments and subsequent watching of their production upon the screen appeals to many people, one form of the story thus advertising the other to advantage.

Realism Carried Too Far

By Sam Spedon.

HERE is an extract from a letter we received from a moving picture patron. The points are well taken and worthy of the attention and consideration of every producer and exhibitor:

The writer is an ardent "movie" patron, but wishes to register a protest directed to the general character of the film stories now prevalent. A rehash of the same old material, ending with the principals kissing as the picture fades out. No moral to that class of picture. Nothing of originality. Then the war (?) films showing, with too accurate presentation, all the brutality of conflict, which while a tribute to the producer's genius, is a shock to those whose sons and brothers are now awaiting the over-seas journey.

Nothing constructive is gained, but much damage is done and the attendance seriously effected.

There is only a certain average quota of capacity for horror and it seems this has been reached. I welcomed a film as did the rest of the house that brought out a lesson. The story was a vision and was so ingenious that its impression was wholesome.

Can you not suggest that producers swing into themes that emphasize the need of purer home relations, bring people back to a realization of the benefit of home service and love.

What More Can Be Said.

Coming from a layman this plea so far outdistances anything we might dictate editorially or a critic might write analytically, we feel our inability to add to it.

Touching upon war subjects, we will venture to say, that it does seem that they have been carried a bit too far. We often thought it quite unnecessary to display "close-ups" of mutilated bodies and other detailed horrors to show what should be left to the imagination and forgotten without disturbing our slumbers in the least.

We can tell about them, we can read about them, but when we depict them through the camera and on the screen, we might as well actually see them. A case in point was the premier showing in New York recently of some scenes of the Russian revolution, where the military shot into the populace from armored automobiles, blowing men and women into pieces. The sight was so sickening many of the audience, exhibitors and exchangemen, hurriedly left the theatre unnerved.

So Far and No Farther.

Realism is often carried too far in dramas and comedies. This leaves nothing to the imagination and the titles and substitutes still further rob the imagination of its exercise. Such realism comes dangerously near the lewd and obscene. It requires a mighty hardened sinner with a blindness for virtue, to condone it. It is no wonder we have these appeals for clean comedies and pictures. The virtues of motion pictures take care of themselves, but the evils and defects are the concern of all of us. Therefore, we should take heed to the dangers of too much realism, that may sully the fair escutcheon of the industry and bring the just and unjust wrath of the censors upon us.

This Week's Digest

By Sam Spedon.

Heatless Monday and Tuesday.

WE HAVE all been looking forward to a cessation of the heatless Mondays and thought last Monday would be the last, but a heatless Tuesday, with the thermometer way down below zero, freezing up transportation of coal and freight, made it necessary to continue the heatless Mondays a spell longer. Well, better luck next time. Days are getting longer and pretty soon they will be getting warmer. That's another story.

Cannons to the Right of Us, Cannons to the Left of Us.

We had Dr. Canon Chase in New York State who fired some hot shots into the "movies" in favor of a state board of censors and now we have Dr. James Cannon of Virginia doing the same thing. If this roar of cannons keeps up, the industry will have to draw up its heavy artillery and silence it. It requires some bravery to face the cannons' mouths, but with a united allied force in a clean and open fight is bound to win in the long run. Publish and expel the defilers and pro-sensationalists of the industry; go to it and the victory is won.

Always Give the Benefit of the Doubt.

Many persons from outside the State, so called "fly-by-night" exhibitors, by showing objectionable pictures in Virginia have brought disfavor upon the legitimate exhibitors. This was probably the motive which prompted Jake Wells to declare himself in favor of censorship, particularly by the National Board of Review and police department, similar to the system in New York City. Those who are familiar with his views emphatically state that Mr. Wells is unalterably opposed to legalized state censorship, and had only the best interests of the industry at heart by declaring for some sort of censorship to prevent unconscionable persons bringing reproach upon it. It would, therefore, be in our opinion, unfair to Mr. Wells to come to any decided conclusion until we have heard his version of his declaration, thereby giving him the benefit of the doubt.

There is still hope from what we can learn that the legislature and the new Governor will give the question further consideration and greatly modify the bill or accept a substitute for it.

A Good Example.

The relinquishing of a $100,000 salary by Wm. A. Brady because the organization paying it to him could not afford it under present conditions, is an example which some of the stars to whom he and other producers have paid enormous salaries might well follow. He has always said that he believed moving picture stars were overpaid and their demands were ruinous to the industry. We are glad to know that he practices what he preaches. We wish there were more like him.

Pointers on South America.

In conversation with Arthur Lang of the Nicholas Power Co., who has just returned from a business trip to South America, Cuba and Mexico, we received these bits of information:

All these Latin speaking countries are wide open and anxious for American films. They prefer them to all others. In most parts of South America, the people are pro-allies. In a few sections they are pro-German. In the territory bordering on the Panama Canal they are neutral as far as war sentiment is concerned, but all are partial to American pictures. The prices of admission range from forty to eighty cents. Cuba is strongly pro-American and the American productions are at a premium. Mexico is divided, but largely pro-German among those in power.

The reason America does not do more business with these countries is the fault of the manufacturers. They do not cultivate it as they should. It is almost useless to send English speaking salesmen to that part of the world without a knowledge of Spanish. To do business through an interpreter is a poor substitute and unsatisfactory to both principals. Some of the salesmen representing our manufacturers are not accustomed to the people, lose patience and practice the "take it or leave it" methods in vogue here in the early days of the industry. Others misrepresent and pave the way for distrust of more politic salesmen who may follow them, instead of inspiring confidence and cultivating their trade.

After taking these statements into consideration, it strikes us that it would be well for the manufacturers of America to school and educate young men to prepare for this rich field of endeavor. "For just as sure," said Mr. Lang, "as night follows day this field will be deluged with European films after the war, and it should be our play to leave no stone unturned to cultivate it now." He also told us that a limited number of European films were now received in South America by way of Spain, although American films were in greater demand.

LAURA HOSTETTER MARRIED TO HECTOR ALLEN McLEAN.

Miss Laura Hostetter, who resigned from the reviewing staff of the Billboard a few weeks ago, was married on Saturday, February 2, to Hector Allen McLean, of Chicago, at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred M. Hostetter, of Evansville, Ind. Mrs. McLean has many warm friends among the moving picture fraternity and was recognized as a fearless and clear-sighted reviewer who knew how to express her views in well-chosen sentences. Her husband is a Chicago newspaper man. The couple will make their home in that city.

Tuscania Had Been in Pictures

Torpedoed Steamship Served as Background in "Daughter of MacGregor," Featuring Miss Grant.

FEW in the United States were more keenly grieved over the Tuscania disaster than Miss Valentine Grant, the motion picture star. Miss Grant had several friends among the officers of the torpedoed craft and attended a dinner at which they were guests when the British transport was last in this country. Miss Grant first made the acquaintance of the Tuscania officers when she was acting in a production called "The Daughter of MacGregor," which was made for the Famous Players by Sidney Olcott. A number of the officers of the vessel also appeared in the picture, many scenes of which were taken aboard the ship while tied to its pier at the foot of West Eighteenth street, New York.

"Never have I met a finer or braver group of men than the officers of the Tuscania" declared Miss Grant. "When last I met them they told me of the numerous attacks made upon their ship by submarines, but all regarded the danger lightly.

"Captain McLane, who stuck to his ship till the last, is a particular fine fellow, a British gentleman through and through, and I am happy indeed to learn that he was among the survivors."

Several of the Tuscania's officers were guests of Miss Grant at the recent showing of "The Belgian," in which she is starred, at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel for the benefit of the Belgian Relief Fund.

UNIVERSAL CITY OPEN TO PRODUCERS.

In a denial of the report published in the current issue of a theatrical trade paper to the effect that Pathe has acquired Universal City, is contained the interesting information that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has issued an invitation to all film producers to avail themselves of its West Coast producing facilities.

The World's informant is Carl Laemmle himself. The Universal's step is simply a measure of conservation. With Universal City sufficiently large to accommodate many companies, it is felt that producers will be glad of this opportunity to so drastically slash their overhead. "This, according to our idea," said Mr. Laemmle, "is the most practical way for all producing companies to cut down their overhead expense and eliminate the waste which has been discussed so much of late. It does not require much figuring to see what a vast amount of money could be saved to the whole industry if all, or nearly all, the pictures made by the various concerns could be produced at one plant, with one overhead. Fortunately, there is a more friendly feeling among the producing companies than in the old days and this would make it possible for many of them to work in the same plant harmoniously as well as profitably."

Mr. Laemmle concluded his statement with the hope that the invitation so generously extended by his company, would be generally accepted.

Kalem Chief Writes of Spain as a Market

By Frank J. Marion

American Cinema Commissioner Says Country Is Fertile Field for the Picture Making Genius of the United States

Madrid, December 20.

MADRID is buried in snow! "Sunny Spain"—like "Sunny California"—has pulled one of those stunts in the winter line which puts a crimp in the moving picture business and sends everyone to the blankets and the hot Scotches. I came here, as I usually go to the Coast, with light clothing and an expectation of warm weather, but believe me, I have been only too glad to get into woolen unmentionables and a fur coat—everything but the ear-lappers. The only comfort I get out of it is that it all reminds one of little old New York.

In fact, Madrid is much like Manhattan in many ways. The people, especially the men, have a rather metropolitan bearing, and we see very little of the picturesque national costumes shown in the bullfight postcards and other works of art. An audience at the Theatre Real, where Barrientos is singing in grand opera, compares very favorably with the average crowd at the Metropolitan, with the addition of the King and Queen of Spain, and a sprinkling of army officers in the most gorgeous uniforms ever seen outside a Dillingham production. And the folks at the picture shows are about the same sort as at home with about the same tastes—that is, they know a good thing when they see it and are quick to show their appreciation or disapproval.

As I have already cabled, I believe Spain is a fertile field for the moving picture genius of America. A circuit of houses built on the American plan and showing the best American pictures would make big money. The proprietors of the moving picture houses in Spain are dreaming the same nightmare that disturbed the tranquility of the business in the States a few years ago—they think that any old pictures augmented by cheap vaudeville will get the business; and the vaudeville is fierce. The worst we ever dared to show at home is great compared with it. It usually consists of about four different Spanish dancers, each one of whom would get the hook in ten seconds' time at an Eighth avenue amateur night—and a team of knockabout comedians whose stuff is so old that it has long, white whiskers.

Of course, the audience don't stand for it—they hiss the performers most of the time they are on—and the Spaniards are some hissers. Why they persist in forcing this rotten vaudeville down the throats of their patrons is just as mysterious as it was in America. The music is a tinpan piano played by a "professor" who learned the game on a stone pile. Yet the Spaniards are crazy over good music, and pictures put on a la Rothapfel would surely get the coin here.

Oh, You William Fox!

But oh, you William Fox! I haven't seen or heard of a Fox production in Spain since I have been here, and yet I know they would sweep the country and crowd the Danish, Italian and French pictures off the boards. They eat up the Fox line of stuff in this country and they have got the money to pay for it. If Spain does not get into the war, and I don't think she will, Spain will be in a better financial position after the war than any of the European countries, and with her big population should be the best field for our pictures on this side of the water.

But the business should not be done through Spanish agents in the regular export fashion. The French have their own people here. Pathe Freres are doing a fine business with their own direct offices, as they have at home, and we ought to have sense enough to take the Pathe cue.

It ought not to be difficult for our big distributing organizations to find Spanish-speaking managers in the States who could be trusted to come over here and open up exchanges directly operated from New York. Shipments can be made regularly and safely from New York and Havana by the Spanish line—and the stock, after it had been run here, could be sent on to the Orient, and another profit taken. Before the war Barcelona was the logical center of the film business in Spain, but war has brought on such a scarcity of coal that the railroads are completely disorganized and some lines are only running two trains a week. Now and during the war, and perhaps afterward, the exchanges should be located at the ports touched by the Spanish liners sailing from New York. Thus the northwest should be taken care of by an exchange in either Corunna, Vigo or Bilbao. I was told by a prominent exhibitor in Corunna that there are 500 houses in this territory paying from $25 to $100 for film service. Does that look good? Then, the southwest territory should be taken care of from Cadiz—which could also handle Portugal in normal times. The southeast territory centers in Malaga or Valencia, and the northeast in Barcelona. Madrid would be merely a distributing center or clearing house for the other branches.

Spaniards Don't Know Douglas Fairbanks.

While the Fox and Ivan lines would undoubtedly be the most popular in Spain, I am sure that all the best known makes in America would find favor here provided there was a careful selection of subjects in America by a man familiar with the Spanish tastes. There is any quantity of Triangle stuff here now, but it is the line of two years ago. In fact there is very little new American stuff here. What I have seen seems to be occasional prints picked up on the bargain counter in New York. And these Spanish agents must be making a big thing of it, for anything with the trademark of an American film is a headliner. All American comedies go big. They are roaring everyday over old Keystone pictures and Fatty Arbuckle gets the big hand. Max Linder reissues are very popular. But I have seen no Chaplins of any age—(they may have been and gone), and they don't know Douglas Fairbanks. Think of it! What a killing Fairbanks would make here. I hate to think of it!

I fully realize that I may appear to be in wrong—that is, that many American manufacturers may think their line is being shown in Spain, and that they are doing a satisfactory business, but I am only reporting conditions as I have found them in two weeks in Madrid, and am carrying out my promise to my friends at home to let them have a line on things Spanish.

American Pictures Make Splendid Impression.

Finally, about my work in Spain. Pathe Freres have done everything in the world for me and I am duly grateful, as should be the whole business in America, which I represent. We have finished the Spanish titles on sixty reels and have about twenty more. Messrs. Brulatour, Mooser and Al Kaufman certainly picked out some great subjects, and I have already had many requests for shows from people, high up, and from oragnizations of influence. The preparedness pictures, showing the training of our new army, have been showing all the week at the Benevente theater, Madrid, and are to continue there indefinitely, playing for a week and then going on to a circuit of theaters about the country, known to be favorable to the Allies. They have made a splendid impression—I can tell that by the murmurs of the audiences, but the press notices are lacking, for all the Spanish papers have been bought up by our friend Fritz, and there is nothing doing in the publicity line unless you pay for it at so much per.

I expect to do my best work in connection with the Minister of Education and the Chambers of Commerce in the various cities. If Mr. Creel decides to have me continue the work in Spain, I shall get up a catalog of my films in Spanish and give it pretty widespread circulation throughout the country, with the idea of getting requests for shows from organizations interested. Everyone tells me I will get all the opportunities I want, for the Spaniard, like ourselves, likes anything in the entertainment line that he can get for nothing. I will furnish the films and operator, and the machine where none is available, and all I ask is a hall in which to project. In many cases I may give open air shows at night, to reach more people. I would like to stay in Spain and think there is a great opportunity for my work here, both as a war and commercial propaganda, but Washington may think differently, and I realize that I am not entitled to an opinion, having been but two weeks in the country. So I may get a cable any minute telling me to proceed to Italy.

TRIANGLE CANCELS WAR HOLIDAY CHARGES.

When the Government issued an order closing the theaters throughout the country on Tuesdays the exhibitor feared for his profits, for he knew the usual expenses would have to be met, in spite of the total loss of a day's receipts each week. Triangle realized this, and immediately arranged to help the exhibitor by not charging for service that was not used on the holiday.

The Rise of the House of Schoenstadt

Romantic Story of the Exhibiting Achievements of Chicago Father and Two Sons in Ten Years

ALASKA and the Klondike never furnished more of the romance of success than is provided in the motion picture business right in this country. An interesting instance illustrating this statement is found in the venture of Herman Schoenstadt and his sons, Henry and Arthur Schoenstadt. In 1908 Herman Schoenstadt was employed as manager in a Chicago installment furniture house; he wanted more money for his services, but the owners could not get his point of view, whereupon Mr. Schoenstadt handed in his resignation and began to look for a better job.

In looking about he met a man named Ferris, who operated a picture theater at Van Buren and State streets, Chicago, who urged him to try the exhibition business. Mr. Schoenstadt had never engaged in the amusement business in any form, but after a few lessons in theater management from his friend Ferris he was induced to try his hand at it.

At that time most of the picture houses in Chicago were in frame buildings, for the most part occupying the first floor of a building erected for business purposes and later transformed into a moving picture palace. One such place was the Palace theater, at Forty-ninth street and Ashland avenue, near the stockyards and in a vicinity populated chiefly by stockyard employes, a curious mixture of a dozen nationalities and a babel of tongues.

Palace Theater.

The Palace seated from 250 to 300 people and cost Mr. Schoenstadt nearly $2,000. Its previous owner had not been too particular either as to the sort of pictures he used or the character and deportment of his patrons, so there was a good chance open for Mr. Schoenstadt to improve his show and to tone up the general atmosphere of the place. He lost no time in doing those things. Tacking up the motto "Biggest Show in the City for 5 Cents," and barring all disorderly persons, he introduced a policy of "first run" pictures and began to acquire a dependable patronage.

Opening on Easter, the venture had a heartbreaking experience during the first month—twenty-one days of rain which cut the receipts considerably below par. Things looked bad, but Mr. Schoenstadt was not discouraged, and then things began to come his way. Only one picture was shown and the audience were rushed in and out thirty-three times daily. An exception to this program occurred when the "Passion Play" in three reels was run on one night. By the time Mr. Schoenstadt had conducted the Palace for two years he became known as "Dad" to everybody in the neighborhood.

Took "Dad" to Put 'Em on Their Feet.

About this time Mr. Schoenstadt bought another house, which was located a few blocks down Ashland avenue at Forty-seventh street and had 220 seats. It had a bad reputation and was losing business, but "Dad" Schoenstadt soon put it on its feet and it became a moneymaker.

From that time on the era of development was rapid. With his sons Henry and Arthur to aid him Mr. Schoenstadt added one house after another to his string. The Archer theater, at Thirty-fifth and Robey streets, was the first large house in the Schoenstadt string. It was built in 1910 at a cost of $500,000, seated 950 people and intended for vaudeville. The owners ran it for a time, but in 1914 it fell into the hands of Mr. Schoenstadt, who took it over for pictures. It has been running successfully ever since under the management of Henry Schoenstadt.

Herman Schoenstadt.

Henry Schoenstadt.

Arthur Schoenstadt.

In the meantime the Pastime theater at Fifty-first and Ashland was bought. The Atlas, a three hundred-seat house at Fifty-first and Wood streets, was leased in 1913, and in 1914 the Alpha, a house seating 290 persons, came into line. Four or five managers had failed to make this house go, but when "Dad" Schoenstadt put in some "big stuff" it succeeded almost from the start.

Mr. Schoenstadt's first big building venture was the construction of the Boulevard Theater, at Fifty-fifth street and Ashland avenue. It was built at a cost of $150,000 and seated 1,000 persons. Pictures only were shown at the Boulevard, but it was a pronounced success.

Another house to join the galaxy was the Rex, at Sixty-ninth and Racine, a 600-seat house. Then Mr. Schoenstadt ran a theater at the stockyards during the cattle show in 1912. This was called the Drovers' Theater, and it coined money during its existence. Another experiment was the Lincoln theater, at Thirty-third and State, in a colored neighborhood, but Mr. Schoenstadt ran it for a short time only.

The latest addition to the Schoenstadt string was made in June, 1917, in the Halfield theater at Fifty-fifth and Halstead streets. It cost $25,000 and seats 1,000 people.

So far all the houses of the Schoenstadt group are paying investments and all are operated under the policy of courtesy to patrons and the best program that can be obtained.

In the matter of pictures shown Mr. Schoenstadt has always favored first run subjects. At all his houses pictures could be seen simultaneously with the downtown showings and always at the popular prices. In addition to good pictures properly projected every comfort was provided for patrons; the houses were kept clean, the attendants were polite, "Dad" and the boys were constantly on the job to see that things were run right and that made the patrons feel at home, for "Dad," by this time, had become a neighborhood benefactor wherever he had a picture theater.

Atlantic the Schoenstadts' Crowning Work.

The Schoenstadts are now at work upon an enterprise that will probably be the crowning effort of their remarkable career. It is the Atlantic Theater, at Twenty-sixth street and Crawford avenue, now under construction. The house will seat 2,000 persons and will cost $250,000. When this edifice is completed and opened the Schoenstadts will have one of the finest picture theaters in Chicago. A view of the house is reproduced herewith as also is a view of the first theater owned by Mr. Schoenstadt—the difference is noticeable and illustrates better than mere words how wonderful has been the growth of not alone this particular enterprise but the exhibition of motion pictures in general.

In this connection it is not out of place to say that Arthur Schoenstadt has enlisted in the Aviation service and has been in New York for the past few weeks preparatory to taking up the course of instruction prescribed by the Government.

PARALTA IN NEW QUARTERS.

On the twelfth floor of a new building numbered 6 West Forty-eighth Street, New York, Paralta has been establishing new offices while the plasterers competed with the furniture movers for right of way. During the current week, in the estimate of Press Representative Walraven, will come a time for the official "house warming," when all will be in readiness for business to proceed.

There will be no thirteenth floor in the building—but there will be a roof whereon Paralta will erect a projection room and establish its scenario department. For reviewers from the trade, press and exhibitors who would behold the Paralta product there will be heat in winter and cool, fresh air in summer. A roof garden projection room seems to establish a record in filmdom.

PARALTA PHOTOGRAPHERS LECTURE TO AVIATORS.

L. Guy Wilky and Robert Newhard, who are at the head of the photography department of the Paralta studios in Los Angeles, have been called upon to render a patriotic duty by lecturing to sixty men who are enlisted in the aviation and radio service of the United States Government.

Both Mr. Wilky and Mr. Newhard during their career have taken numerous panorama scenes from aeroplanes so they are well qualified to instruct aviators.

M., R. & W. MAKING LOBBY DISPLAY.

Menger, Ring & Weinstein, Inc., 304 West 42d street, New York, frame manufacturers, have only recently put on the market an attractive carved oak lobby display the entire equipment comprising nine cases, sufficient thoroughly to cover both exterior and interior of a lobby. Only after a careful study of the lobby situation was it thought advisable by Menger, Ring & Weinstein to manufacture low-priced lobby cases and frames in sets, and they have done so now because of the demand existing among the smaller and medium sized theaters. A neat folder, showing lobby diagram and prices, is being mailed by the manufacturers to any one interested in the improvement of the theater lobby.

EDWARD J. COOPER, OF MOTION PICTURE WAR COMMITTEE.

Edward J. Cooper, manager of the Phoenix Amusement Company, of Phoenix, Ariz., has been appointed a member of the War Co-operation Committee of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry by William A. Brady. This is the third patriotic committee upon which Mr. Cooper has been asked to serve. That he should thus be honored is undoubtedly attributable to his well-known efforts to place motion pictures upon the highest plane, a fact that has brough him into favorable notice throughout the Southwest. Let us have more Coopers.

Famous Players Creates Administrative Bureau

Hiram Abrams and B. P. Schulberg Will Devote Energies to Co-ordinating All Trade Factors

THE creation of an executive department new to film organizations, to be known as the Administrative Bureau, was announced this week by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, naming Hiram Abrams as managing director and B. P. Schulberg as vice-managing director.

The plans and purposes of the administrative bureau embrace a policy that has never before had a place within the inner construction of film companies as they are at present organized. This policy, in its most concrete form, contemplates a more efficient co-ordination of the three primary elements that constitute the industry, toward the end of effecting a stronger alignment of purpose and method among the producing, distributing and exhibiting factors.

The constructive step expressed by the inauguration of this Bureau of Administration is a reflection of the consistent progressiveness that has actuated the course of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation from its inception. Their new identities within their organization also reveal the motive for the recent surrender by Hiram Abrams and B. P. Schulberg of the executive supervision of the Paramount organization.

Hiram Abrams.

At the time of the transfer of these duties Mr. Abrams issued a statement explaining that the action was taken in advance of a well developed plan to establish closer co-operation between producer and exhibitor than was ever before possible. The present declaration of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation indicates the materialization of this plan.

Mr. Abrams, in commenting upon the broad scope of the newly organized administrative bureau as an official link between the company and the exhibitors, said:

"When recently I completed the national tour which I undertook, accompanied by Mr. Schulberg, in order more closely to feel the trade currents of the country I realized that a vastly important and necessary realm of our business, the sphere of personal contact, had as yet been unexplored. I became convinced that there should be a specific official channel through which a friendly intercourse and exchange of thought and opinion with the exhibitors could be consistently conducted. I proposed such an avenue of communication to the members of the executive board of the corporation, asking to be relieved of the details of distribution so that I could devote all my time and energy to the development of such a bond between ourselves and the exhibitors. The executive board itself had often expressed the desire for a closer contact with the exhibitor, and for a greater understanding of his problems, and now, in its wisdom, it has organized this administrative bureau for that purpose.

"I feel that my many years of experience as an exhibitor, and my subsequent and equally long experience as a distributor enable me to grasp the aspirations and comprehend the obstacles of the average exhibitor, and I hope to be of personal service to each and every one of them.

"It is our wish to organize the exhibitors of America into a great common council by which we can obtain the value of their collective thoughts and opinions on all important trade questions. We wish these opinions to extend even to the matter of production itself, for we realize that the exhibitor should have a larger voice not only regarding the manner in which the pictures are delivered to him, but also in the original creation of the subjects which he shows.

"There are many problems within the industry that demand and require solution, but we of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation realize that no trade problem has ever yet arisen or will in the future arise the solution of which does not rest solely with an exhibitor. It will be our purpose to maintain such close and constant association with the exhibitors as to solve the problems that confront the trade as they collectively wish them to be solved.

B. P. Schulberg.

"We want the exhibitors firmly to believe that we consider their problems to be our problems, and we want to render, through the new bureau, special and individual service, and to do our utmost to relieve or entirely eradicate the difficulties of the exhibitor. That is what I would like the exhibitor to consider this department—his own service department, a branch office of his own theater, with Mr. Schulberg and myself as his personal agents. I want him to feel that we are always at his service, as in time I am sure we will make him know it."

President Adolph Zukor concurred in Mr. Abrams' statement that the Administrative Bureau had been specially designed for the welfare of the exhibitor, and said that the company hoped to express through the bureau its appreciation of the fact, not as yet completely realized, that the producer and the exhibitor are in the same business, and the interests of one are the interests of the other, adding:

"I believe exhibitors throughout the country will welcome this new sphere of communion between them and us, as it is certain to result in many constructive and progressive policies."

The administrative bureau is to introduce itself to the trade immediately, and much anticipatory interest centers about its first probable activity.

BOTTOM—MACKENZIE.

The Hotel Arlington, New York City, at high noon Saturday, February 9, was the scene of a pretty wedding, the contracting parties being William V. Bottom, manager of the Washington (D. C.) branch of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, and Miss Irving MacKenzie of Boston. The ceremony was performed in the apartments of Mr. and Mrs. Horton Foster, vice president of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, by the Rev. Henry Atkinson, secretary of the Social Service Commission of America, with little Elizabeth Foster, daughter of Warren Dunham Foster, president of the Motion Picture Community Bureau, supporting the bride. Mr. and Mrs. Bottom are both natives of Boston and were formerly associated in philanthropic work in that city. They will make their home in Washington, D. C.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The National X-Ray Reflection Co., of Chicago, announces the appointment of G. F. Evans as supervising engineer in the territory comprising the state of Ohio (except Toledo and Cincinnati), West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania. Mr. Evans is located at 825-826 Columbus Savings and Trust Building, Columbus, Ohio. He was formerly connected with the W. C. Moore Company, Columbus, Ohio.

Uniform Picture Laws Needed

By Elijah N. Zoline

The Danger to Investors Under Present Conditions from a Legal Aspect— The Remedy

Author of "Appellate Jurisdiction and Procedure in all Federal Courts and in all Reviewing Courts of the State of New York.

THE growth of the moving picture industry has been phenomenal. Fortunes have been made and lost. Many irresponsible producers have, by the law of economics, been eliminated and the industry now seems to be in the hands of responsible and prudent men. Vast amounts of capital are being invested in moving picture enterprises. The general public looks upon the "movies" as a necessity of life and as an institution which has come to stay. But, while this is so, the law as it now stands, affords little protection to the investor of capital in moving pictures.

The early productions of the so-called "silent drama" were often of a very objectionable kind. They depicted imaginary crime and licentiousness of the "wild life of the West," long extinct; criminals were portrayed as heroes; "white slavery," strikes and intimidations were the daily food supplied the young and inexperienced who patronized the "movies" for pleasure and enlightenment. As a direct consequence of such a condition of affairs, in most of the states statutes and ordinances were passed prohibiting the exhibition of any moving picture portraying criminal, immoral, obscene, riotous, disorderly or other scandalous scenes or such that tended to a breach of the peace. These laws have not been repealed and are today upon the statute books.

Judges Differ in Opinions.

Under the pretense that the production of "The Birth of a Nation" would result in a breach of the peace and riot between the colored and white population, this stupendous picture manufactured and staged at a great cost of money and energy was prohibited by the Chief of Police in the city of Chicago and in other cities. It was released only after a litigation lasting several months, entailing a large expense and loss of time. Two pictures portraying the subject of "birth control" have recently been stopped by the Commissioner of Licenses of the City of New York. In one case, Mr. Justice Bijur in an elaborate opinion held that the Commissioner of Licenses of the City of New York ruled arbitrarily in refusing a permit for the picture "Birth Control" produced by the Message Photo Play Co., and, in the other, Mr. Justice Greenbaum, having before him the picture "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle," produced by the Universal Film Co., came to the opposite conclusion. On appeal the decision of Mr. Justice Bijur was overruled by the Appellate Division, but the decision of Mr. Greenbaum was affirmed.

When a permit for a moving picture is denied by the authorities, even in cases where no immorality is portrayed, they invariably rely upon the literal language of the law, which prohibits the presentation of pictures portraying riotous, disorderly or other unlawful scenes, crimes and incidents tending to disturb the public peace. In New York, the commissioner relies upon the words "against morality, decency, or public welfare," very indefinite terms, which may mean anything.

As no drama can be constructed without a showing of a conflict of interests, which necessarily includes a portrayal of both good and bad, it is difficult to see how, under the law as it exists now, a silent drama, which does not offend the law, can be constructed at all. In a case involving the "Night Riders" and "James Boys," portraying Jesse James, etc., the Supreme Court of Illinois said:

"Pictures which attempt to exhibit that career (Jesse James' career) necessarily portray exhibition of crime, and pictures of the 'Night Riders' can represent nothing but malicious mischief, arson and murder. They are both immoral and their exhibition would necessarily be attended with evil effects upon youthful spectators." And answering the contention that the ordinance was indefinite and uncertain, the Court said:

"It is doubtless true, that there are people who differ upon the subject as to what is immoral or obscene. There are the shameless and unclean, to whom nothing is defilement and from whose point of view no picture would be considered immoral or obscene. Perhaps others could be found, with a laxity of morals, who pay homage to art and would not regard anything as indelicate or indecent which had artistic merit, and would look upon any person entertaining different sentiments as of inferior intelligence, without proper training on the subject and blinded with bigotry. Both classes are exceptional, and the average person of healthy and wholesome mind knows well enough what the words "immoral and obscene" mean and can intelligently apply the test to any picture presented to them." * * *

This decision has been followed by most of the courts in the country. Upon the principles laid down in the decision just quoted, the moving picture play "Within the Law" was recently prohibited in Illinois on the ground that it portrayed crime. A nisi prius judge permitted the picture to be exhibited. Many producers attempt, at the expense of art, to get around the law by winding up their plays invariably against the villain making the "goody-goody" man triumph in the end, but, aside from the stupidity of the finis, it is never an argument in court, since the law prohibits the portrayal of crime in any form.

Where the Remedy Lies.

What then is the remedy? The remedy lies in intelligent legislation, but before anything is attempted to remedy conditions by way of legislation, it should be borne in mind that Congress can afford no relief in the premises, because, under the Constitution of the United States, the states have exclusive jurisdiction and power in matters affecting the police powers of the state. Questions of public exhibitions and their morality and decency are within the police powers of the states. This is settled law.

Uniform Law Needed.

Relief must and can be had through a uniform law, introduced in each state. There was a time when the law relating to negotiable instruments was in chaotic condition, for instance, a promissory note good in one state was void in another. This was remedied by a uniform negotiable instrument act passed by nearly all of the states. There are many such instances. Legislation should be procured doing away with censorship and permitting the portrayal of scenes involving elements of crime, if the object of the play is not to encourage the unruly, but is strictly in the interest of legitimate drama and the arts. In other words, that silent drama be given an equal standing with the legitimate drama and that the test of the propriety of the play shall apply equally in both cases. The state would not be without a remedy as it could prosecute criminally for the exhibition of an indecent or immoral picture or play. Only by proper organization embracing every branch and member of the moving picture industry can that result be accomplished. Until that is accomplished, it is plain that large amounts of money ought not to be invested in any one picture, because, as the law stands now, it is difficult to know in advance in what states the public authorities, whether instigated by good or bad motives or by mere whim and caprice, will say that the production shall not be exhibited.

There are other important phases affecting the moving picture industry which require legislative action. All of these subjects should be considered and embodied in one uniform moving picture law.

Public opinion is at the present time friendly to the "movies" and the time is ripe for the commencement of an agitation to do away with censorship of moving pictures. Such a movement would have been out of place a few years ago, but is entirely in order at this time.

JOHN TANSEY IS IN "THE BRASS CHECK."

John Tansey, sixteen years old, and popular juvenile player, appears as a newsboy in support of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the Metro picturization of George England's story, "The Brass Check." Will S. Davis is directing this production, the screen adaptation of which was made by June Mathis, of the Metro Eastern scenario staff.

Tansey started his theatrical career with Nat C. Goodwin in "Wolfville" at the age of two. He has been seen in support of De Wolf Hopper, Blanche Walsh, Dustin Farnum, Robert Edeson, Mary Mannering, Olga Nethersole, and for two years was a featured member of the New Theater Company in New York. In pictures he has supported Mary Pickford, George M. Cohan and Elsie Ferguson and others. He was featured in pictures produced by the old Biograph.

BILLY was sitting at his desk with a copy of the World propped up in front of him. "Hello!" said he. "Hello!" said I.

"What's new?" queried I.

"Nothing," said Billy. "But I notice that the same old theory of manufacturing inefficiency is bobbing up its head again and that Bill Brady has just handed that head an emphatic swat.

"The two items which appear to have gotten under William's skin," continued Billy, "are that he himself cannot find more than twenty-four hours in the average day in which to endeavor to earn his hundred thousand per and that a star pulling down anywhere from five hundred to twice that amount of plunks each week fails to punch the time-clock at 9 a. m. and persists in taking more than an hour for lunch.

"William loses sight of the fact that any man earning over three thousand dollars in the course of a year is paid for the value of his work and that the earnest worshipper at the shrine of the time-clock rarely gets above adding columns of figures or sitting around until some one tells him what to do and when to do it.

"A star is not paid for the number of hours that he decorates the studio, but for the cash selling or rental value of the films in which he appears, and if by working a very few hours a day or week he can put the proper sales value into his efforts the producing company hiring him is more likely to cash in than if he had insisted in putting in an eight-hour day and losing energy, pep and artistic perception at about 2 p. m.

"It is all right to put the kibosh on unreasonable demands of artistic temperament, but the fact remains that the creative artist is not always in proper mental or physical shape to do his best, and that it is economy to allow him to be the judge of this.

"A fiction writer who persists in turning out stories because he wants the money, ignoring whether or not he is in the proper frame of mind to do his best, is bound to peter out, and even a good salesman will not approach a prospective customer unless he feels himself to be in just the proper frame of mind."

"How about the hundreds of salesmen who travel day and night and turn in detailed reports each night?" I asked.

"Those are largely order takers," answered Billy, "and do not size up with the class who are supposed to turn the really big tricks.

"If a painter could work eight hours per day, turning out portraits at fancy prices; if a novelist could continue to turn out best sellers as rapidly as a correspondent can dictate letters, there would not be enough credit or currency in this country to represent their earnings.

"Every once in a while some one discovers that there is wastage in producing pictures. Some day there will be a howl over the awful wastage in diamond cutting, despite the fact that uncut diamonds have never been popular as jewelry in our best circles.

"The star's country-place, furniture and motor car all furnish news items which interest the general public and thus add to the sales value of his pictures, if the pictures are good. So it's just as well to give the star an opportunity to use and enjoy them. And if the director produces better pictures because he is happy, and if he is happy because his best girl can play in the cast without balling things up, why, for the love of Mike, let him be happy and cash in on it.

"That's the way the old-timers figured, and they made good. Efficiency is a most excellent thing, but what often masquerades as such is something quite different.

"The chances are that both Bill Brady and his stars have sufficient ability, experience and technical skill to accomplish in a few hours that which a dub time-clock puncher would despair of putting over in a week. So why worry that neither can fill in a whole day at it?"

"Yep," I agreed. "I get you. We have a red-headed editor down at our joint who can't write a satisfactory 'Fact and Comment' early in the week.

"He's tried it a dozen times and filed them carefully in the waste basket, but when every other page is on the stone and the make-up man is yelling bloody murder, the printer has sent out for a gun and the circulation manager is drafting a letter to explain to subscribers why the issue was late, he will take his typewriter on his lap and turn out a series of comments that are worth the price of the subscription. So we don't kill him, but just hope that the proper composition frame of mind will strike him earlier next time."

George Baker Promoted by Metro

Successful and Popular Director Has Been Named Manager of Productions on West Coast.

GEORGE D. BAKER, one of Metro's directing staff, and one of the most successful star-directors in the motion picture industry, has been appointed manager of productions of Metro's West Coast studio at Hollywood, Cal., and will leave soon for the Pacific Coast to enter upon his new position. Mr. Baker will occupy a similar position in the western studio to that filled by Maxwell Karger in Metro's New York studio. He will have complete supervision of all the Metro productions made in the West, making decisions upon proposed productions and passing judgment upon the finished product. The success of this plan, evolved at Metro's New York studio, with Mr. Karger in charge, is responsible for the extension of the same arrangement to the West Coast studio, in accordance with the ideas of Richard A. Rowland, Metro's president.

Mr. Baker will leave for California as soon as he has completed the production of "The Shell Game," with Emmy Wehlen as star, upon which he is now engaged. With Mr. Baker will go his assistant director, Charles Hunt, who has been associated with him ever since he began working for Metro. Both men will remove their households to California, Mr. Baker taking his sister, who presides over his house, and Mr. Hunt being accompanied by his family.

In his new affiliation Mr. Baker will work in co-operation with B. A. Rolfe, Metro's western representative; with Joseph W. Engel, Metro's treasurer, who has gone to California for an extended visit, and with the directors already installed there. He intends to give his directors a free hand. "I have always had a free hand myself ever since I came to Metro," says Mr. Baker, "and the results seem to have been satisfactory. I do not believe in demanding for myself privileges I am not willing to extend to others."

Mr. Baker's promotion will be good news to his many friends, but among these in New York it will be mitigated by his removal to the coast. They will wish him the best of luck in any event.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of February 10 at New York's Motion Picture Houses.

THE STRAND—Madge Kennedy, in "Our Little Wife," a Goldwyn photoplay, written by Avery Hopwood, was the leading player at the Strand the week of February 10. "The Horse in Action," projected in colors, and a scenic, "Racmadour and The Valley of Lot," also in colors, were added features. A comedy, an educational and the Strand Review were also shown. Anita Tagel and Karl Formes were the soloists.

THE RIVOLI—"The Unbeliever," an Edison picture, based upon Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews' story, "The Three Things," headed the program at the Rivoli. Big Game Hunting the Arctic," a Drew comedy, and the Animated Pictorial completed the picture list. Gladys Rice and the Rialto Male Quartette from the other Rothapfel theater furnished the musical numbers.

THE RIALTO—Madame Petrova, in "The Light Within," a First National picture, is the star of the Rialto picture program. The Animated Magazine, a comedy and an educational subject were also shown. Mlle. Madeleine D'Espinoy and the Rialto Male Quartette supplied the musical features.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET THEATER—William S. Hart, in "The Bargain," was the picture attraction for the entire week.

BROADWAY—"Tarzan of the Apes."

Looks Like Censorship Repeal in Maryland

Exhibitors of the State Believe Their Case Is Continually Growing in Strength.

THE momentum of the fight which is being waged by the moving picture exhibitors of Maryland through the Maryland Exhibitors' League is gradually increasing, and with every day that goes by it can be seen that the repealing of the drastic censor law, which has encumbered the film industry in that state for the past eighteen months, probably will be accomplished.

At the headquarters of the Maryland Exhibitors' League, 210 West Lexington street, on Wednesday, February 6, another enlightening interview was gained with Jack S. Connolly, the manager of the present campaign to abolish censorship; Frank A. Hornig, president of the league, and L. A. De Hoff, the secretary.

One of the things that Mr. Connolly wished to emphasize was the fact that the present fight which is being made is not against the present members of the censor board, Charles E. Harper and Mrs. Marguerite E. Harrison, personally.

"I am happy to say," said Mr. Connolly, "that both Mr. Harper and Mrs. Harrison are people of the highest grade, and while their intentions have been all right still the system for which they stand is all wrong—and it is the system which we are fighting against and not the censors personally."

It was learned that a story is being circulated through Baltimore and Maryland that the best exhibitors in the city and state really want censorship. Of course this is a foolish statement for anyone to make and still more foolish for anyone to believe. When the hearing of the exhibitors' side of the question takes place at Annapolis in the near future this statement will be answered then and it is understood that some of the eliminations which have been made by the censor board, which were entirely unwarranted, will then be shown.

With regard to the question of the religious bodies of Baltimore and Maryland supporting or opposing the censorship law, it is now stated that six of the most prominent priests of this city are much opposed to the censorship law and in addition to this are not at all satisfied with the way the present members of the board have been conducting the office.

Then when it comes to the educational side of the censorship question there is only one answer. Say, for instance, that an exhibitor wishes to run a special Saturday morning matinee for children which will be composed of six new educational reels. The answer is that he can't do it, for the reason that each reel has to be paid for censoring at $2 each, which would make the total of $12. This means that 240 children would have to be shown the performance before the price of censoring is returned.

It is understood from a reliable source that if the censorship repeal bill passes both the House and the Senate at Annapolis Governor Harrington will sign it. In this connection it is thought probable that the Governor has seen that the exhibitors are fighting for a righteous cause.

A prominent exhibitor stated the other day that when one of his patrons, a woman, witnessed what the Censor Board had left of Triangle's "The Flame of the Yukon," with Dorothy Dalton, she came out and asked if the picture was new, to which he answered that it was, but that the censors had cut out a great deal. "Well, it is a great shame," said the woman, "for when I saw it in Philadelphia, it was certainly a beautiful picture and a very fine one, and the version that you have screened here tonight is terribly mutilated."

Senator Omar D. Crothers, from Cecil county, recently introduced in the Senate at Annapolis a number of economy bills which are intended to reduce the expenses of the state. Among them was one providing that the Board of Motion Picture Censors be reduced to a single censor, instead of three as at present, and by this a saving of $5,000 per year could be saved. It is understood that this measure has not been introduced with the idea of bucking the proposed abolishment of the censor law, for Senator Crothers is on the side of the exhibitors, but that it is part of an economy plan to curtail the expenses of the state.

Quarantines Hit Southern Exhibitors

Four Carolina Cities Have Been Less Fruitful in Soldier Patronage Than Had Been Expected.

SOUTHERN cities blessed with cantonments and training camps which have been the envy of neighboring towns which were slighted with respect to the location of Uncle Sam's military establishments have suffered a severe reversal of attitude since four of the largest cities having camps, Charlotte, N. C.; Greenville, Spartanburg and Columbia, S. C., not only have been quarantined against the camps nearby but have been compelled to close all theaters in these cities for periods ranging from seven days to three weeks on account of prevalent contagious diseases both at the camps and in the cities.

At Charlotte the Mayor forbade the congregating of people in any theater, church or other public building, ordering all theaters in the city of Charlotte to close for two weeks, the order being a result of the reporting of six cases of spinal menengitis in the city of Charlotte, with its 40,000 inhabitants. At Spartanburg, Greenville and Columbia, the various epidemics causing the action occurred at later dates and they will not reopen for some time yet at those places.

Even before the closing of the city theaters, the managers have derived but little benefit from the thousands of soldiers in camps, as quarantines are frequent at the camps.

SANDERS HEADS BROOKLYN EXHIBITORS.

An important and well attended meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn was held at the Cumberland Theater, in that borough, Tuesday, February 5, at which President William Brandt presided for the last time—at least for the present. The annual election of offiers elevated Rudolph Sanders to the presidency of the association; William Hollander was chosen vice president, Mrs. Jennie Reitmeyer second vice president, Walter Lane treasurer, Samuel I. Berman executive secretary, and William Bigall sergeant at arms. The new Board of Directors names William Brandt, Charles Cranides, Morris Goodman, J. Grossman, Louis L. Levine, John Manheimer and Adolph Stockhammer.

Action taken by the meeting concerned the matter of operators' disputes affecting the Marathon, Globe, Universal, Colonial, Willoughby, Imperial, Broadway Lyceum and Wyckoff theaters, which have led to injunction proceedings in court, and there was a committee appointed to wait upon Mayor Hylan to protest against the competition from public schools showing motion pictures for profit.

President Brandt turned over to the case of the incoming president an association of exhibitors well organized and enthusiastic in matters of mutual welfare.

EMERGENCY SHOWS STORED AT LEAGUE ROOMS.

After seeing the conditions as they existed in Dayton, O., and after witnessing the many disappointments when film did not arrive in time for showing, L. C. Pollack, representing Metro, hit upon the idea of having four or five complete shows at the rooms of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League in Dayton, to be used by any house that failes to get a show. This is a better stunt than an emergency show, for not every Dayton theater is equipped in this manner. Although the idea is only a week old, this stunt has proved a success.

Monday Closing for Eastern Canada Houses

By W. M. Gladish

Rule Effective from February 18 to March 25 Inclusive—Order Not Unexpected

ALL theaters in Eastern Canada situated from Fort William, Ontario, to Riviere du Loup, Quebec, were ordered to close every Monday from February 18 to March 25, 1918, inclusive, by an Order-in-Council passed at Ottawa on February 4. All manufacturing plants, office buildings and stores, with certain exceptions, were ordered closed, however, during the three days of February 9, 10, 11, during which period all theaters may be opened in the usual manner.

The closing order was not unexpected by Canadian exhibitors in view of the recent wild rumor throughout Canada to the effect that all theaters would be closed three days of every week and in view of developments in the United States. There is not a general demand for a change of date from Monday to Tuesday to co-ordinate with United States regulations or otherwise, because all factories and stores are not yet being required to close on Monday of each week. According to official information, however, more restrictions for various industries are possible and, in such case, exhibitors promise to ask that other businesses be closed on days other than those upon which theaters will be dark.

The Canadian order does not affect theaters of Manitoba or any other Western Province nor does it include the Maritime Provinces where the coal situation is not severe on account of local supplies of fuel. There is no protest from Central Canadian exhibitors on this account.

Three-Day Closing Threat Stirs Canadians

Dominion Authorities Disavow Intention to Move Against Theaters, But Exhibitors Quickly Organize for Action.

Toronto, Ontario.

WHO started the big rumor that all Canadian theaters were to be closed three days of every week by a prohibitory order of the Federal War Council at Ottawa? The Dominion authorities disclaim any knowledge of any procedure or intended move in that direction, but there are about 903 exhibitors in Canada who verily believe that the Government itself is responsible for the report and that it was purposely spread in order to obtain an expression of opinion from the moving picture men.

If such was the case, then the Federal officials surely got their fill of criticism, views and opinions. They got more than they probably expected. The rumor traveled from one coast to the other in less than twelve hours, and within twenty-four hours the whole Canadian film force had been mobilized as a fighting army for protective purposes. It is estimated that 10,000 telegrams floated into Ottawa and delegations were despatched from Toronto, Montreal, St. John and other places. R. A. Pringle, a prominent Ottawa lawyer, was retained as legal representative of the exhibitors, while Controller Puttee of the Winnipeg Board of Control, who happened to be in the capital, was authorized by his city to take any step to protect the interests of Winnipeg exhibitors. The Winnipeg Board of Control held a meeting and the moving picture men of the same city also held an important conference, at which $300 was raised and a strong resolution was drawn up. R. L. Richardson, representing the constituency of Springfield in the Federal house, was present at the film men's meeting.

Several emergency meetings were held in both Toronto and Montreal. As a result of these conferences, it was soon learned that the rumor did not emanate from moving picture circles in Toronto, as claimed by the Government. Telegrams were were sent from Toronto to all the important centres in the country regarding the closing order were signed by a fictitious committee, and this fact made it appear that interests entirely outside of the moving picture field had started the thing. Rightly or wrongly, N. W. Rowell, president of the Federal War Council, has been blamed for the deed because he has been anxious to discourage city attractions, it is declared, in order to induce labor to go to the farms for more production. Agricultural interests are said to have been behind the rumor, generally speaking.

C. A. Magrath, Dominion Fuel Controller, was openly charged at first with the instigation of the plot, but it was shown that he had been in Washington for some time and he denied all responsibility. In this connection, however, it is interesting to refer to an official announcement from Ottawa which reads: "It can be stated that the Government has under consideration plans for fuel conservation, and it is very possible an order will be passed similar to the Garfield regulations in the United States. This would close cities one day a week." As a result of the recent scare, the moving picture men are now on their guard to secure a reasonable consideration at the hands of the War Cabinet. The film business in Canada today is practically on a solid, organized basis.

The Toronto deputation selected to proceed to Ottawa to interview the Cabinet Ministers was thirty strong and represented the exhibitors, exchange managers, assistant theater managers, operators, electricians, mechanics and musicians. Among those selected were W. Covert, business agent of the Moving Picture Operations' Local 173; Charles O'Donnell and David Carey of the Hippodrome, and Mr. Garrett, representing the musicians. The Montreal deputation was made up of George Nicholas, H. W. Conover, James Clancy and J. H. Aloz, representing the theaters; James Clancy, L. E. Ouimet and George Perkins, representing the exchanges; J. C. Molmari, of the musicians' union, and P. J. Ryan, representing the operators and mechanics.

At the Montreal meeting, which was held in the Windsor Hotel, it was pointed out that not only the theater men would suffer. The amusement war tax in Quebec is practically turned over to hospitals and charitable institutions, and if the theaters were put on a half-time basis the greater part of this revenue would not be forthcoming. It was declared at this conference that Montreal's contribution to the war tax during 1917 had been $375,000.

A unique feature of the situation was that officers of the Great War Veterans' Association took sides with the exhibitors on the ground that the soldiers at the front would feel more contented if they knew that the theaters would continue to remain open, thus affording an honest diversion for their relatives at home. It was also declared that bankers and mortgage companies would also oppose any drastic action on the part of the Government in order to protect their financial interests. If the Government really wanted to know how things would figure out in the closing of the theaters, these and other developments probably opened the eyes of the cabinet ministers.

Out in Winnipeg, Controller Charles F. Gray pointed out at the Board of Control meeting that if the theaters were closed, the next step should be to close all churches. At the exhibitors' meeting in Winnipeg, J. A. Machray, a prominent local lawyer, was retained as legal counsel.

When the information reached Prince Albert, the exhibitors there declared that the fuel situation did not affect them nor should they be required to close on account of coal shortage because their theaters were heated with wood fuel. Two members of Parliament, Dr. T. H. Blow and Mr. T. M. Tweedie, attended the meeting of exhibitors in Calgary, Alberta, after the rumor had reached that city. This meeting took the form of a luncheon in the Board of Trade headquarters and was attended by one hundred exhibitors, operators, musicians and others in the moving picture business in Calgary. The two legislators present declared that they did not think the situation was such that the Government needed to take drastic action with regard to theaters.

Not only did the exhibitors of St. John, N. B., decide to send a large delegation to Ottawa to protest against a closing measure, but at a general conference of local theater managers and employes it was decided to use advertising space in the Ottawa newspapers in order to reach Government officials.

Every theater and every exchange in Vancouver on Jan. 28 received a private wire from Toronto advising that the Dominion Government was about to take action toward closing every theater in Canada three days each week. Immediately a meeting of all the film and theater men was called and steps were taken to have protests wired to the Premier from prominent citizens, business men and public officials. It will be pointed out that if this is an effort to conserve fuel, it will accomplish little in this city, as the weather has been so mild during the past three weeks that the trees and rose bushes are budding and there is little likelihood that there will be any more cold weather in this city during this season. The Vancouver theaters are a negligible factor in the fuel situation, especially at this season.

The following theater and film men have been formed into a committee to deal with the situation from this Province: Messrs. Dewees, Muir, Barr, Pilling, Dippie, Schubert, Gow and Quagliotti, of Vancouver, and Kerr, of New Westminster. As the theaters here only show six days a week now, to confine them to three would be to force them into liquidation in a very short time, as the theaters in this province have not been able to make any profit since 1914 on account of the business conditions. The larger houses run each feature one week and it is hinted that the Government proposes to allow them to open only on alternate days. The recent provincial amusement act caused the admission prices to go to 25 cents and there is no chance to increase prices to meet any new restrictions. The situation is most serious if the Government takes this step.

Would Legalize Sunday Opening in Kentucky

Bill Introduced in Legislature Designed to Make Impossible Sporadic Appeal to Blue Laws.

THE first real step to amend the Kentucky Sunday closing law which has ever been taken is now before the legislature of that state and promises to result in the moving picture theaters being given a clean bill, allowing them to operate without let or hindrance on the Sabbath. For several years it has been possible to close the theaters in any county if the officials saw fit to invoke the use of the old "blue laws," which forbid that any unnecessary work be done on the Sabbath. In several counties judges have held that the law was there, and that it should be upheld, but that the exhibitors could have the law changed.

Just a few days ago the Court of Appeals upheld the decision of the Franklin Circuit Court, in which Judge Stout, in the case of the Capital Theater Co., held that the employes of the theater were not doing a work of necessity or charity, and fined the concern accordingly.

Under this ruling it would have been possible for the church workers of any district to get behind officials and enforce the Sunday closing law, thus shutting even the theaters in Louisville, which have always been permitted to run wide open.

In order that all theaters of the state may be allowed to operate legally on the Sabbath, so far as state laws are concerned, Senator Webster Helm, of Newport, has introduced a bill before the legislature, an amendment to Section 1321, of Chapter 36, Kentucky Statutes, relating to crimes and punishments. In this section is a paragraph in which contains industries, including railroads, are exempted. Senator Helm's bill calls for the adding of the words, "or moving picture shows," after the word railroad, which would place the picture theaters on the preferred list, and stop the wrangle over the old blue law.

Louisville exhibitors claim that if this amendment is not made a part of the law it will be possible for the authorities to close all theaters here or elsewhere in the state, even though prmission be given by local or city authorities to operate on Sunday, as according to Senator Helm, anyone would have the right to invoke the law as construed by the Court of Appeals.

That this amendment stands an excellent chance of passage by the General Assembly is the opinion of the majority of the Kentucky exhibitors.

Bay State League Petitions Exchanges

Asks That No Future Charges Be Made for Films on Fuelless Days.

THE question of exhibitors paying for films on Tuesdays while their theaters are closed by order of National Fuel Administrator Harry A. Garfield was paramount among the matters brought up for discussion by members of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island branches of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America at a meeting held at the league headquarters, 127 Pleasant street, Boston, February 5. In the absence of President Michael J. Lydon, former President Ernest H. Horstmann presided over the session, which was attended by a fair-sized delegation of exhibitors.

By special request Chairman Horstmann took up the question of paying for films on the Tuesday closing days immediately after preliminary business matters were cleared away. A motion was made that a letter embodying a request that distributors of film adjust matters and relieve theaters from paying for films on Tuesdays during the Garfield "holidays" be sent out by the league to every exchange in Boston. The resolution was passed unanimously. The letter, it was stated, would not carry with it a request for reimbursement for former Tuesdays. Several amendments were offered to this resolution, but the original motion was allowed to stand.

A request was made by one of the members for Secretary B. H. Cornell to present a list of all members in arrears on dues.

Frank Brown, former manager of the Allston theater, in Allston, presented an offer to the league to go around and interview personally all members who had failed to pay their dues and attempt to collect the money. A motion was made that the secretary open his list to Mr. Brown and go over the matter with him.

Mr. Horstmann stated that the proposition of manufacturer direct to the exhibitor would not be taken up at this meeting because of the fact that Mr. Lydon was unable to attend the session. He also stated that he was awaiting the return of Nathan H. Gordon from New York City. The next meeting will be held at the league headquarters Tuesday, February 19.

Those attending this meeting were Harry Aiken, Boston; Stanley Sumner, Boston; Mrs. Alice Rice Carroll, Boston; Mrs. Marcella S. Ayer, Frank Brown, Allston; Mr. Hartford, Pawtucket; Charles Mailley, Brighton; Elmer R. Daniels, Lynn; Charles Ross, Boston; B. H. Cornell, Boston; Ernest H. Horstmann, Wakefield; Samuel Moscow, Boston; E. S. Eyster, Boston; Patrick J. Lydon, South Boston; G. W. Hamilton, Dorchester; William Dowling, East Boston; George Ramsdell, Malden; W. B. Sproule, East Boston; Harry I. Wasserman and Jacob Lourie, Boston.

Gerard Lauds Pictures

Former Ambassador to Germany Meets Representatives of Motion Picture Trade Press at Luncheon.

THROUGH the courtesy of Mark Dintenfass and the "My Four Years in Germany" Producing Company, the motion picture trade press representatives had an opportunity to meet the Hon. James W. Gerard, former United States Ambassador to Germany, at a luncheon in the yacht room of the Hotel Astor on Saturday, February 9. At the conclusion of the luncheon Mr. Gerard told the company some of his experiences in Germany, and among other things said it was because of his discovery of the wonderful development of the motion picture during his absence and the hold that it had upon the people of this country that he was induced to consent to the making of a picture from the story told in his book, "My Four Years in Germany."

"I wrote the book for the purpose of acquainting the people of this country with the causes which led to this war and why we were in it," he explained. "I found that they were deeply interested while on my lecture tours in various parts of the country, and I was persuaded that the motion picture would help bring those facts home to our people. I wish to add that Mr. Dintenfass has made some remarkable scenes for this picture and gone to great expense to get the correct settings, for those that I have seen at the studio are wonderfully like those in Germany of which they are counterparts."

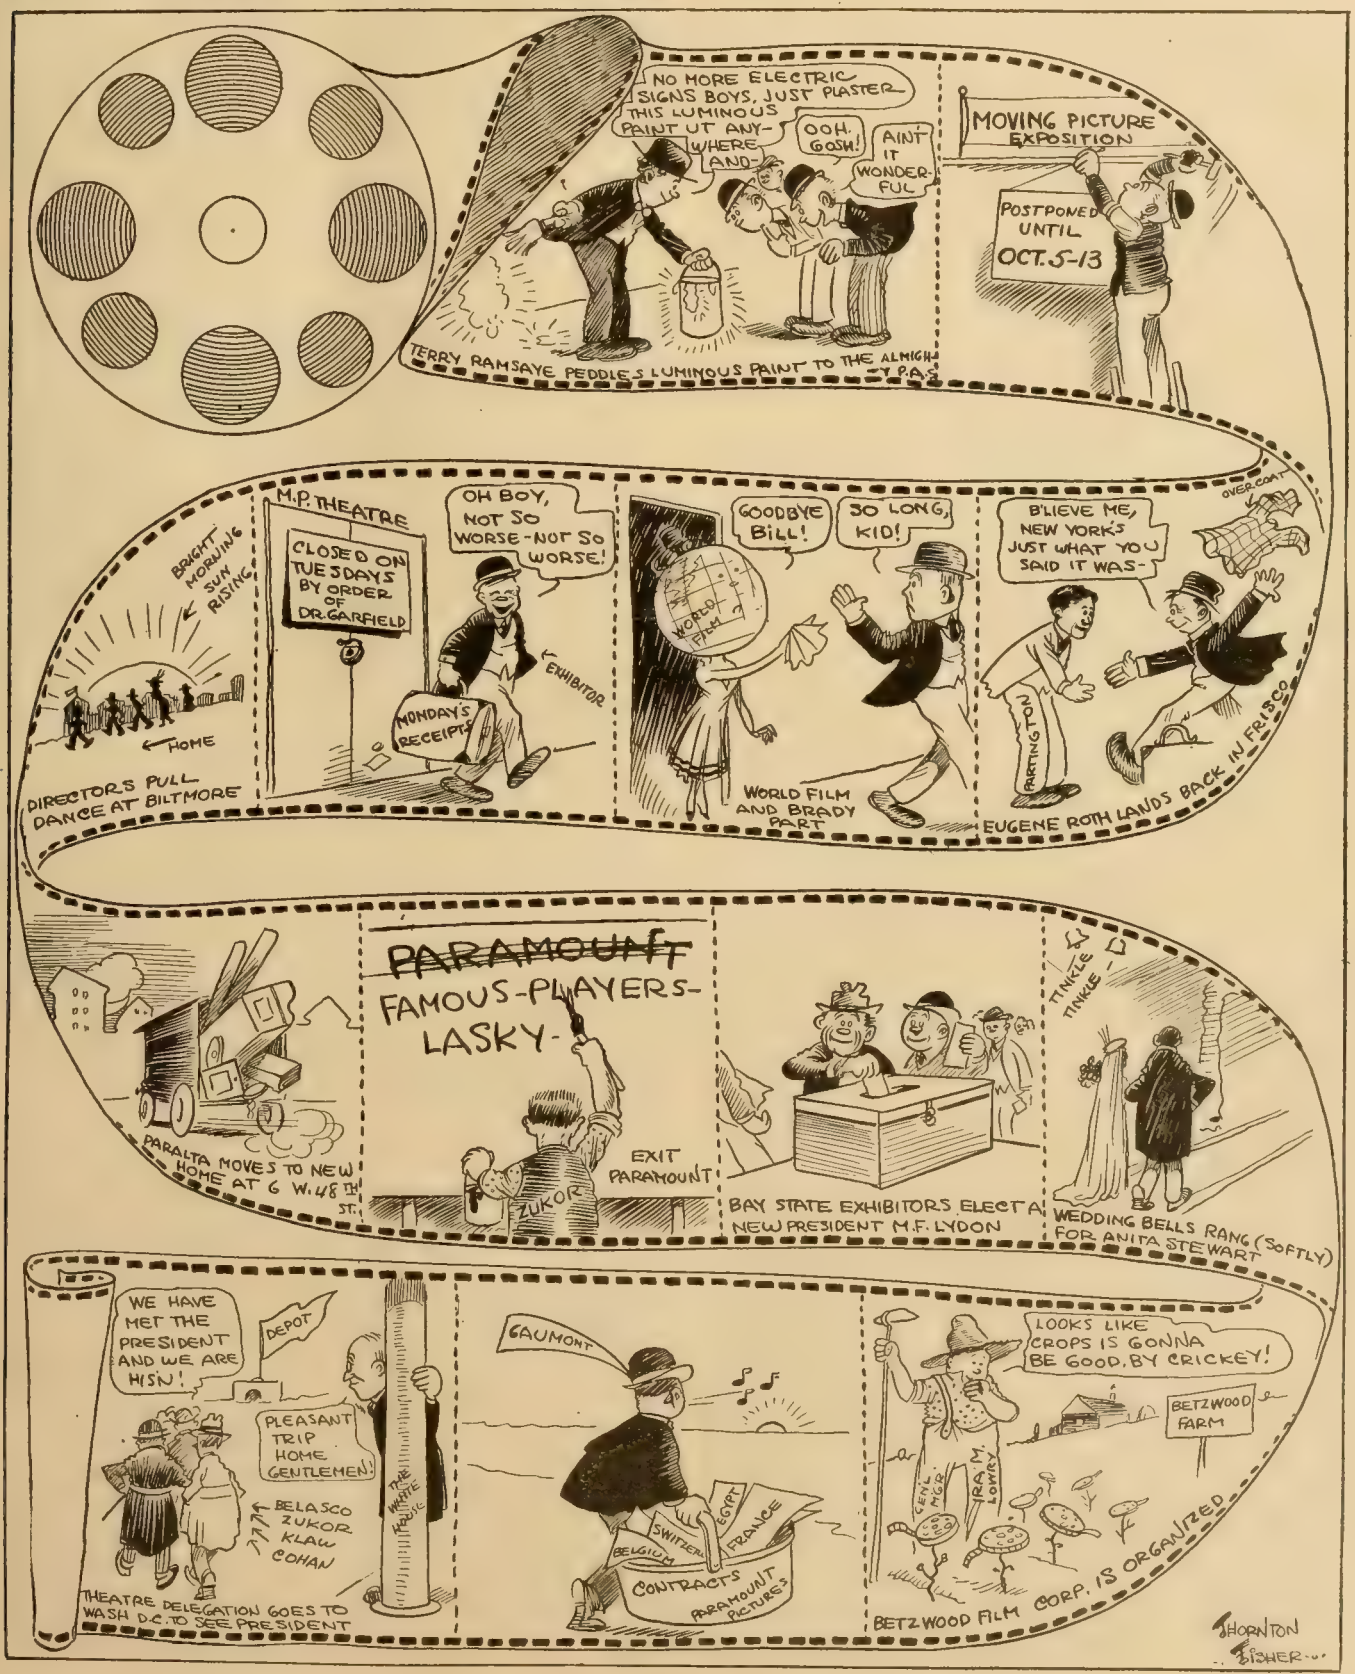
Present at the luncheon to meet Mr. Gerard were Paul Melies, Miss E. J. Chalmers, Miss Mabel Condon, J. F. Chalmers, A. Ortega, Joseph Ruddy, James Beecroft, Sidney Goldsmith, Jack Warner, B. M. Roessler, H. M. Warner, J. S. Edelman, Merle Johnson, J. Dennerberg, C. W. Brennan, Leslie Mason, T. O. Eltonhead, Sam Warner, C. A. Logue and J. L. Hoff.

Mr. Dintenfass also presented each of his guests with a copy of Mr. Gerard's work, which was autographed by the author.

MISSES CONDON AND EARLE ENTERTAIN.

A going-away party was given by Misses Mabel Condon and Edna Earle at their apartments in West Fifty-ninth street, New York, Sunday evening, February 10. Quite a number of friends dropped in to bid the young ladies goodbye during the evening. They will leave for Los Angeles on February 15. Miss Condon will remain there permanently to look after her business interests, while Miss Earle will make an extended visit to the West Coast, probably returning in the fall.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD NEWS REEL For JANUARY



What Kauffman Did with Hoquiam's Liberty

Seattle Exchangemen Look for Similar Things to Happen to Washingtonian's New House

By S. J. Anderson.

JACK KAUFFMAN recently bought the Avenue theater, a neighborhood house in Seattle, Wash., that had been allowed to run down. Exchangemen of the city prophesy that it will be made successful. They base this on his management of the Liberty theater, Hoquiam, in the same State.

Mr. Kauffman had things coming his way so fast in Hoquiam that his competitors offered him a fancy price to get rid of him. Besides looking well to the usual duties of a progressive exhibitor, such as keeping his house clean and new-looking and planning regular advertising, Mr. Kauffman saw to it that no special events in the town were allowed to detract from his business. He always helped in community affairs, but he managed to attract the crowds to his house, no matter what was happening outside.

Last year during the Fourth of July week, the regular date for an annual carnival in Hoquiam, called the "Splash," Mr. Kauffman not only gave the $25 donation that was expected from the theaters to help finance the entertainment, but volunteered a part of his proceeds as well. His friends declared he was foolish, telling him that he might as well close his house during that week anyway. But he did not close, and neither did he lose money.

On the morning of the opening of the "Splash" it was found that an elevated platform extended out in front of the Liberty, and a minstrel show was soon in full progress on it; while out in the street a big wagon served as a stand for a marimba band. The people flocked that way from all directions, and out of the four regular shows that day maximum results were obtained. The house seats 700, and the count that night showed 2,685 admissions paid. If it had not been for the leftovers every one of the possible 2,800 seats would have been counted in the admissions. Then, as soon as the last show was finished the house was cleared for a midnight matinee.

How a Sunday-Closer Was Converted.

A more recent example of Mr. Kauffman's method of turning special events into a "boost" for his business, while helping the work at the time, was shown in the way in which he helped the Red Cross and the Liberty Bond drives in Hoquiam. When one of the Four-Minute Men was due to speak this manager mentioned his name in the daily advertising, and when the orator came upon the stage, the manager accompanied him and introduced him. In order to stimulate the buying of Liberty Bonds Mr. Kauffman asked the mayor of the town, the leading banker, the city attorney, and the leading minister to speak at his theater. Mr. Kauffman himself also delivered a speech. The man who represented the church among the orators, the Rev. F. M. Beard, had never been inside a motion picture theater during the three years that he had been living in Hoquiam. Mr. Kauffman invited him to come around early on the evening that he was to speak and see the show. The minister hesitated, but finally accepted. When his turn came to speak he began by confessing that he had never patronized motion picture shows before, but that he had enjoyed this one and expected to come often thereafter.

Mr. Beard had led the fight for Sunday closing before that night. Since then he has not said a word about it. Mr. Kauffman also states that as a direct result of that evening's program he found that a better class of people patronized his theater than ever before. Before the Liberty Bond drive was finished he started collecting money for the Smoke Fund, and on one night sold $750 worth of Liberty Bonds and collected $55 for the Smoke Fund, so it was proved that Mr. Kauffman was not merely advertising his house, but was really helping the cause.

Lost No Chance for Special Advertising.

"I have never lost a chance for special advertising," said Mr. Kauffman. "Whenever I booked a picture with a foreign or unusual setting I always decorated my house and dressed my ushers so as to be in keeping with the picture, and had some one dressed in fancy costume to go around the downtown streets. For instance, when I put on 'Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea' I had five men dressed in divers' costumes walking around town, and another time when I had a Chinese play I had several Chinamen dressed in native costume to advertise the show. Whenever I pulled any of these stunts I invariably had record houses.

"But I did not depend wholly upon these special occasions. I always spent from $250 to $300 a month on regular advertising. Most of it went in newspaper advertising, but I also got out a house organ. I found it quite a problem at first to get the boys to deliver these. I found the first batch I sent out floating down the river. After that I organized the boys into a regular military organization, with a captain and a lieutenant, holding the officers responsible for the others' work. I never had any more trouble.

Has No Use for Superlatives.

"I constantly experimented in my advertising. Several times when I had a good show I left off advertising just to find out what I really benefited by it. I found that business fell away about 25 per cent. I consider superlative adjectives worse than useless in newspaper advertising. Since I sold the Liberty I have been traveling around through the towns of this immediate territory studying the methods of other small town exhibitors, and incidentally looking over the field for a good buy. I found so many of these men always employing the same form of exaggerated word advertising. My experimenting brought me to the conclusion that a short review of the story is the best form of newspaper advertising, with a personal note added from the manager, when the picture is good enough to warrant it. When the people have confidence in the manager's word his recommendation is by far the most effective thing that can be put in the advertising space."

Mr. Kauffman has begun on the Avenue by painting and cleaning up and declares that he is not going to let the people generally know the house is under new management until it is in good running order.

O'BRIEN TO DIRECT FOR DE LUXE.

"The Street of Seven Stars," the first picture to be produced with Doris Kenyon at the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., will be directed by John B. (Jack) O'Brien. Mr. O'Brien has signed a contract to direct this story, which is a Mary Roberts Rinehart. He expects to start work on the feature, which will be of six reels, about March 10.

Theodore C. Dietrich, president of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., selected Mr. O'Brien as Miss Kenyon's director from a long list. He was chosen because of his success in handling women stars and his acknowledged ability to produce artistic and true-to-life photoplays.

Mr. O'Brien directed a number of the Pickford subjects, including "Hulda from Holland" and "The Foundling." He has also directed Blanche Sweet, Lillian Gish, Dorothy Gish, Alice Brady, Charlotte Walker, Emmy Wehlen, Bessie Love, Louise Huff, Olive Tell and Edna Goodrich.

BERNARD THORNTON IN PICTURES.

Bernard Thornton has registered such an emphatic success in pictures that he has decided to abandon the speaking stage and remain in the silent drama. His work opposite June Caprice in "The Heart of Romance" has been favorably commented upon. Previously Thornton did excellent work opposite Madge Kennedy and Mabel Normand for Goldwyn. He is still remembered on Broadway for his characterization of the leading male role in "Kitty Mackay" at the Comedy theater and "It Pays to Advertise" at the Cohan theater.

MARY PICKFORD, AUTOBIOGRAPHER.

For some months Mary Pickford has been quietly engaged in writing the history of her own career. Her story will go to the world probably in serial form when completed, which may not be for several months, and will then be printed in book form. Arrangements are being made to have the work translated into all foreign languages, for Miss Pickford's popuarity is by no means limited to this or English speaking lands.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

BEST picture seen since last letter is "The Guilty Man," from the lamented Charles Klein stage play, and given us by Paramount, to say nothing of its supervision by Thomas H. Ince, splendidly directed by Irvin D. Willat. I saw it at the run-off. It is more than worth while, having a big story well told and acted without a flaw. The cast, with the exception of William Garwood, was not familiar—to me at least—but rarely do we get such a perfectly balanced company. The court scenes were refreshingly new, depicting those in France, and oh, the great lesson of this picture and the renunciation of the guilty man!

* * *

From there I went over to see "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds," one of the best World pictures seen in a long time and done perfectly as to costuming and details. Better still, it tells as no written words can the story of Aaron Burr and Alexander Hamilton, covering quite a period leading up to the famous duel. Arthur Ashley was well cast as Burr and Carlyle Blackwell did the best he could with Hamilton. Best make-up was that of Lionel Belmore as General Israel Putnam. June Elvidge was just the one to play the title role and George MacQuarrie again played the role of Washington with Rose Tapley (who was specially engaged) played Mrs. Washington. Here we get the Palisades and other scenes worthy of admiration. Costume plays are always safe to use, to say nothing of their depicting pages in American history.

"Mrs. Dane's Defense" went strong here and gave Pauline Frederick opportunities to show her art. This is the play which closed the Boston Museum June 1, 1903, with Margaret Anglin, who created the part. My neighbor nudged me at one stage of the picture and said "Queer, that baby has not grown any in all this time!" Frank Losee shared the honors, and it was good to see Amelia Summerville—she of "Merry Mountain Maid" fame and once a "heavy."

* * *

Last night (Sunday) I saw one of the real classics of the screen, a veritable gem witnessed by a large audience in absolute silence. The picture was not a new one, but seen here for the first time in that theater—the Exeter—"The Vicar of Wakefield," which all New York lovers of the screen saw at the Rialto when first issued. Here we have the masterpiece of Oliver Goldsmith immortalized for posterity and neither the book or play, even as presented by Irving and Terry, can hold the attention as does this visualized picture, every detail correct and done so reverently by such an artist as Frederick Warde ably supported. Space forbids adding to the tributes already paid in these columns, but let me urge all exhibitors to give their public this treat, good for repeats generations hence. It is directed by the young son of the star, Ernest Warde. Nothing finer has been seen in a long time than the work of the company entire.

* * *

I went over to the Castle Square to see Henry B. Walthall in "His Robe of Honor," and it was a treat indeed again to see this actor. It was a first showing, so the house was crowded, for the following of the star is large. It is a big picture, but might be cut here and there—certainly some of the titles. It is a play of regeneration and has its good lessons. I liked the part disclosing the "fixing" of the jury and rehearsal on browbeating of witnesses—great expose of what goes on under cover, maybe. Walthall is still the master of expression even in his finger tips, but the close-ups were not good. Mary Charleson was excellent.

* * *

So Blanche Bates has capitulated. Good, for we feel that she has just the camera face and will make good. It is a wonder "hubby" George Creel, doing his bit in Washington for the Government, consented to her departure—not from home but from the stage, which she has adorned for so many seasons.

* * *

Rose Tapley made quite a hit here wherever she appeared and talked of the pictures, for she has a pleasing personality and knows her subject well. On quite insufficient notice the Film Club gave her a reception and invited several to meet and hear her, but unfortunately it was a matinee (extra) day at all the theaters, which prevented the stage and screen stars in town from attending. Leon Gordon of the Jewett players and his charming wife, Doris Sawyer, looked in for awhile in time to hear the guest of honor extoll the screen and urge support of all clean pictures and to treat with silence the other kind which should not be advertised. Among players in town this week who have been seen on the screen in addition to those already mentioned in my last letter are Charles Cherry, Lumsden Hare, Elsie Janis (doing an act at Keith's), Donald Brian, Raymond Hitchcock, Maxine Elliott, William Faversham, Macklyn Arbuckle and Irene Fenwick.

* * *

So Stuart Holmes has forsaken Fox for Select company. Anyhow I saw him in "Ghosts of Yesterday," with Norma Talmadge, who played double. Fine picture, directed by Charles Miller, of whom we expect much. "What a dandy lover that fellow O'Brien is," said the sweet young fan in front; "he does know how to hold tight."

* * *

Earl Derr Biggers, former Boston boy, gave us a good story for the scenario worker in "The Blind Adventure" for Edward Earle, as he did in "Seven Keys to Baldpate" for Georgie Cohan. His play, "Inside the Lines," is on for a run at the Copley theatre. Burton Holmes took us out to Australia recently and showed the home of Mme. Nellie Melba and its owner near Melbourne for which she was named. Some folks liked "Sylvia of the Secret Service," which was put on at the Fenway. There was a good feature along fashion plate lines in placing Mrs. Castle on a platform and showing different colors—quite in the Pathe line.

* * *

"Rose of the World" is some picture, and Elsie Ferguson hard to beat in such a role, as she is mistress of emotion and reserve force. Wyndham Standing, who will never be forgotten in "The Bugle Call" with "Buster" Collier, made an excellent hero, and will you ever forget the scene, unnoticed by the critics, where he climbs the pole to replace the colors? Was glad to hear some applause right there. That evening we had "The Fair Barbarian," splendid comedy, Vivian Martin doing a big bit. Animals figure here ludicrously, and the picture amuses young as well as adults. Another delightful one is "The Cricket," a kid play with tiny Zoe Ray, safe to book any time and place. A pathetic yet beautiful character was the mother, done by Gretchen Lederer, one of the real beauties of the screen.

* * *

What a clever comedy "The Fibbers" is, wholesome even if it does feature "white lies"! Bryant Washburn and Virginia Valli are ever dependable. The dope fiend was well portrayed by Mark Elliston and the twist at the end gave it an O. Henry flavor.

* * *

No, it was not Lionel, but John Barrymore, whom I saw in "Raffles."

* * *

"The Heart of a Lion" is a splendid Farnum picture and a credit to Fox. Mr. Soriero puts these pictures on at the Park which is doing S. R. O. business all the time because he gets the pulse of his patrons and in addition gives us a fine orchestra led by William Krauth. He gave us Effie Shannon's first picture, "Her Boy," an intensely interesting offering, timely and admirably done, Niles Welch playing the son, who certainly had his mental troubles over his misguided mother's selfishness. We congratulate Metro on doing such a good piece of work for the star, who was last seen here in Pollyanna with her late husband, Herbert Kelcey.

* * *

"Jules of the Strongheart," a typical Beban picture, went well, but we all felt that the torture scene was too long drawn out and seemingly horrible. Queer they always plant a rescue in time and this was rather sudden! The child interest was keen and a feature in itself.

* * *

"The World for Sale," as expected at the hands of J. Stuart Blackton, was a delight, and we were glad to see so many scenes on his estate at Oyster Bay—a fine dramatization of the Gilbert Parker novel. It was a good choice in selecting Herbert Wicki and his son to play father and child, as they resemble each other startlingly.

* * *

I notice Pell Trenton, that virile young actor once with Fannie Ward, is cast in Clara Young's "The House of Glass."

* * *

Maude Eburne ought to be a scream on the screen, as she was in the stage version of "A Pair of Sixes," which Essanay has in store for us.

British Notes

By J. B. Sutcliffe.

THE principal finding of the Kinema Commission, which, it will be remembered, sat in London some short while ago under the presidency of the Bishop of Birmingham, and held numerous inquiries into certain charges being leveled against the moving picture at the time, is one in favor of state censorship of films. The commission, held under the auspices of the National Council of Public Morals, has published a complete report of the evidence taken, together with its verdicts and recommendations. Nationally, most of the observations deal with the wordless play as an influence upon moral tendencies, and without considering for a moment its status as an entertainment, it has emerged from its searching ordeal untarnished. Before the inquiry began the trade pledged itself to stand by its decisions whatever they were. Even on state censorship there would be little likelihood of serious disagreement provided such censorship be final and absolute.

Three months' operation of the increased entertainment tax upon the receipts of theaters and moving picture exhibitions in the country has, I regret to say, in many cases confirmed original fears. No exact or reliable figures are yet available, but there is no doubt that the new and harsh impost is directly responsible for the closing down of a comparatively large number of theaters, drama and photoplay. With the stage theaters it is the worst. The higher admission charges and the consequent higher amount of tax to be paid has diverted many patrons through the cheaper portals of the picture theaters. Of this the president of the Theaters' Alliance (Mr. J. Mulholland) is pessimistic. "Of the 7,000 theaters in the United Kingdom," he says, "not less than two-thirds must inevitably go under if there is no relief from the ruinous tax. A few of the strong trusts and combines will survive, and when disaster to the majority has proved the correctness of the representations that have been made to the Government the tax will be remitted, reprieve will follow execution. But then the trusts will have secured a monopoly and laid the foundations of great fortunes on the ruins of individual enterprise."

Ernest Reed, who presides over the destinies of Wm. Fox's enterprises in Europe generally, has returned to London after his recent flying visit to New York, and Mr. Engholm, who accompanied him, has brought a few souvenirs in the form of advertising stunts.

* * *

Roscoe C. Spurin, formerly publicity manager for Raffels, and latterly in business as an exchangeman on his own account, has been appointed manager of a new producing unit named Wonder Plays, Ltd. The first production is a patriotic picture entitled "Heroes of the Sea," episodes in the work of the navy, and is to be exhibited for the financial benefit of the Kings fund for sailors.

* * *

The committee of the London branch of the Kinematograph Exhibitors' Association opine that four reels is ample length for any film. At a recent meeting the possibility of standardizing the length of ordinary feature productions (excluding, of course, super-films) was discussed, firstly as a means of obviating any likelihood of eye-strain, secondly to maintain as varied a program as possible within the limited footage of film shown at each performance and thirdly, and most important from the point of view of the exhibitor, to facilitate the balancing of the program to suit the different performances of the house.

Hall Caine, author of "The Manxman," "The Christian" and other world-wide classics of fiction, will shortly take up an appointment with our Committee of National War Aims in charge of the moving picture propaganda department. Several film productions for the special purpose of bringing home to the public by vivid illustration the objects and issues at stake in the great struggle are almost ready for distribution and Mr. Caine, at the express invitation of Lloyd George, has laid aside other important work to enable him to place his services at the disposal of the committee.

The graphic multi-reel picturization of Jules Verne's submarine romance, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," from the studios of Universal, is still attracting large crowds to the Philharmonic Hall. The run of this picture promises to extend well into next year and its success as a booking number in the provinces is doubly assured. "I have booked it as a war tonic for the public," said one exhibitor who came over 300 miles to see it. "If you want to get the go-by, screen a war subject," he added laconically.

Another departure in war topicals is promised from the house of Pathe. Regardless of this company's comprehensive "Animated History of the War," a serial-topical in every sense of the term, exhibitors are promised a new series bearing the title, "With Our French Ally," each complete in itself. The first six, which are sure to be placed on the American market, are: "Men, Supplies and Transport," "Behind the Lines," "In Action," "Aviation," "American Units in France," and "The King of Italy on the French Front." For number four in the order mentioned the claim is made that it contains the only genuine aerial battle picture taken during the war. The scene is certainly a gripping one where the Hun raider is "winged" and hurled nose-down to destruction.

* * *

A new order has been made by the French Government prohibiting imports of certain goods, including moving picture films, from this country to France and Algiers except by special license. Ordinarily this is being issued to London exchanges and manufacturers, but they are required to sign a declaration that the films or materials are of British manufacture. Under these conditions positives printed in England from negatives shipped from the United States are defined as being of British manufacture.

Macgowan Now Aid to Tucker

Former Goldwyn Publicity Man Is Promoted to Be Editor of Production.

THE high favor with which George Loane Tucker is regarded by Goldwyn finds additional confirmation in the appointment of Kenneth Macgowan as his aid. Until recently director of Goldwyn publicity, Mr. Macgowan brings to his new work all the energy and enthusiasm which have kept the name of Goldwyn constantly before the public. As editor of production he will make his headquarters at the Goldwyn Studios in Fort Lee.

Kenneth Macgowan's promotion is no surprise to those who have followed his work while with Goldwyn, nor is his present important post a surprise to observers of his activities since he won his Harvard degree. As special dramatic writer on the Boston Transcript his scholarly reviews were followed with keen appreciation by the critical readers of that newspaper. Then he was offered by the Philadelphia Evening Ledger a still more important desk as editor of music, drama and photoplay.

His department did much toward establishing the new paper, and articles contributed by Mr. Macgowan to The New Republic, The Outlook, Current Opinion and The Seven Arts introduced him to a still more critical public, including Joseph Urban, who persuaded him to assume management of the Urban-Ordynski enterprise at the Bandbox theater. In New York Mr. Macgowan's work came under Goldwyn's observation and when the Bandbox season came to an end the Macgowan influence in Goldwyn publicity began.

NEW BUILDING FOR WESTERN VITAGRAPH.

The second of the new concrete buildings to be built at the entrance to the Vitagraph Western studios, in Hollywood, has been completed and is to be used for the scenario department and consultation rooms for the Big. V. Comedies being produced at that studio. James Davis and Larry Karnan, both directors and writers, have been added to the Vitagraph forces and will co-operate with Larry Semon and J. A. Howe, directors of the comedies. Other writers will be added to this department.

Earle Williams and other stars are soon to arrive at the Hollywood studios to work during the winter months.

AIR RAIDERS COULDN'T STOP ESSANAY MEN.

A letter from Essanay's London booking agents tells a somewhat thrilling incident of a recent air raid. Though many business offices in the vicinity of the booking agents had abandoned business for the time being as a measure of caution, the Essanay representatives stuck to their job until all of the exhibitors were served with films.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and MARGARET I. MACDONALD

The Mingo School Success

An Appreciation of the Method of Bringing the Pictures to the People Practiced by B. A. Aughinbaugh.

By the Rev. W. H. Jackson.

IT is with great pleasure that the Moving Picture Educator calls the attention of its readers to the article published in a recent issue of the Moving Picture World (Page 810), written by B. A. Aughinbaugh, principal of the Mingo Centralized Schools, Mingo, Champaign county, Ohio. From this article it will be seen that greatly to his credit

Centralized Schools Building, Mingo, Ohio.

Mr. Aughinbaugh has succeeded in doing for his community that great good which alone can be done by the moving pictures and for which the Educator is all the time striving to have accomplished everywhere.

We congratulate Mr. Aughinbaugh upon having made the "Mingo Pictures" a Mecca for those people who "come from long distances."

Herewith we publish pictures of the exterior and interior of the Mingo school buildings, showing them to be of the average kind, hoping thereby to encourage other schools in any attempt in which they may be led to adopt similar methods to "make good" with the attractive and educational value of moving pictures.

There are many points in the Mingo experiences which should be emphasized. It would seem that the failure of a picture house gave the opportunity for the beginning of this school enterprise; it would seem also that a proper handling of the occasion was exactly what this school principal was fitted for, or at any rate, to what he properly adapted himself successfully. Good projection was one of his first cares, then pictures of a standard type were used which secured the appreciation of a discriminating rural audience; the maintaining of this standard is a purpose of the management.

While we note that good pictures have been shown, we look for further reports from this movement as to the effect of educational pictures, if so used, for the benefit of the students of the schools of the community. Further, to their entertaining and instructive value, it is most interesting to note that the price of real estate is increasing in that neighborhood; surely, this is a practical tribute of importance which increases our interest and calls for our best wishes. We hope to hear more of this enterprise at no distant date, and shall also be pleased to know of other schools or centers having any similiar experience.

Educationals in New York Theaters

Programs at Rialto, Rivoli and Strand Contain Much Interesting Material of Informational Character.

THE Rialto, the week of January 27th, projected a couple of scenic subjects from the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, following the overture. These were "Mount Hood" and "The Garden Spot of the World," shown as "A" and "B" numbers. The former consisted of some remarkably beautiful scenes in the vicinity of Mount Hood, among which was a distant view of the "Three Sisters," showing the difference between that photographed by the ordinary camera and one photographed by means of the telephoto lens. The latter subject exploited the scenic beauties of Sweden. The Rialto Magazine included some tremendously interesting scenes photographed with our boys in France, as well as other scenes from the seat of war, and was followed by an inspiring rendition by Mary Lawton of a poem symbolic of the spirit of France at Verdun. During the recital of this poem the screen, under a red light, bore a veiled inscription which read "Thou Shalt Not Pass"—the opening words of the declamation—and on either side of the stage, settings vividly portrayed the smoke of battle and the flash of guns, which finally dissolved into the Spirit of France riding forth victorious.

At the Strand a Pathe natural color release showing scenes in Belgium before the war was pleasing as a scenic number. And in the Strand Magazine were glimpses of Pershing's boys in France, taken from the U. S. Official War Films, "With the Stars and Stripes 'Over There.'" Here we saw them receiving their last instructions on a vast battlefield, and also going through the various exercises necessary to the character of warfare being practiced in the present conflict. The magazine also contained scenes at Camp Kearney, Cal., spectacular views of the recent fire at Port Newark, and scenes in Italy, showing the Allies on their way to reinforce the Italian troops. The building of wooden ships and the boys at Camp Upton receiving lessons in jiu jitsu from a Japanese instructor formed interesting features. There were also close-up life studies of prominent men, including Senators Stone and Chamberlain, Theodore Roosevelt, Secretary Baker and Premier Clemenceau.
